Strange, But Useful, Critters

The New Student.

He's a rather strange critter. He has to come to town a week before most folks, and spends a good deal of his time enduring a thoroughly planned, well-executed program of mass confusion called "orientation."

His parents are sitting back home, watching the mailbox for the letter that won't come for a while. They are fretting that during this time he is being introduced to a number of dangerous and distasteful things — communist philosophy, sex orgies and disrespect for elders.

Actually the New Student is running a seven-day gamut of placement tests, Honor System quizzes, physical examinations and enough lectures to weaken the eardrums.

If he looks even half-way interested he is besieged by the campus politicians. Rather than communism, they indoctrinate the New Student with the virtues and accomplishments of their own campus party.

For a small fee the New Student may become a part of these wondrous organizations which promise solutions to all — or at least, most — problems.

Despite all the help, nearly everybody survives orientation with relatively little pain. Work and planning by upperclassmen, who have traveled the road before, make it that way.

But counselors can go just so far. They can acquaint the New Student with his surroundings and tell him about campus history and geography, but there is a highly personal situation to be faced during these first days which no amount of "orienting" can resolve.

Few escape it. Some encounter it earlier than others. But one day the New Student will probably feel depressingly overwhelmed by his environment here. This little piece of the world, Chapel Hill, will seem to be a big dark pond—seen through the eyes of a tadpole.

Hopefully, the New Student will do a bit of healthy soul searching and decide for himself just what his goals are. He must not be hesitant and frightened to set the goals high merely because there are more than 12,000 other people here, many of whom may possess superior intellect and ability.

It is entirely possible that some folks don't mind being lost tadpoles, but the University's contribution to them will reflect their contribution to it.

This is a request and an assurance for the New Student, and any old student who somehow hasn't comitted himself to anything yet.

We request that you do more than go to class and do your academic work. The money spent on your schooling will be a diminished investment if you don't. Wholehearted devotion to developing every aspect of your potential as a member of the University community will pay priceless dividends.

We assure you that your chance of accomplishing what you set out to do depends mostly on your determination or lack of it. If you are among those who think you should stand back simply because you are new, we urge you to erase any feelings that things here are just a little too awesome and grand.

Organizations are made of individuals, and new individuals are the lifeblood of their continuation.

So, the New Student is a strange critter. He is usually misunderstood and sometimes subject to overprotection or else complete lack of consideration. But, oddly enough, he usually makes it. We would like to see no exceptions.

Homegrown Job Corps

Good news from Los Angeles. Unemployment is down in the Watts area, scene of five days of riots last month. The people there deserve most of the credit for finding ways to increase employment themselves—sort of a homegrown job corps.

They took the place apart. Now Negro workers are being hired at $1.35 an hour to rebuild it.

As anti-poverty programs go, it was fairly expensive — $45 million dollars and 36 lives.

Speaker Ban

Hearings End On Quiet Note

By ERNEST ROBL
DTH Staff Writer

The first impression of last week's speaker ban hearings in Raleigh was that one had seen it all before — the glaring television Klieg lights, the camera crews, the newsmen, the members of the speaker ban study commission — at first it seemed as if one were sitting through a rerun.

But only for a moment. Because then one realized a subtle yet startling reversal of roles. Some of the members of the audience and some of the actors had exchanged places.

The Legionnaires who had fired their burning accusations against the University now sat quietly in the back rows of the auditorium of the Legislative Building. One of the most outspoken sat quite still through the entirity of Wednesday and Thursday's hearings. He looked straight ahead, in the direction of the panel members and the testifying witnesses, but the expression on his face never changed. It was almost one of bored indifference.

And in the meantime, the educators who had sat through charges with grim faces now countered the charges one by one: the quotation taken out of context, the misleading statement, the inaccurate remark. One by one they took these statements, examined them and then discarded them.

It was not that only educators opposing the gag law spoke during last week's sessions — a number of prominent supporters of the speaker ban also spoke. But this time the educators were the stars; the others only held the supporting roles, just as, during the August hearings, the supporters of the law had dominated the stage, with the opponents playing the background roles.

Perhaps the element most lacking during the past week's sessions which was found in the August hearings was an almost electrical tension in the air. More than once during the August hearings the audience roared approval of a speaker's words or gasped with shock and indignation. The most it managed during last week's hearings were a few good natured laughs.

It was not that there was any lack of eloquence. Both sides in the controversy had spoken eloquently. But the audience had quickly tired of too much eloquence.

The fact that there was no simple and dramatic conclusion, such as the detection of a culprit and his exposure — as is the usual end of many a television drama — but rather an inconclusive statement about the uncertainty of the future actions of the study commission, provided even more of an anti-climax.

By the time the closing minutes of Thursday's last session had arrived, most of the audience had dwindled away.

"So Where's The Men's Room, Already?!"

By ART BUCHWALD

NEW YORK — The biggest problem the World's Fair faces now is how to get rid of all the buildings that must disappear once the Fair is over. Many people went bankrupt during the Fair and do not have the funds to tear down the buildings. Some exhibitors have offered the buildings free to anyone who would cart them away. But there have been few takers.

Therefore, drastic measures have to be taken to tear down the Fair.

It has been rumored that Robert Moses has been dickering with the U. S. Air Force to offer them the Fair as a target practice area for B-52 bombers. The Air Force is said to have turned him down on the grounds that the B-52's don't need target practice areas anymore since they have the real thing in Viet Nam.

Then it was suggested by someone else that the Fair borrow three Viet Cong soldiers and fly them to Flushing. Each day the Viet Cong soldiers would be placed in a different building and their whereabouts would be reported to the Pentagon. The Pentagon would have to order a bombing raid on the particular building.

Since the Viet Cong never get killed in any bombing raids, the three soldiers could be moved from building to building until the Air Force destroyed the entire Fair.

The real problem is how to get the Viet Cong to come to the Fair. Mr. Moses refuses to reduce the prices of admission even after the Fair is over, and very few Viet Cong soldiers want to pay $2.50 to get in.

But if something can be worked out to get the Viet Cong in, the Air Force indicated they might cooperate.

Another suggestion along the same lines was that as soon as the Viet Cong got into a building the U. S. Marines and U. S. Army paratroopers would be notified and they would be landed by helicopter and burn the place down. This would be more expensive, but it hasn't been ruled out.

A third suggestion, particularly where the foreign pavilions are concerned, is to invite various students from overseas to visit the Fair on the last day. The Egyptian students would be taken to the American - Israeli pavilion and they would, of course start stoning it. The Israeli students would be taken to the Egyptian pavilion where they could sack it. The South Korean students could be counted on to destroy the Japanese pavilion and the Malaysian youths would most certainly want to take a crack at the Indonesian exhibit.

Once all the foreign buildings had been knocked down, the students would be taken to a giant anti - American rally in front of the United States Federal pavilion, the largest building at the Fair, and after several fiery speeches by leading student agitators, a CIA man in disguise would shout, "Let's wreck the joint!"

While these ideas all present a certain amount of technical difficulty, a simple solution to the destruction of the Fair has been suggested by a New York banker.

"The day after the financial report on the World's Fair is released," he said, "they should let anyone who has invested in World's Fair bonds on the property and give them each an axe.

"The Fair will be down by nightfall."

A View From The Hill

By ARMISTEAD MAUPIN JR.

He is a creature of reason and good will. He is a lecturer with impeccable precision and a dramatist with inimitable style. He is a dedicated savant whose sanctity of intellect is second only to the sanctity of his syllabus. He will not let you cut.

Directly below is a "discussion" question that he might offer you on a quiz. It is accompanied, for the edification of the Freshmen and the nostalgia of the upperclassmen, by three time-tested techniques for answering it.

TYPICAL QUESTION: "Employing your knowledge of Augustinian and Hegelian philosophy, discuss thoroughly the political, sociological, and ethical ramifications of the crossbow in 12th Century Teutonic principalities. Be specific."

TECHNIQUE 1 IF YOU HAVE STAYED UP FOR 37 CONSECUTIVE HOURS STUDYING THE WRONG MATERIAL, YOUR ANSWER SHOULD LOOK SOMETHING LIKE THIS:

"The political, sociological, and ethical ramifications of the crossbow were, indeed, great. Indeed, these instruments were very popular during the period which fell between the end of the eleventh century and the beginning of the thirteenth century. These instruments were used by many principalities, particularly the Teutonic ones. Some of these principalities were simple, unspoiled, pastoral places, with very few cities. During the early part of the 19th Century, the Romantic Artists painted many pictures of simple, unspoiled pastoral scenes. The most famous Romantic Artists were . . ."

TECHNIQUE 2 — IF YOUR POFESSOR WROTE THE TEXTBOOK, YOUR ANSWER SHOULD READ LIKE THIS:

"There have been many scholarly attempts to explain the ramifications of the crossbow in 12th Century Teutonic principalities. For my discussion, I shall rely heavily upon The Truth About Teutonic Weaponry by Dr. Millard S. Farquar, AB, MA, PhD, DVM (Recipient of the Leoard Entwistle Medallion for Meritorious Teaching). In my opinion, no other book in the field is so stimulating and informative. Likewise, no other book in the field has drawn such high commendation from "The Quarterly Journal of the Southeastern Association of Primitive Germanic Behavioralists." The "Journal" was lavish in its praise (". . . promising . . . significant"). This alone is ample proof of . . ."

TECHNIQUE 3 — IF ALL ELSE FAILS, TRY THIS. IT'S DRASTIC, BUT PRACTICALLY FOOLPROOF:

"Dear Professor Farquar,

In asking for a make-up quiz, I am pursuing the only course that my social and ethnic consciousness will permit. I have always believed that equal rights and freedom now should take precedence over the study of petty bourgeois instruments of Imperialist warfare. For this reason, I have spent the past three weeks at the CORE headquarters in Bogalusa, Louisiana, in an effort to expand my awareness of the principles of non-violece and . . ."

Braden Claims DTH 'Omission'

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I have just got around to reading your May 10 report on my talk there two days before. There is a serious omission which makes it appear that I said:

"You've got to take away the rights of the people for the protection of the state."

What I said was that this is the philosophy of Hitler, Mussolini, and other fascists. My philosophy is directly opposed to this.

Please print this letter as a correction. Thank you.

Carl Braden,
Information Director,
Southern Conference
Educational Fund

Editor's Note: Carl Braden spoke off-campus last spring after a speaker ban controversy in which UNC officals refused to let him speak in any University buildings. When Braden spoke in the Episcopal Chapel of the Cross, he denounced the House Un-American Activities Committee, the Speaker Ban Law, the North Carolina state legislature, the Ku Klux Klan and University officials

Spring Comes To Chapel Hill In The Autumn

By HUGH STEVENS

Chapel Hill — the lovely fower which dies on the first day following the adjournment of summer school each year only to spring back into full bloom three weeks later — is in the throes of its annual rebirth.

It is an exciting time.

Two weeks ago the town was a graveyard with streetlights. The yearly multitude of St. Mary's transients had fled homeward to hit the debutante circuit after spending two hectic summer sessions pursuing knowledge for an hour and a half a day (in such stimulating sections as Sociology 51) and boys twenty-two and a half. When they left, they took the heartbeat of the town — student money — with them, and the city fathers dutifully closed up and went fishing.

But now the village is throbbing again. The restaurants are serving once more (some with higher prices), so that one is no longer forced to drive to Durham three times a day to avoid eating at a local establishment known only for the underdone status of its hamburgers. The traditional haberdasheries are pushing winter garb even in this heat because the student wallets are full. And every little old lady on Rosemary Street is papering her attic to receive the first guy striken by an attack of vertigo on the tenth floor of Morrison.

Along Franklin Street ecstatic, giggling female transfers peruse the dress racks in a frantic search for the "little black dress" so essential to sorority rush. Meanwhile, fraternity men back early "to do a little work on the house" pursue the transfers.

At Jeff's pensive freshmen in bermuda shorts queue up to review the month's supply of periodical erotica, distinguishable from the supply which we saw on our first visit there five years ago only because the dates and volume numbers on the slick covers have changed. (Playboy still occupies the same place on the shelf as in 1961.)

Also, on Franklin, a few returning motorists fail to notice that the street has been rezoned (it now handles traffic) and receive parking tickets for blocking the inside lane. Last week a car sitting astride the solid white line in front of Kemp's would have gone unscratched for three days, unless it was struck by the tumbleweed rolling down the deserted streets. Now impatient motorists honk at pedestrians who dawdle in the crosswalk, and Saturday's football traffic will no doubt bring the first dented fender of the season.

But if the hush has suddenly become hullabaloo, it is well that it should. The resurgence in physical activity is only a facade — a symbol of an even more frantic and even more important type of regeneration. The traffic and the noise and the buying and the selling are only the University's way of announcing to the public that its time of growth and rejuvenation is at hand.

Many reading this are new to Carolina. To them we say welcome, because they are the most vital element in the revitalization process. The University's wellspring of talent and energy and intellect must be not just replenished, but increased annually. The demands of a competitive and progressive era in education require that the University strengthen itself constantly, lest it be left behind by the onrushing future.

Soon we will read the inevitable charts and statistics telling us that the class of 1969 is larger, brighter and more fit than any of its predecessors. To read such statistics will not arouse pangs of jealousy in the hearts of those of us who have gone before. Rather, the signs of inevitable progress are a source of continual hope; we must move upward in order to move forward.

It is especially warming to see the signs of growth and replenishment now, when this great University is being assailed by many who misunderstand and a few who hate. The new and fertile minds represented by the freshmen at Jeff's and the coeds at the Fireside are testimony to the University's endurance. And if their presence causes us for a moment to feel certain that this institution will emerge the winner from the current crisis, then that feeling is probably realistic.

These new faces are uncontestable proof that the University continues to thrive, and that it will triumph because it is moving forward while its foes are standing still.

The single pity and heartbreaking irony is that the potential in new faces is always far greater than the realization. The University will move forward on the collective backs of its human transfusion, of that we can be certain. It could move much further, much faster if each of the human elements contributed a maximum of devotion and mental energy to the cause.

But this is not a time for apprehension; it is a time for enthusiasm. After all, if the class of 1969 fails to live up to its potential, its members alone will not be at fault. Those of us who precede must also lead.

Those freshmen at Jeff's and those coed transfers can become a triumph for the University. They have the talent and the energy, and the University lies waiting for the marks of their achievements.

Truly, it is an exciting time.

–Changes Wrought By Top Level Turnover–

Highlighting the top level administrative reorganization were the appointments of two vice chancellors and two assistant vice chancellors.

Dr. J. Carlyle Sitterson, Kenan professor of history and dean of the General College and the College of Arts and Sciences, and Dr. Everett D. Palmatier, Kenan Professor of physics and chairman of the Department of Physics were named to the two vice chancellorships.

Sharp gave two reasons for the creation of the new positions: They combine administrative offices having similar functions and give more people an over-all view of the University.

Sitterson, who became vice chancellor on June 30, assumed the duties of both the dean of the faculty and the administrator of the Division of Health Affairs. Designed to increase cooperation between the Division of Academic Affairs and the Division of Health Affairs, the new position puts both divisions under a single administrator.

Previously the Academic Division and the Division of Health Affairs were run as separate operations.

Palmatier assumed the duties of vice chancellor for Advanced Studies and Research at the beginning of this month. He will be assisted by the dean of the graduate school and a dean for research administration.

Dr. George R. Holcomb, a UNC faculty member since 1957 with teaching duties in the Department of Anatomy at the School of Medicine and in the Department of Sociology ad anthropology, was named to the new position of Dean of Research Administration.

As Dean of Research Administration, he is responsible for all research and training grants and contracts for foundation spending proposals. (For this fiscal year, the grants to the University are expected to exceed $14 million.)

Under the Dean of the Graduate School will be an associate dean for academic programs, an assistant dean for professional programs, and the director for graduate admissions.

Sitterson will have two assistant vice chancellors helping him in his new position.

Dr. Claiborne S. Jones, professor of zoology and associate dean of the General College, was named assistant vice chancellor for academic affairs; Dr. George P. Maniro, professor of bacteriology and immunology at the School of Medicine, was named assistant vice chancellor for health affairs.

The two appointees will work with Sitterson in coordinating the work of the two divisions they are responsible for

Other administrative changes announced were:

Dr. Louis D. Welt, professor of medicine and member of the UNC School of Medicine faculty since 1952, was named chairman of the Department of Medicine.

Dr. George Phillip Hager, dean of the University of Minnesota College of Pharmacy, will become the fourth dean of the UNC School of Pharmacy early next year.

Welt succeeds Dr. Thomas W. Farmer who had been serving as acting chairman of the Department of Medicine. Dr. Charles H. Burnett, former department chairman, is on an extended leave of absence because of illness.

Welt is a 1963 recipient of the U. S. Public Health service Research Career Award. Prior to joining the UNC medical faculty, Welt was assistant professor of medicine at Yale for three years.

Hager will succeed Dr. Edward Brecht as Dean of the School of Pharmacy. Brecht, who has been dean for 15 years will return to teaching and research.

Sim O. Wilde, director of the UNC Evening College, has resigned to become an assistant professor of English at North Carolina Wesleyan College this fall. Wilde, who has been Evening College director for the past three years, completed his doctorate here during the summer.

He has also served as an instructor of social studies in the School of Education here.

Dr. C. Hugh Holman, dean of the Graduate School since 1963, has announced that he will resign to return to teaching and research. The resignation becomes effective June 30, 1966; no successor has been named yet.

Holman, a native of Cross Anchor, S. C. became dean of the Graduate School in 1963, under former Chancellor William B. Aycock. "He and I both understood I was not entering a career as an administrator," Holman said.

He is best known as a leading scholar in the words of North Carolina novelist Thomas Wolfe.

Holman became a full-time faculty member here in 1949 and Kenan professor English in 1957. He was chairman of the Department of English from 1957 to 1962. He established the office of graduate admissions to help provide for the growth of the school.

Dr. John Coan Otts has assumed the position of acting dean of the School of Education.

He succeeds Dr. Arnold Perry who resigned the deanship to accept a Fullbright fellowship to teach in Argentina during this semester. Perry will return to UNC next February as a professor of education.

Otts, who was previously a professor of education and in charge of the two-year graduate program in school administration, has taught a variety of subjects including mathematics, English, curriculum development, supervision and school administration.

A number of personnel changes at Memorial Hospital were also carried out during the summer. The changes were announced by Eugene B. Crawford Jr., hospital director.

Roger E. Miles, former assistant manager of the patient service, has been promoted to assistant director for planning.

Dr. Frederic G. Dalldorf, a pathologist, has become medical director of the blood bank. He replaces Dr. Margaret B. Scales who resigned.

C. E. Brown, formerly the purchasing superviser, has been promoted to director of the central supporting service. He succeeds Leon King who resigned.

M. H. (Monk) Jennings was named unit manager of the X-ray department.

A number of changes have also been made in the University's Planning and Business offices.

Two architectural planners will be added to the Planning Office to aid Arthur N. Tuttle, who currently heads the office. Tuttle will be responsible directly to the chancellor in the future, instead of the business office, as in the past.

Allen S. Waters, a 20-year veteran of the U. S. Navy Civil Engineer Corps, has assumed duties here as director of Construction and Engineering.

Chancellor Sharp and Business Manager J. A. Branch made the announcement and said that Waters, a retired naval commander, will direct a $58 million program of new construction at the University.

Thirty different building projects, most of them large-scale construction will be completed between now and 1970 on the campus. Waters will be in charge of this construction and other engineering activities.

A native of Malden, Missouri, Waters is a 1944 graduate of the U. S. Naval Academy and also of the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in 1948. During his 20 years in the U. S. Navy Engineers Corps, he was in charge of construction for the Guided Missiles Range now headquartered at Cape Kennedy, Fl and open debate. It is equally clear that the sound democratic principle of freedom of speech and inquiry, when exercised responsibly and under the law, strengthens our democracy.

"The University, with other free institutions the world over, has an honored tradition of freedom of thought and expression that has endured for centuries," Friday explained. "We are answerable to this essential standard of intellectual freedom."

No Communists

Friday said emphatically that to the best of his knowledge, there are no Communists on any campus of the Consolidated University.

After explaining the procedure by which visiting speakers are invited, he contiued, "As a further precaution and to assure free and open discussion as essential to the safeguarding of free institutions, each chancellor, when he considers it appropriate, will require any or all of the following:

"That a meeting be chaired by an officer of the University or by a ranking member of the faculty;

"That speakers at the meeting be subject to questions from the audience;

"That the opportunity be provided at the meeting or later to present speakers of different points of view."

Friday stressed the fact that "The appearance of speakers on a university campus does not imply approval or disapproval of them or their statements.

"Its purpose requires the examination and study of conflicting views and opinions.

Freedom of the Platform

"Freedom of the platform is not unlike freedom of the press. The latter idea has won wide acceptance and respect. Similarly the university forum must be protected and respected under just laws fixing responsibility for acts and not for beliefs and opinions."

"One real concern we feel about the Speaker Bill," Friday said, "is that this legislation does deprive the duly elected Trustees of their traauthority to operate these state supported institutions and that, by doing so, it is detrimental to the University in its relations, its standing, its functioning, and its future development."

The president of the Consolidated University then enumerated the various alleged appearances on campus by known Communists. Friday followed this with the following comments:

Charge Is True

"If it is charged that unpopular or controversial persons have been given an audience on our campuses, we can only say that it is true. If it is charged that this is inconsistet with the nature of the Universitv. we would ask to be shown wherein and why. If it is said that we have knowingly violated the law or by deliberate design fostered or propagated any ideology, we deny it.

At one point during his testimony, Friday called former student body president Bob Spearman to refute the charges made by Chapel Hill legionnaire Henry Royall that it is necessary to take a leftist stand in order to succeed at the University. Spearman cited a number of cases to back up his denial of Royall's allegation.

Friday then examined point by point other charges made by the American Legion during its turn before the ban commission. He pointed out the Legion, in attacking the University, had never given the University an opportunity to counter these charges.

'For' or 'Against' Reds

Friday then concluded these remarks by saying, "I hope these comments have made it clear that this is not a matter of being 'for' or 'against' Communism. I repeat, the University is opposed to all systems of governmet that suppress the liberties and freedoms of its people."

He then introduced William B. Aycock, chancellor of the Chapel Hill Campus at the time the gag law was passed.

Ayds for Reducing

35-DAY SUPPLY $3.25

Reduce without dieting with this easy plan.

DO YOU TAKE VITAMINS AND STILL FEEL TIRED?*

If you take vitamins and still feel tired, your trouble may be due to iron-poor blood. Vitamins alone can't build up iron-poor blood. But GERITOL can! Because just two GERITOL tablets, or two tablespoons of liquid GERITOL contain 7 vitamins plus twice the iron in 1-lb. of calves' liver.

In only one day GERITOL-iron is in your bloodstream beginning to carry strength and energy to every part of your body. Check with your doctor and if you've been feeling tired because of iron-poor blood, take GERITOL, liquid or tablets, every day. You'll feel stronger fast in just 7 days or money back from GERITOL.

Nine University Deaths Occur During Summer

Death claimed a number of prominent educators and friends of the University this summer, including long-time University benefactor William Rand Kenan.

Kenan died July 28 at his Lockport, N. Y., summer home. He was 93. The silver-haired millionaire was the man who in 1926 provided $275,000 for the construction of Kenan Stadium.

The 24,000 seat stadium was dedicated in 1927, Later he provided the steel bleachers which increased the stadium's seating capacity to 44,000.

He also donated $150,000 for a guest box and a new press box, and gave $28,000 for a field house.

While at the University, Kenan and Dr. Francis P. Venable were co-discoverers of the commercial use of carbide. Kenan won letters here in football and baseball, and was graduated in 1894 with a B.S. degree.

Faculty members who died during the summer were:

Dr. Berthod L. Ullman, 82, Kenan Professor Emeritus of classical languages and literature.

Ullman died June 21 in Florence, Italy, where he was working on a research project. He was regarded as one of the world's outstanding classical scholars.

He had retired as chairman of the UNC Department of Classics in 1959. Since then he had worked with the joint UNC - Duke humanities program sponsored by the Ford Foundation and had planned to teach in that program next year.

WILLIAM R. KENAN

BERTHOLD ULLMAN

DAVID SUSKIN

Ullman was awarded an honorary doctorate of letters by the University last October at University Day ceremonies. "Inspiring teacher, painstaking scholar, gracious friend, he is a living example of the great Roman writers he so eloquently portrayed in his writings and lectures," read his degree citation.

Ullman came to the University in 1944.

Dr. Avert Suskin, 55, chairman of the Department of Classics.

Suskin died August 7 at Memorial Hospital after more than three months of illness. During the last two months he was in critical condition.

The widely recognized scholar of Latin literaure was a native Tar Heel. He was born in New Bern and received his degrees from the University — his A.B. in 1931, his M.A. in 1932, and his Ph.D. in 1937.

He also served at one time as assistant to the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Suskin was the author of several textbooks, his last being "Latin for Americans, Book III." The text was co-authored with the late Berthold Ullman.

Suskin is survived by his wife, Mrs. Lavina Smith Suskin; a son Mark, 10; a daughter Marcia, 5; a sister, Mrs. Esther Waters of Elizabeth City; and a brother, Raymond Suskin of New Bern.

Dr. Martin Wallach, 33, associated professor of psychology in the University School of Medicine.

Wallach died May 27 in Memorial Hospital. At the time of his death, he was chief of psychological services in hospital out - patient clinic.

He was born in New York City and attended public schools there. He received his A.B. at City College of New York and earned his Ph.D. at the University here.

Wallach moved to Chapel Hill in 1954 and in 1959 joined the faculty as an associate professor in the Department of Psychiatry and Psychology in the School of Medicine.

Swanson was killed in a head - on auto collision on I-85 on June 7 near the Hillandale Road intersection in Durham. He resided at 504 Milton Ave. in Durham.

Two other men were injured in the accident and were treated at Watts Hospital in Durham.

Durham Police said that evidence indicated that Swanson was driving on the wrong side of the road. No charges were filed against the driver of the other vehicle.

Swanson, a chief petty officer, was a native of Oostbury, Wis. He had been in the Navy 19 years. For the past two years he had been assistant to the sophomore Navy ROTC instructor here.

Mrs. Alice Old Dey, 90, widow of Kenan Professor William M. Dey.

Mrs. Dey died August 17 in her Chapel Hill home. She came to Chapel Hill in 1908 when her husband became a member of the faculty of the University.

She taught for over 50 years in the Department of Romance Languages and served as chairman of the department. Dey Hall was named for her husband.

Cooley died in Charlottesville, Va., on June 10 after several months of declining health.

He was also co-founder of the Webber Glass Washer Co. of Winston - Salem and a member of the University Masonic Lodge No. 408 of Chapel Hill.

Probable suicide was ruled in the death of David B. Snelling, 21, of Asheville who died in a plunge from a second story window on June 4.

Snelling, a UNC math major, was pronounced dead on arrival at Memorial Hospital. He had reportedly refused recommendations that he undergo psychiatric care.

Chapel Hill Police later revealed that a number of Peyote cactus buttons, an illusion causing substance, were found in the student's apartment, but it was never established whether or not Snelling had taken any of these prior to his death, since there is no accepted test for the substance.

Suellen Evans, 21-year-old coed attending the second summer session here, was brutally stabbed to death while walking through the Arboretum on July 30. Her unknown assailant is still being sought by police.

Will Give Lecture

Dr. Carl Gottschalk, UNC professor of medicine and career investigator of the American Heart Association, has been selected to deliver the John Punnett Peters Memorial Lecture at Yale Medical School on October 26.

The annual lecture is named for the distringuished psysician-father of Dr. Richard Peters, chief of thoracic surgery at UNC School of Medine.

Early in September, Dr. Gottschalk participated in the 23rd International Congress of Physiological Sciences at Tokyo, Japan, where he served as chairman of a session on kidney function.

A Volkswagen can't get by on looks alone. (Obviously.) So when it comes to hiring a staff, we can't think small. After all, the people who keep the VW going have to be as good as the people who made it. Or else, what's the use of making it so good?

That's why we send our mechanics to special training centers (15 in all), before they become our mechanics. And our service advisors go to service advisor school, and shop foremen to shop foreman school.

Then, when you bring your car in for service it's touched only by educated hands.

And any part it might need is on tap, within an educated hand's reach. So if you're thinking of buying a VW, we're not just another outfit with a pretty showroom up front.

We're an Authorized VW Dealer.
We have a showroom in back, too.

President And Chancellor Optimistic

'Enriching And Rewarding' Year Seen Ahead For UNC

"Enriching and rewarding for all" and "As exciting a year as we've ever enjoyed" were the predictions for the academic year voiced this week by Consolidated University President William C. Friday and UNC Chancellor Paul F. Sharp, respectively.

In a welcome for new and transfer students, Friday said "This fall the University will enroll the largest number of students in its history and we will have more North Carolinians attending each of the four campuses than ever before.

Welcome Transfers

"We welcome the new students and those transferring from other institutions. We have every intention of keeping this faculty strong and we are confident that the new class coming in will be, as classes before it, enriched with a rewarding experience in association with a distinguished faculty," he said.

Friday also noted, "The University had many significant and interesting opportunities before it."

Sharp said that the student body would be challenged and expressed hope that "students here will follow with keen and deep concern the controversy over the Speaker Ban Law and will work for its ultimate removal."

Major Contribution

The chancellor later said, "Perhaps the major contribution we can make in this educational investment is simlpy to provide an atmosphere of intellectual stimulation and freedom . . . of emotional stability and maturity . . . and of adult leadership and understanding."

Inspire and Challenge

Commenting on the aims of the University, Sharp said, "Our purpose is not just to educate, train, or enlighten, but equally to inspire and challenge.

Friday became acting president of the Consolidated University in March of 1965 assuming the full presidency of the four campuses seven months later.

Friday is a 1941 graduate of N. C. State, the Raleigh campus of the Consolidated University.

Sharp assumed the UNC at Chapel Hill chancellorship one year ago. Before moving to Chapel Hill, he was president of Hiram College, Hiram, Ohio.

- The University And The Gag Law -

acted by men with worthwhile intent.

"The law will not accomplish what it intends. That makes it a futile law. It will do a great many unintended injuries. That makes it a foolish law. And a law which is both futile and foolish is a bad law."

Royster also said that the law "will neither prevent nor remedy the infection (of Communism). It puts its ban on only one particular type of speaker, the formal Communist. It bans him from speaking only in a particular place. This may be a mark of the law's moderation — it also marks its futility.

"For the truth, which we all know in our hearts, is that no law, however carefully drafted, can halt the breeding of ideas, good ideas or bad ones. Even the Communists, with all their forces of brutal oppression, have not been able to ban ideas they do not like in the minds of men. Nor can we," he said.

"Indeed, would it not be a tragic irony if, in the name of upholding our faiths, we adopted the methods of Communism and denied the most fundamental of our faiths, the belief that men being exposed to all ideas will ultimately choose the good over the evil?"

Royster's words contrasted sharply by those of Sen. Tom White, who described the law as "wholesome." White said that he did not believe that the accreditation of state supported institutions was actually threatened.

At one poit during questioning by members of the Speaker Ban Commission, White said that he thought the state should "let accreditation go and see what happens."

White said that to the best of his knowledge, there are no Communists, either students or faculty members, on the campus of any state supported institution, but said that he had heard so much about Communists on the Chapel Hill campus that he was "about ready to believe it."

During his testimony before the commission, White also attacked "Politics USA" a supplementary text compiled by two University political science professors, claiming that the book could be used to indoctrinate students.

Under questioning by Britt as to what White thought the state should do if loss of accreditation should hurt the state supported institutions, White replied that he thought the state, through the attorney general's office should sue the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools.

This brought White into a argument with Britt, who contended that since the association is a voluntary organization which has the right to choose its own members and also expel them for what it considers a valid reason.

Col. W. T. Joyner of Raleigh, another member of the ban commission objected to Britt's views, and expressed the opinion that the legal aspects of the situation might bear further study.

University Gives State First ETV

Unveiling of the first expansion of network educational television in North Carolina will be held at Columbia Wednesday, as eastern North Carolinians gather for the dedication of WUNB-TV, Channel 2.

The University's ETV enlargment, eventually to include 11 television studios from the coast to the mountains, will be celebrated with ceremonial speeches, a Dutch lunch barbecue and a tour of the transmitter site just outside Columbia. The WUNB-1V transmitter is 6 miles west of Dolumbia and 3 miles east of Creswell on Highway 64.

More than 50 guests are expected to be present, including legislative leaders of eastern North Carolina counties. Chief participants will be Rep. W. J. White of Columbia, Sen. Carl Baily of Plymouth, and Sen. Elton Aydlett of Elizabeth City.

University President William C. Friday and Vice President Fred H. Weaver will take part in the ceremonies. John Young, manager of the Chapel Hill studio of WUNC-TV, is in charge of arrangements.

Invited also are members of the Council of State in Raleigh, members of the General Assembly in the region, trustees of the University, members of the Governor's Commission on Educational Television, mayors and county commissioners in the east, superintendents and principals of schools, editors and managers of newspapers, radio and TV stations.

Allen McIntyre, chief engineer for WUNC-TV and the 10 other stations to be built, is in charge of the technical aspects of the tour of facilities

In-School television is the number one priority on the educational TV network in the state.

1,042 Men Will Move Into Brand New Homes This Week

By LYNN HARVEL
DTH Staff Writer

New ten - story Morrison Residence Hall opened for occupancy September 10. The 2.4 million dollar dormitory will house 1,042 students when filled.

Constance Beardsley, interior decorator for the building, described it as "a light, airy, cheerful place designed to suit the needs of the students."

The majority of rooms are double with built - in furniture and large closets. "The rooms are functional, and a good use has been made of all available space," according to Mrs. Beardsley.

Giant Morrison Hall Under Construction

The lounge is decorated in contemporary furniture, emphasizing an air of relaxation. The walls are paneled in rosewood and the upholstery is warm browns and gold.

The adjoining recreation room is designed for large social functions. It has tile floors and is furnished with folding chairs and tables.

The canteen is decorated in vivid blues and yellows, and furnished with comfortable contemporary chairs and tables.

When the building was started in April, 1964, bad weather delayed progress but the dorm rose rapidly as the completion date was near. There still remain a few minor details to be completed such as laying a carpet in the lounge area, and the landscaping.

The four wings with 530 rooms are arranged around the center core. The core houses three elevators, a recreation room, a baggage storeroom, a laundry room, a janitors' service area, two single rooms, and a study area on each floor.

A suite arrangemet with four rooms and a bathroom is entered through an outside private entrance.

Morrison is located below Kenan Stadium in the lower men's dormitory complex. It is conveniently situated near Chase Cafeteria. Parking space is available in a small lot in front of the dormitory and in the larger parking lot located near Craige Dormitory.

Sports Page Starts Tomorrow

Coming tomorrow in sports — a column by Sports Editor Pat Stith on why true Carolina football fans are breathing a bit easier about this season, in spite of Michigan and Ohio State and Notre Dame.

You'll get a brief look at Carolina's ten grid opponents — their records last year, their hopes for this year. Also, what some of UNC's key players are saying about their chances against what many have called the most difficult schedule ever for North Carolina.

And finally, a run-down on schedules and the boys to watch in soccer, cross country and freshman football.

The Daily Tar Heel

THE DAILY TAR HEEL SEPTEMBER 16, 1965 SECTION TWO

Features

In The Beginning...

It was chilly in Chapel Hill this morning — downright cold, according to some — a subtle reminder that summer is over and that falling leaves, lecture classes and football weekends lie just around the corner.

Nature needs no reminder of what September on the Hill is like. Neither do those students who have spent other Septembers here. But the freshmen and transfer students, whom we greet for the first time with this special edition of the Daily Tar Heel, have a lot of suprises in store.

The North Carolina farmers a few miles away are putting their last few ears of browning corn into cribs to see them through the winter. In the dormitories around the UNC campus, students are stowing away books and theme paper to prepare themselves for a different kind of winter—the cold winds of soon-due term papers and the snows of mid-term examinations.

The University planners have tried to make sure that students will not have honest-to-goodness snowstorms to cope with this winter. Big, beautiful new Morrison Residence Hall, Chase Cafeteria and Carmichael Auditorium have been recently built to provide a roof over their heads.

The new school year brings not only new students, but a new set of administrative officials, buildings and classes.

Some of the old problems are still around too. After two years, the speaker ban law is still providing plenty of discussion. Despite the new construction, the perennial problem of overcrowding still plagues us. The fightin' Tar Heel football team begins the 1965 season next Saturday—it looks as if the winter may be bleak for fans of the Heel gridiron.

As new students move their belongings from suitcase to bureau drawer and as they adjust their spines to the contours of their dormitory matresses, these are the things they will be talking about.

Carmichael Auditorium Will Be Finished Despite A Minor Flood

New Auditorium Will Put Sports Under The Big Top

By DALE WHITE
DTH Staff Writer

The huge steel and concrete structure to be named William Donald Carmichael, Jr. Auditorium is beginning to take final shape despite a long delay in building schedule.

The floor of the new auditorium, near Woollen Gymnasium, was ruined August 16 when an improperly connected water main broke and flooded the building with eight inches of water. The mishap delayed progress of the construction until a new floor could be layed.

Construction of the domed auditorium was started in May 1964. Completion has been rescheduled for late this month.

Seating capacity of the building will be 10,000 persons, making it the sixth largest building of its type in the state, ranking behind the Charlotte Coliseum, the N. C. State auditorium, Greensboro Coliseum, Duke Indoor Stadium and the Winston - Salem Coliseum.

Two - thirds of the seats will be stadium arm - chairs. The rest will be foldout bleachers which can be pushed back when the 24 by 40 foot hydraulic rising stage is in place.

Air Conditioning

Air conditioning ducts have been installed, but finances are not available at present to install the cooling unit. The auditorium is equipped with the most up-to-date ventilation system available. There will be a constant, even flow of air at all times.

The total cost of the building will be approximately $1,725,000.

UNC Athletic Director C.P. Erickson said that the building was not going to be large enough to seat the expanding student body and that the University "will have to start planning for the future now."

Plans to increase the seating capacity of the auditorium by double - decking the seats, much like the second level of Kenan Stadium, were dropped as impractical.

Erickson said that University planners decided to make the auditorium completely separate from the old Woollen Gym building so that more functions could be carried on simultaneously. "An intramural basketball game," he said, "could not very well be carried on at the same time that a speaker forum was being conducted, if both auditoriums were joined together into one larger structure." He said that only a thousand additional seats could have been added by expansion of the old

To Aid Basketball

University accountant Vernon Crook said he hopes that the building will be able to make home basketball games a profit - making venture. For some years basketball has operated in the red, making money on the road trips and taking almost a total loss on home games. Crook said the university should be able to make roughly $1,000 to $2,000 per home game with the new seating facilities.

Erickson said that the seating demands of the students had to be taken care of before any tickets to outsiders could be sold. Consequently, basketball typically loses about $20,000 per year. Football, the only paying sport conducted by the Department of Athletics absorbs the losses of basketball and all other varsity sports. If basketball can meet its own expenses in the future, it will be the only sport other than football to do so.

Coach Joe Hilton said that the old office space in Woollen Gym would be converted to classrooms for physical education and for intramural offices after the new office space in Carmichael Auditorium was opened. The coaches' offices will be in the new building as will be the sports publicity office now housed in Fetzer Field House.

Intramural director Bill Johnson has expressed belief that the intramural program will be much improved by the new facilities.

Devout Are In The Minority, But Well Provided For Just The Same

By EDDIE ELLIS
DTH Staff Writer

Nearly half a million dollars will be spent on a minority of UNC students during 1966. These are students who attend religious services and religious affiliated programs in Chapel Hill.

There are 2,157 Methodists, 2,091 Baptists, 1,627 Presbyterians, 1,451 Episcopalians, 689 Roman Catholics, 341 Lutherans, 381 Jews and 605 students of other religions on campus, according to 1964 registration religious preference cards.

Less than half of these will ever attend religious services while at UNC. Less than 2,000 attend church or religious affiliated programs, according to estimates of local clergymen.

Presbyterians

Students who don't participate in religious activities in college are missing a chance to develop their own concept of religion," says Rev. Harry Smith, Presbyterian campus pastor. He thinks that religious groups should be campus oriented rather than denominational.

The Westminister Fellowship, the Presbyterian - sponsored campus program, is housed in a $250,000 building which is five years old. They have held, in past years in cooperation with Baptist and Episcopal programs, a film forum. Six movies and discussion groups drew crowds of over 300 last year. Westminster publishes "New Wine," UNC's Christian Journal of opinion. Each of these projects will continue for next year.

Conferences and retreats, such as "Courtship and Preparation for Marriage," a weekend retreat for couples who are pinned, engaged, or going steady, "always prove to be interesting," said Smith.

Methodists

The Wesley Foundation, the Methodist sponsored program, has recently constructed a $350,000 building on Pittsboro Street.

Bob Johnson, Methodist campus pastor, says he feels that religion must express itself in the idiom of the day — philosophically, artistically and musically. The modern architecture of their new building, is indicative of these views.

The sanctuary of the square chapel was built in a pit, much like a basketball arena. This arrangement of the chapel will involve the congregation in the services as much as possible.

Music ranging from Bach to Copland will flow from the new Schlicker baroque organ. A library of 2,000 books will be housed upstairs. Modern art, such as an already scheduled exhibit by Propst, will be placed in the art gallery. A floating stairway, classroom, student living quarters, and a coffee shop which will be open every night until 1 a.m. are also included.

Philosopher Soren Kirkegaard, novelist, Flannery O'Connor, and motion pictures like Ingmar Bergman's "Through A Glass Darkly" are discussed and featured on Wesley programs. "Politics and The American Conscience" and sexuality "Man and Woman" are subjects of a Wesley Sunday afternoon symposium planned for the fall.

Baptists

The Baptist Student Union is presently spending $45,000 to renovate the old Kemp Plummer Battle home on Battle Lane into an international student area. It will also erect a modern student union building on the property within the next two years. BSU will be housed in the Battle home next year.

David Simerly, BSU president, says that the emphasis of this group is on "doing things." This summer the BSU renovated three churches on the Cherokee Indian reservation. They held Sunday School class for retarded children at Murdoch School every other week. They helped with building a house for a Negro family in Carrboro last spring.

This fall BSU will hold a series of lectures on cybernetics, the effect of automation on our society.

The Episcopal Student Congregation worships as parishoners of the Chapel of the Cross. Rev. Tom Thrasher of that church says that students make a good congregation.

"You can be sure they are not forced to come to church," he said. College students participate more actively in the service. They are the ones who sing the songs and take part in the service, Thrasher said.

Catholics

Father Wood, Catholic student priest, considers himself "under a mission to students."

Although students attend Sunday mass at the local parish, there is a separate program for them here," he said. Discussion groups on such topics as "Sexuality and Personality Development" are held each week. Mass is celebrated every day at noon and 5 p.m. at the Catholic Student Center. An instruction class for people who are interested in the Catholic faith is held each week.

Other Groups

The campus has two professing Bahais, three atheists, two Bretheren, two Armenian Orthodox, one Mennonite, seven Hindus and 16 Buddhists. There are no active student organizations for these religions.

Nancy Wilson, Louis Armstrong On GM Series

Student Union Is Center For Varied Student Activities

The Brubeck Quartet will perform for two shows tonight, one at 7:30 and one at 9:30.

The shows are free to students.

The next scheduled program will be Sept. 29 when Graham Memorial will bring to campus the University of Toronto Mixed Chorus.

SABICAS

Oct. 28 will bring the guitar sounds of Sebicus to Memorial Hall.

One of the year's biggest shows featuring Nancy Wilson — is sheduled for Nov. 6. Miss Wilson is best known for her dreamy renditions of popular songs of the past 10 years.

Miss Wilson's appearance will be the first of five programs scheduled for November.

The Netherlands Chamber Orchestra will perform Nov. 7 — the day after the Nancy Wilson show.

The Norman Luboff Choir will be presented Nov. 16. The Choir has achieved popularity for its interpretations of popular songs.

The next day — Nov. 17 — will bring to campus the singers and dancers of La Contrescarpe. La Contrescarpe is a popular French group from Paris.

Armstrong To Play

Memorial Hall will ring with the sounds of Louis Armstrong and company Nov. 20. The internationally known musician has achieved added popularity during recent years from his foreign concerts, including some behind the Iron Curtain.

Musician Leonard Pennario will perform Nov. 20 as part of the Chapel Hill Concert Series.

Hall Holbrook will give his impressions of American author Mark Twain on Feb. 13. Holbrook, dressed like Twain, will give readings from the works of the famous writer and humorist. Holbrook appeared here several years ago as a part of the Graham Memorial series.

The last scheduled program will present Pierre Fournier in another offering of the Chapel Hill Concert Series.

Other Graham Memorial programs will be announced throughout the year.

This year's Jubilee program is scheduled for April 29 and 30 and May 1.

Another annual Graham Memorial event is the Christmas decorating party. Students gather in the student union to string boughs of holly and the like.

Bridge, chess and billiard players will all find a sanction in Graham Memorial. Regular sessions are scheduled for participants in these and other activities. Tournaments are also held.

Graham Memorial's Rendezvous Room is often the site of combo parties. The first will be at 8 p.m. Saturday featuring the Rapsodians. But when no group is playing, the room is open for dancing, chatting or sipping (Cokes).

A number of student committees operate under the auspices of Graham Memorial. Committees plan programs and other activities such as Jubilee.

The movies are shown in Carroll Hall at 7 and 9:30 p.m.

"Suddenly Last Summer," set for tomorrow night, will be the year's first Free Flick.

Saturday night's Free Flick will be "League of Gentlemen."

Dave Brubeck—The Jazz Man Cometh

Brubeck Quartet Sets Two Shows In Memorial Hall

Dave Brubeck, internationally acclaimed as one of the world's foremost jazz personalities, will bring the sounds of the Dave Brubeck Quartet here tonight for two shows.

Jazz, in the inimitable Brubeck manner, will flow from the stage in Memorial Hall at 7:30 and 9:30 p.m.

Tickets for the first program of the 1965-66 GM Series are available at Graham Memorial Information Desk.

Brubeck is currently and has been for some years one of the most sought-after personalities in the world of jazz, and is the world's top record seller in this area.

Each member of the Brubeck Quartet has won impressive recognition.

Paul Desmond, alto sax, is considered by most critics to be far and away the world's number one alto saxophone player. Desmond recently won first place in the Down Beat Readers' Poll.

Joe Morello, likewise just honored by the Down Beat readers, has won one poll after another for drummers in the last several years.

Gene Wright, the newest member of the group, joined the quartet in January, 1958, time for its U. S. State Department tour of the Middle East. An outstanding bass player, Wright has been featured with Count Basie, Cal Tjader and Red Norvo before his association with Brubeck.

Brubeck was born in Concord, Calif., the youngest of three sons. His mother was one of the leading piano teachers in the area, and classical piano literature was such an integral part of young Brubeck's home life that at the age of five he began improvising themes of his own.

His first contact with jazz was through his older brother, and at age 13 he was causing a sensation with local dance bands, playing such diverse styles as hillbilly, two-beat and swing.

Brubeck continued his music studies through college, and after completing his overseas hitch in the Army during World War II he returned to Oakland, Calif., to resume composition studies with Darius Milhaud at Mills College. At Mills College, Brubeck organized an experimental jazz group known as "The 8," five members of which were students of Darius Milhaud.

At a concert of "The 8" jazz impresario Jimmy Lyons first heard Brubeck. After the concert Lyons rushed to Paul Speegle (then NBC program director and now a prominent San Francisco newspaper columnist) to make known his discovery of a new jazz stylist.

However, NBC pianist Marie Coppin had beaten Lyons to Speegle's office by a few minutes to announce her discovery of a new musician and composer. Both had discovered Dave Brubeck.

The rest is jazz history.

The success of the "Time" series albums, "Time Out," "Time Further Out" and "Countdown Time in Outer Space," is well known. Experiments in polyrhythms have long been a Brubeck tradmark.

Recently Brubeck has recorded with Leonard Bernstein and The New York Philharmonic, "Dialogues for Jazz Combo and Orchestra," written by his brother, Howard Brubeck.

Now, to the delight of music lovers everywhere, there has just been released a record version of Brubeck's musical show, "The Real Ambassadors." The cast includes Louis Armstrong, Carmen McRae, Lambert, Hendricks and Ross and Brubeck's group.

Facilities Available

Graham Memorial facilities include a large lounge and reading room, a billiards room, the Rendezvous Room, a television room and a barber shop.

The Daily Tar Heel offices are on the second floor, Graham Memorial along with offices of Student Government and various campus committees.

Meetings for a number of campus committees are held in such Graham Memorial meeting halls as the Woodhouse Room and the Roland Parker lounges. Meeting places and times are posted on the first floor of the building.

Howard Henry is director of Graham Memorial. Archie Copeland is assistant director.

Graham Memorial hours are 9 a.m. to 11 p.m. Sunday to Thursday, and 9 a.m. to midnight Friday and Saturday.

Other Free Flicks this month will be "To Have and To Lave Not," Sept. 24 and "All The King's Men," Sept. 25.

One Sunday Cinema is scheduled this month — "Smiles of a Summer Night" which will be shown Sunday.

"Flick" Schedule

Ten Free Flicks are scheduled during October. The schedule is:

"Suspicion," Oct. 1; "Requiem for a Heavyweight," Oct. 2; "Roman Holiday," Oct. 8; "The Prisoner," Oct. 9; "Cyrano de Bergerac," Oct. 15; "Waltz of the Toreadors," Oct. 16; "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington," Oct. 22; "The Victors," Oct. 23; "Gigi," Oct. 29; and "The Gaslight," Oct. 30.

The scheduled Summer Cinemas for October are "400 Blows," Oct. 3; "La Strada" (English version), Oct. 10; and "Vampyr," "Un Chien Andalou," "McLauren Abstracts," "Olympic Diving Sequence," and "A Movie and a Desiest Film," Oct. 31.

Other films scheduled include "The War Lover," a saga of B-17 pilots in World War II; "Magnificient Seven," a western with an all-star cast; and "Seven Brides for Seven Brothers," the screen adaptation of the Broadway hit.

Same Old Thing In 1919

Editor Wolfe's Problems Weren't Very Much Different From Our Own

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

"Every available rooming space in Chapel Hill is not merely filled, but crowded."

This might be a quotation direct from this year's first issue of the Daily Tar Heel — but it isn't.

The year was 1919, and the statement was part of an editorial written by Thomas Clayton Wolfe, the 19-year-old senior from Asheville who had recently taken over the editorship of the Tar Heel.

Things have not changed much since the reknowned author of "Look Homeward, Angel" attended the University.

An increase in enrollment from 1,100 to 1,300 had caused the overcrowding. It was a familiar tale; the young journalist, like his successors of the 1960s, wanted "a fair-minded group of men" — the state legislature — to finance UNC's expansion.

Editor Wolfe also had advice for the students themselves: "This is not a health lecture, but personally we don't believe in the restorative qualities of nuxated iron . . . If you consider your college course in a business way, health is a necessary asset."

Certainly, however, there were exceptions to the rules for healthy living — exceptions like Thomas Wolfe, who frequently sat up all night in Durham's Seeman Printing Shop getting his paper to press.

Once, in fact, he slapped the sandman in the face by writing an entire 48-page edition of the Tar Baby (a humor magazine) in one evening.

Regardless of Wolfe's unusual work habits, his editorials were well received. "I get lots of praise," he wrote in a letter to his mother. "Faculty members say the Tar Heel's editorials which I write have been a steadying influence on campus . . ."

EDITOR TOM WOLFE

On November 27, 1919, the Tar Heel published an eight-page edition, of which Wolfe was extremely proud. He neglected to mention in his editorials that one and one-half pages had been filled with the names of club officers.

All of this was part of Wolfe's promotional scheme. The Tar Heel at the time cost $2 a year, and slogans like "Every Student a Subscriber" regularly appeared in large print on the front page

"The business manager," Wolfe wrote in an editorial, "is faced with the painful duty of requesting that all unpaid subscriptions to the Tar Heel be paid immediately."

Back in Wolfe's time, the University had experienced its own version of the frolicsome 1963 Jubilee weekend. The Tar Heel's reaction to the festivity was somewhat pedantic:

"Let us see to it that never again shall the young ladies we invite here be subjected to any disgusting spectacle intoxication, or to the sight to some maudlin calf as he drools around the edges of the dance floor."

In January 1920 the University held a referendum to determine the popularity of the League of Nations Covenant. The covenant, approved by the student body, had enjoyed the staunch backing of the Tar Heel, which accused the League's enemies of using "smear" tactics. We are un-American," Wolfe sarcastically wrote.

In February the Tar Heel endorsed " a movement that moves." The junior class, it seems, had started a campus clean-up campaign. Such was the extent of "activist" activity at UNC after World War I.

But the University had other problems. In the spring of 1921, a series of campus thefts took place, and the Tar Heel had these sentiments to pass along to the culprits:

"Now listen, thief or thieves — whether you be one of a half dozen — this is meant for you: If we find you, and we eventually shall, if you stay here and continue your practice, we will drive you away . . . You have desecrated the temple, you have prostituted the honor of a place that is as dear to us as the honor of a woman that we love . . ."

If the thieves had been caught, their captors might have made them to read the Tar Heel's bible study column which explained with great skill the by-products of piety:

"We stop coffee because the use of it mars our work. We give up smoking to have better wind in the game. We hand over our money to add to our standing in the community or to our customers in our place of business. A memoer of a business house . . . is reported as saying that it paid his firm to give lavishly to the Y.M.C.A."

Meanwhile, the quality of the Tar Heel's front page reporting generally was poor. Editorializing, for instance, was common in news storoes, and usually the writing showed little care.

Yet the paper of Wolfe's era had a charm of its own — something which compensated for the staff's lack of competence.

"Thomas Clayton Wolfe," the paper once announced tongue-in-cheek fashion, "was on the Hill a few fleeing hours last Wednesday. Mr. Wolfe is taking a rest cure in Raleigh and Greensboro following a week of strenuous and nerve-racking exams."

Wolfe once was threatened with a law suit by the father of a coed whose photograph the Tar Heel had published. The man was angry because the picture showed his innocent daughter embracing a Carolina Gentleman.

"You can't do that," Wolfe said, referring to the legal threat.

"I'd ike to know why not," the father thundered.

"Because, sir," Wolfe boldly announced, "I am a minor." Then he unfolded his 6-foot 3-inch frame.

Thomas Clayton Wolfe published his last Tar Heel issue on June 5, 1920. Smug to the very end, he and his staff departed with "the satisfaction of knowing we have given the biggest Tarheel to the students."

At N.C. Memorial Hospital

Betatron To Be Installed

A high - energy betatron—the most advanced radiation weapon against cancer — will be installed at N. C. Memorial Hospital here when space is available in a new ambulatory outpatient wing.

The 1965 General Assembly appropriated $387,489 to the University of North Carolina to purchase modern equipment for treating cancer patients here.

Most of the funds — about 90 per cent — will be used for two pieces of supervoltage radiotherapy equipment: a 40 million electron volt betatron unit the second or third of its size for medical use in the U.S.; and a cobalt unit the most widely used "workhorse' in the X-ray treatment of cancers in the U. S.

Dr. F. D. Pepper Jr., a radiologist at N. C. Memorial Hospital and a member of the University of North Carolina medical faculty, said that installation of the high - voltage radiation equipment will mean that the hospital will be able to provide X-ray treatment for cancer patients comparable to any medical center in the world.

The expanded Radiotherapy Division here will offer what Dr. Pepper described as "a gamut of X-ray equipment for the treatment of any form of malignancy encountered today."

The new ambulatory outpatient wing will provide space for a completely new physical setup for the Radiotherapy Division. Construction of the wing is scheduled to begin later this year and be completed by late 1968.

Supervoltage radiation has been used against cancer since the 1930's, but its most rapid and widespread increase has been in recent years. At least six cobalt units are in use presently in North Carolina hospitals.

A variety of X-ray equipment is necessary because all cancers do not require the same energy dose for treatment. Skin cancer, for example, responds to lower voltages. But certain deep-seated cancers, as in the chest and abdomen, may require the more sophisticated high-voltage machines.

The cobalt unit to be installed here will be three to four times more powerful than any equipment now available at the hospital for X-ray treatments.

The megavoltage betatron unit will be 120 times more powerful than anything here now. In addition to an X-ray beam, the betatron can produce an electron beam which has been available for the treatment of cancer only to a limited extent.

The betatron will serve a dual purpose: (1) treating cancer patients; and (2) biological research related to ionizing radiation. In research, for example, it can be used to investigate the effects of various X-ray dosages on normal as well as cancerous tissues.

The new cobalt equipment will permit "rotational" or "pendulum" treatment for cancer patients. While the patient remains stationary, the machine will rotate slowly around the patient, allowing higher dosages to be concentrated within a tumor.

The treatment units designed for the enlarged Radiotherapy Department here will broaden the field now known by cancer experts as "combination therapy." It is in this area that a patient is cared for by a cancer team representing surgery, radiology and chemotherapy (drug treatment).

By means of high - energy X-ray treatments some inoperable cancers sometimes become operable and surgeons can successfully remove a tumor. This is one example of how combination therapy can increase the cancer cure rate.

The treatment of patients will require about 90 per cent of the time of the Radiotherapy Department in its new location. Remaining time will be devoted to research, with special emphasis on the possibility that certain drugs may be useful in changing untreatable cancers into treatable cancers.

The below ground location of the new X-ray treatment facilities and thick concrete walls will eliminate any radiation hazards.

The betatron will be surrounded by a wall of concrete three feet thick and rays of the cobalt unit will be absorbed by a two - foot - thick concrete wall.

JCAH Gives Three-Year Accrediation

N. C. Memorial Hospital has been fully accredited again by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals.

E. B. Crawford Jr., director of the hospital, said that the new accreditation is for a full three - year period. Three years is the maximum period before another survey is necessary.

JCAH is comprised of four national organizations — the American College of Physicians, the American College of Surgeons, the American Hospital Association and the American Medical Association. Its accreditation program is entirely voluntary.

In addition to setting standards for the hospital building, equipment, staff and administration, the accrediting commission requires certain other procedures to insure high quality care for patients.

Mrs. Faye Pickard Teaching Assistant

Mrs. Faye Dark Pickard, a native of Pittsboro, has been appointed a teaching assistant in nursing at the University School of Nursing. She has been assigned to the nursing school's continuation education program.

Mrs. Pickard is the wife of Dr. Carl Glenn Pickard Jr., formerly of Asheville, and is the daughter of Mrs. Walter Virgil Dark and the late W. V. Dark of Raeford.

Mrs. Pickard is a graduate of Hoke County High School and was awarded her bachelor of science degree in nursing from UNC in 1959.

'Student Special' Price Is Hiked

The price of the Lenoir Hall "Student Special" has been increased from 40 to 50 cents.

Kenneth Krakow, assistant director of student dining, who made the announcement this summer, said the increase will be made because of the increases in employe wages and rising fringe costs.

The "special" was introduced in 1954 by G. W. Prillaman, director of student dining halls. This is the first increase in price.

FLEETING MOMENTS OF SUMMER—An unidentified Carolina student gets in a moment of summer air and sunshine beneath one of the still-verdant trees on campus. Already turning leaves indicate that such sessions with nature are soon to be interrupted by old man winter. But while it's still pretty, run out and enjoy it—maybe you'll meet our friend here.

School Of Nursing Gets Grants

Almost $117,000 in federal grants has been awarded the UNC School of Nursing for a series of advanced training programs for nurses and nursing teachers.

Two of the programs will be new here this year. Six other programs were begun last year and have been renewed for at least one more year.

The larger of the new grants provides $18,225 to sponsor and administrative training course for 135 head nurses in hospitals. The first of three identical sessions, each for 45 nurses, is scheduled here on Sept. 27. The course was developed at the request of the Head Nurse Section of the N. C. State Nurses' Association.

The largest of six continuation education programs going into the second year with federal funds is devoted to improving the care of the aging and aged. Unlike the other programs, this gerontology training is limited to North Carolina nurses. One hundred nurses who studied principles during the first year will return this year to learn how to apply these principles to the care of geratric patients. An added dimension this year will be visits by the UNC faculty to "cluster areas" in the state in which nursing schools, hospitals, public health departments, and nursing homes are situated in the same locality.

'A' Rating Given UNC Grad Schools

UNC is the only southern university to receive the American Council of Education's "A" rating for its graduate and doctorate degree programs.

The rating was announced in the July issue of the Southern Economic Journal by Dr. Allan M. Cartter, former Duke University economist now on the staff of the ACE.

He said, "The University of North Carolina receives the only 'A' rating both for average of offered programs, and allowing for inclusiveness of offerings." Duke and the University of Texas were the southern schools receiving the next highest ratings.

Sixteen areas of graduate study were rated here. Ten of them got individual "A" ratings, four received "Bs" and two received "Cs."

Classics, English, French, economics, history, political science, sociology, chemistry, mathematics and psychology were the areas receiving the top ratings.

"B" ratings went to the physics, geology, botany and zoology programs and biochemistry and philosophy got a "C" rating.

Factors considered in the rating include the number of graduates who go on to receive doctorate degrees and the number of doctorates awarded in the area of study.

Cartter's report said, "By institution, the highest percentages of graduates going on to obtain the doctorate were Rice, 13.6 per cent; Peabody, 9.1 per cent; UNC, 5.8 per cent; Houston, 5.8 per cent; and Kentucky, 5.3 per cent."

He said southern schools still lag behind the rest of the country however, and none of the top institutions in the South rank in the top 10 in the nation. Some of them do rank nationwide in the next 10, he said, on one or more rating scales.

Lower financial support and faculty salaries were listed as partly responsible for keeping overall ratings down.

Library expenditures in the South "fall between the first and second national groups . . . In the 'millionaire' library class in the South today are Texas, Duke, Virginia, UNC, LSU, Florida and Kentucky in approximately that order," the report said.

UNC, Duke, Emory, Texas, and Florida State were the only schools ranking above the norm in research income in the group of institutions ranking 23rd to 48th — the third highest category.

'You Can Never Be A Loser . . .'

Penny At The Pageant: Parading, Posing, Planning

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J. — When 50 of this country's most beautiful and talented girls — among them, Miss North Carolina, UNC coed Penny Clark — arrived here September 6 for the beginning of the Miss America Pageant, they were given a bit of advice.

Lenore A. Slaughter, executive director of the pageant since 1941, told them a welcoming speech, "You can never be a loser here. It's not important to be Miss America, but to leave here having everyone like you — that will give you something you will always treasure."

Miss Slaughter, who received a standing ovation from the girls at the beginning of her talk said, "enjoy this week — Live it. Your state loved you enough to send you here for the wonderful experience you'll receive. This is the important thing."

Both of these pieces of advice were wasted on Penny Clark, for in all her 20 years, she has never had any trouble enjoying life or in getting other people to like her.

In the state pagenat in Charlotte June 12 Miss Clark won not only the top prize, but also a special award for her congenial attitude toward other girls in the competition. Strangely, she attributes her selection as Miss Congeniality to what she describes as her basic nature of shyness and her nervous condition at the pageant.

"I worked off this condition by running around helping other girls," she said. "I was tickled pink when I won the award."

Last week at the national competition, she had many opportunities to conquer her stage fright.

Not a Bit Shy

She didn't seem the slightest shy as she braved the nippy Atlantic sea breezes while parading in an evening gown in the traditional cavalcade of beauties along Atlantic City's famous boardwalk.

. . . Misses North and South Carolina stroll down the Boardwalk

About 100,000 persons watched the two-hour parade of contestants, bands and floats which was the final preview to the rugged competition later in the week. Thousands more tuned in over television for the nationwide broadcast of the final moments of America's most coveted beauty competition.

The parade followed a busy day of posing for pictures and rehearsals for the talent competition which began Wednesday night.

The posing for pictures will be good practice for Miss Clark when she starts to satisfy her greatest ambition in life. She told a Tar Heel reporter this summer that more than anything, she wants a leading role in a dramatic production before she graduates from the University.

But the green-eyed blonde was quick to add that she wants most to "get beautiful reviews."

Was Miss Sanfrod

Miss Clark, who lives with her parents in Chapel Hill, entered the North Carolina competition as Miss Sanford. Her family formerly lived in Sanford and her father is employed there.

She will have to miss a year of schooling because of her duties as Miss North Carolina. She believes this will teach her to allocate time carefully and better organize her activities.

Miss Clark led a busy life during her freshman year at the University last year. The dramatic arts major had a grueling schedule. "Many days I leave home at 8 in the morning and don't get back until 11 at night," she said this summer. "But I love the work."

Miss Clark said she enjoys the life of a Carolina Coed. "The social life is wonderful, and I love it," she said.

The pageant crown was not all that Miss Clark won at the pageant in Charlotte. She also brought home a long list of prizes. The gifts presented to her at the Atlantic City competition make her entry a profitable venture, though Miss Clark insists that profit was the last thing in her mind when she decided to enter.

Included in the list of awards were a $1,000 Pepsi-Cola scholarship, a $100 savings account and a $500 cash scholarship.

Vivid Memories

Miss Clark's memories of the state pageant are vivid. The opening reception "was a time for the girls to relax and let their hair down," she said.

Later in the week the work became more difficult. The 93 contestants for the state crown were divided into three groups, with each group performing in either bathing suit, evening gown or talent compeition. Her group entered the bathing suit phase of the contest Tuesday of pageant week, the evening gown competition Wednesday night and sat out Thursday night.

She entered the talent compeition Friday night performing a ballet dance. "My talent was lousy because I didn't any energy left," she admitted.

Another contest to the state pageant from UNC, Patti Fields of Chapel Hill, also won an award at Charlotte. She was named the most photogenic contestant by news photographers covering the event.

118 Years Is A Long Time To Sing, But The UNC Glee Club Never Tires

You can do an awful lot of singing in 118 years.

But the UNC Men's Glee Club which was founded here just that long ago has never tired of it.

Musty programs and yellowed newspaper clippings of the past history of the club bear the names of a number of distinguished North Carolinians. Over the years, the Club's annual tours and concerts have taken for themselves a place in campus tradition.

Began In 1848

The Men's Glee Club was founded in 1848 and is now celebrating its 75th touring year. Just home from a second trip to the World's Fair in New York, the 50 club members are busy raising money for a tour to Europe next summer. The club's director, Dr. Joel Carter, is in his 15th year with the group.

The club had its beginning one Sunday morning in 1848 when Charles Phillips, tutor in mathematics here, led the singing in compulsary chapel services. Armed with a tuning fork, he managed to get the students to sing with some degree of precision and good tone quality.

Karl P. Harrington, talented musician and Latin professor, is recognized as the "official organizer" of the club. He initiated competition for membership in the vocal group.

"Old North State"

In 1878, the Men's Glee Club became the first group to perform the N. C. State song, "The Ole North State." Fifty years before it became the state song, the Club sang it in a concert on University Day, October 12th, the anniversary of the founding of the University. At that time, it was commonly known as the tune which had been set to a poem written by Judge William Gaston.

With only 16 members, the Club travelled 750 miles by train and horseback during their first concert season in 1892 to sing 13 concerts before 2500 North Carolinians.

Alma Mater

The UNC Alma Mater, "Hark the Sound," was written for the Glee Club's Commencement Concert in 1897. It was popularized by one of the Club's earliest and most noted quartets: Dr. Charles S. Mangum, Charles T. Woollen, Gaston G. Galloway and former Governor J. C. B. Ehringhaus.

During the gas - rationing war year of 1943, all 60 members of the Club hitch-hiked to Raleigh for their only out-of-town concert that season.

The group boasts a repertoire of sacred music, operatic works and novelty selections. In 1957, the Club made a long - playing recording of UNC loyalty songs.

Recording Artists

The group is the first college glee club to be asked to record for RCA Victor Broadcasting Company. Their popular long - playing album, "Hark The Sound," features a medley of college, folk and religious songs. In addition to the alma mater, other selections include "The Old North State," "Old Chapel Hill," "Carolina Victory," "The Blue Tail Fly,' 'and "The Lord's Prayer."

UNC's singing Tar Heels have participated in the National Intercollegiate Glee Club Contest, the Virginia - Carolina Prize Song Contest fo Men's Colleges, and the Southern Intercollegiate Glee Club Contest.

Last June, the Glee Club was chosen to represent the state and the University at the World's Fair in New York on "North Carolina Day." Harmonizing on the stage of Kennedy Plaza, the students were part of the state's delegation of 115 entertainers for the Fair.

If the group succeeds in raising the required funds for a concert tour of Europe next year, it will not be the first trip abroad for the group. A similar trip was made in 1927 under sponsorship of Alanson B. Houghton, United States Ambassador to Great Britain.

Concerts were given in Paris and London and a special program was presented at Stratford-On-Avon for benefit of the Shakespeare Memorial Foundation.

New Cafeteria Will Serve By 'Scramble' System

Harry W. Chase Cafeteria, UNC's newest place to eat, is finally ready — more or less.

Food Service Director George Prillaman said: "We've been fighting a real battle to get the cafeteria open. We tried to have it ready for the freshmen but several construction delays slowed us up."

The cafeteria is of contemporary design with a vast expanse of windows and concrete columns. The exterior is set in native stone and red brick with a terrace of concrete and stone. Concrete benches are set about the terrace.

Upon entering the building, students are greeted with a restful atmosphere, blue and white with soft lighting.

One lounge will be used as a multi - purpose room for banquets and meetings.

A winding staircase leads to the mezzanine floor where food lines are set up. Two lines, featuring the "scramble" system are at extreme ends of the floor. Each line is identical and will be checked out by two cashiers.

The "scramble" system will allow students to go through just a portion of the line — such as salads or desserts — without having to wait to be checked out.

The 240 vinyl mahogany-finished tables will seat two, four or six people. Red, yellow and dark blue chairs will lend a note of color and a practical design.

Students will be expected to clear their own tables by placing the blue trepazoid trays on a conveyer belt after eating.

The kitchen is outfitted with the most modern equipment available. Many new work - saving devices have been installed, such as a rapid potato peeler, a pot washer and large mixers. All equipment is stainless steel.

The kitchen floors are marble and the floor is covered has proved to be more durable and sanitary.

The entire kitchen is air-conditioned. A modern ventilation system has been installed around the kitchen area to prevent an overload on the air - conditioning system.

The central baking unit and the central meat - processing area for the entire campus will be in Chase.

Food is prepared in the lower level kitchen and sent up in hot bins by elevator to the serving areas.

Prillaman termed Chase "one of the most modern and complete cafeterias of this kind available to university students."

Approximately 4,000 students can be served during one meal period.

"Conditions will be crowded and confused in the first few weeks until students become more used to the system and the problems that will naturally arise can be worked out," Prillaman said.

Having trouble finding a place to live? Housing Director James Wadsworth won't be much help to you, but at least he is sympathetic. To every unsuccessful lodging-seeker he turns away, he gives a pamphlet — "Outdoors in North Carolina: Camping, Hiking, Nature Study."

Coke Gets Campus Drink Franchise

An exclusive vending machine franchise covering most machines on campus was awarded to the Durham Coca-Cola Bottling Co. under a new University policy now in effect.

Though all machines belonging to other distributers have been or are currently being removed, soft drinks now available will continue to be available.

The franchise was awarded to Coca-Cola after bids from a number of vending operations in the area were considered. Tom Shetley, Book Exchange director, announced the change in policy early in August.

"No competitive machines will be offered by large - capacity Coke machines. He gave the following reasons for the change from multiple franchises to a single franchise:

1. Large batteries of unsightly, worn - out machines cluttering up many campus locations;

2. A desire to start over again with new equipment;

3. A desire for better service and maintenance of machines located on campus.

The vending of cigarettes, candy, crackers, and sandwiches will also be handled by Coke.

Vending machines in Graham Memorial, the medical complex, and athletic department property will not be affected by this change in policy.

All Coke machines on campus prior to July have been removed and replaced with larger and newer machines.

Service and maintenance will be expedited by the installation of a direct telephone line from the Book Exchange office in the Y-Building to the Coke bottling plant in Durham. The bottling plant in turn will have continuous contact with radio - dispatched supply and maintenance trucks operating on campus.

Prices for products vended on campus will not be affected by the change in policy; however, the University scholarship fund, which received the proceeds from the vending operations, will be getting a larger share of the take.

Shetley said that if the new contract had been in effect last year, the fund would have received "many hundreds of dollars more," but said that he was not authorized to disclose exact figures involved.

Kenan Rand, president of the Durham Coca - Cola Bottling Co., said that the concern was "anxious to give the best service possible," but also refused to disclose any figures involved in the change-over.

"Very few people realize," Rand explained, "that we run a full line vending operation in addition to our drink bottling and distribution."

Other vending operators who were forced to remove their equipment after losing out in the bidding expressed strong disapproval of the franchise system.

T. M. Emory of the Durham Dr. Pepper Bottling Co. said that his concern had approximately $25,000 in equipment invested on the campus, all of which had to be removed.

This represented the largest investment mentioned by a vender, but all concerns questioned said that they had in excess of $1,000 in vending machines placed at UNC, also mentioning that the removal and transport of the machines to a new location elsewhere would involve considerable expense.

New Seats Installed At Varsity Theater

The Varsity Theater will be closed today for the first time in its history. The one-day interruption in business is for the installation of new seats.

The Varsity is putting in "love seats," which are leargе enough for two, without a dividing arm.

The Varsity will resume its regular hours on Thursday.

The Honor System: An Important Part Of Carolina Life

During this first week of the school year at UNC, it is less than original to make the statement that this year's freshman class is the largest in Carolina history.

However, it is an often overlooked fact that this year a record number of students will participate for the first time in the working of an honor system.

Unlike the proctor or monitor systems with which most students were familiar in high school and prep school, the honor system does not treat cheating as a game for students to play against their instructors.

Rather, the honor system is designed to aid students in developing a mature mind by making the strength of the system highly dependent upon the individual student's sense of responsibility.

One's experiences here at Carolina are reflective on those experiences he will encounter in later life, and under the honor system students should learn to cope with the problems of daily living.

The system is a positive one designed not to restrict the actions of Carolina students. Its strength relies upon the assumption that integrity is nurtured in all people with a common purpose and a mutual respect for the truth.

Under the honor system "you are on your honor not to cheat, steal or lie; and if you see another student doing so, you are on your honor to report him to the appropriate student council."

Under this system each student has a responsibility both to himself, in upholding his own personal integrity, and to the University, in upholding the standards to which it adheres and which are characteristic of the campus.

The students themselves are responsible for its success. In all cases of violations, students are responsible for handling the procedures, making decisions and applying punishments.

THE HONOR CODE

"You are on your honor not to cheat, steal, or lie; and if you see another student doing so, you are on your honor to report him to the appropriate student council."

THE CAMPUS CODE

"You are bound by your responsibility as a gentleman to conduct yourself as such at all times, and further to see to it, insofar as possible, that your fellow students do likewise."

Professors are not required to be present during quizzes, and the signing of the pledge, "I have neither given nor received aid on this quiz," is play of the student's adherence to the honor system.

All students are obligated to report any violations they witness. The best way to do this is to ask the student to turn himself in to either a member of the honor council, teacher, dean of men, or a member of the attorney general's staff within 24 hours.

After this time, the reporting student may check with the attorney general to insure that the violator has complied with his request.

Hand in hand with the honor code goes the campus code:

"You are bound by your responsibility as a gentleman to conduct yourself as such at all times, and further to see to it, insofar as possible, that your fellow students do likewise."

The basic sense of human values and a code of conduct to which one should adhere as a gentleman make the campus code an automatic pattern of behavior for most students.

The honor code is somewhat more complex, and it is not infrequent that a violator of the code will admit that he did not realize he was committing a code violation.

These major violations constitute an honor code offense:

Lying and stealing.

Falsifying of class rolls. A student may, under no circumstances sign either the name or the initials of another student on the class roll. If he requests another student to sign his name, he is as guilty as the signer.

Signing false names to a library card.

Illegal use of old labs for present lab work. While some instructors do sanction the use of old labs in preparing current reports, many do not. Students should find out from their own instructors what their policy is on this matter.

Seventy - five per cent of all freshmen violations and 20 to 30 per cent of all men's trials involve plagiarism.

This offense involves not only copying someone else's work verbatum but also paraphrasing or using an author's original thought.

In relation to judicial matters, all students should familiarize themselves with the composition and functions of the Men's Council and Women's Council, as well as the powers of the courts and the rights of the accused.

These councils are not law-making bodies. Rather, they exist mainly for the primary purpose of helping all students to uphold the high ideals of honor existing at Carolina.

In various locations on campus there is a poster with a simple message. And the thought should be well taken by all Carolina students — new and old: "It's our honor system — let's keep it.

Theater Has Served As Stable, Dance Hall, Bath House

By PETE IVEY

Ghosts of long ago stalk the stage and aisles of the Playmakers Theater in Chapel Hill. And it is not only owing to the dramatic tradition of the building, brought on by thespians who have articulated behind its footlights.

The home of the Carolina Playmakers is in a building that is one of the oldest on the campus. It has in its years housed horses from General Sherman's Army, served as a dance hall for Carolina students, was the University Library for years. It also has been a bath house, a central place for shower baths in those early days before dormitories were equipped with such amenities. It has been the University's Law School building, and once chemistry labs were in the basement.

The Playmaker Theater's real named for Governor Benjamin Smith, who donated 20,000 acres of land in Tennessee to the University — some of the money to be used for a new building.

The building was first a dance hall. A short time later it was converted into a library During the Civil War, Sherman's Army occupied Chapel Hill. Chancellor Emeritus Robert House tells this story:

"A squad of Michigan cavalry, stationed in the village, found that the book stacks in the library made very good stalls for the horses.

"Ever since that time, Michigan horses have been noted for their intelligence, and Carolina students for their horse sense."

The front of the Playmakers Building has a most unique cornice on the tall columns. These are corn stalks, and were fashioned by a convict who labored in this artistic venture for the pay of ten cents an hour.

It was in 1925 that the Carolina Playmakers, on the upsurge under the influence of Professor Frederick H. Koch, took over the Smith Building, and it has popularly been known as the Playmakers Building since that time. The Carnegie Corporation gave $13,000 and the Legislature $25,000 for renovations.

The theater was designed in 1850 by architect Alexander Jackson Davis of New York. Archibald Henderson describes the building this way:

"Davis placed upon the campus its most beautiful building, Smith Hall a structure of impeccable proportions, the perfect portico with classic Corinthian pillars showing a delightful variation from the Hellenic norm in the capitals of wheat and corn plants, with foliage of grace and beauty, symbolic of the native American landscape."

In the 300 years since North Carolina's beginning, this building, Smith Hall, stands as one of the lovely architectural structures of North Carolina, one of the half dozen or so striking contributions to American architectural genius.

So the ghosts that walk through Smith Hall are not only the play-actors speaking the speech trippingly on the tongue, but also lawyers debating their legal points, chemistry professors in white coats with crucibles, librarians and books, students dancing to a light Virginia Reel, boys yelling in the central campus showers and singing in harmony with bathers and singers. Michigan horses, who were transient guests, and the generations of Carolina Playmakers whose exploits have been known on stage, screen, and the TV camera.

This Year With The UNC Playmakers

Harry Davis, director of the Carolina Playmakers, has announced the lineup for the group's 48th season and also a new policy regarding student tickets.

Special season ticket rates will again be offered to students of the University. Each student is eligible to purchase one season ticket for himself and one for a guest.

The books for the five-show season will for four dollars each, a saving of 60 per cent over the regular admission price of $2 per show, Davis said.

In previous years, holders of student season ticket books could attend only opening night performances, and the tickets were for general admission only.

This year, however, student season ticket holders will be entitled to exchange their coupons in advance for reserved seat tickets for any performance date, according to Davis.

The 1965-66 season will open with "The Mikado," Gilbert and Sullivan's oriental comic operetta, Oct. 15-17 in Memorial Hall.

"The Summer Tree," a new romantic play by UNC's Schubert Fellow in Playwriting, Randolph Umberger, will run from Nov. 9-14.

The comedy "Holiday Mountain" will open Jan. 11 and run through Jan. 16.

Fourth on the bill is Oscar Wilde's "The I'mportance of Being Earnest," March 22-27.

The final production of the season, Ferenc Molnar's "Liliom," will be presented under the stars in the Forest Theater May 13-15.

WHY WE CARRY GANT

There's more than fabric superiority in Gant. In addition, "needled into the warp and woof of every Gant shirt" — there's flair-fit show — three vital inherents that make all the difference when a man wears a Gant.

We chose Gant because they take shirt making seriously. They're hard to please (like we are) when it comes to fit of collar, its roll, its profile—how much it shows above the suit collar. They're fastidious about the way the body of the shirt drapes and folds. All must integrate to achieve that viable ingredient which gives comfort and aplomb. In substance, Gant shirts are keyed to the discerning tastes of well groomed men who appreciate quality. These men are our customers.

Dickson Takes Ban Stand; Newcomers Indoctrinated

By JOHN GREENBACKER
DTH Staff Writer

Student Body President Paul Dickson called for repeal of the state's speaker ban law at a special orientation assembly Wednesday night and drew a standing ovation from nearly 2,000 freshmen and transfer students in Memorial Hall.

Attacking the law as "both un-American and un-Constitutional," Dickson described it as "one of the largest problems facing the University today.

"We are students of the University of North Carolina would definitely favor repeal of the speaker ban law," he said.

The speaker ban was passed during the closing minutes of the 1963 North Carolina General Assembly.

The law prohibits known Communists, members of the Communist Party, and those who have taken the Fifth Amendment of the Constitution in connection with subversive activities from speaking at state supported institutions.

Accreditation

Dickson cited the University's possible loss of accreditation from the Southern Association of Colleges and Universities because of the speaker ban's restrictions on academic freedom.

"The Association, as well as many prominent North Carolin educators, fear and condemn control of the educational process by a political body," he said.

Law Reversal

Dickson called for a revision to a 1941 North Carolina statute which prohibited speakers at state institutions from advocating the violent overthrow of the government.

He said there were no violations of the 1941 law or any prosecutions under it.

"The critical difference between the 1941 law and the speaker ban law," Dickson said, "is that the former allowed noted world figures to speak on non-political topics and the latter does not."

Dickson said that while campaigning for the student body presidency last spring he met only one student who favored the speaker ban.

"I want it known," Dickson said, "that as long as I am student body president, Student Government will not fear to risk its very being in fighting for repeal of the speaker ban law."

Dickson also told the new students of plans for campus judicial reforms, improvement of undergraduate instruction, and a proposed campus carrier current radio network which would broadcast music and news of student interest.

He called for the expansion of this year's course evaluation booklet to cover as many of the University's 1,200 courses as possible.

Cheerleaders Lead Parade For Victory

UNC cheerleaders will lead a pep parade across campus tonight, ending with a pep rally on Emerson Field in preparation for the Tar Heels' tilt with the University of Michigan here tomorrow.

According to Jerry Houle, head cheerleader, the parade will be organized in the Planetarium parking lot at 8:30 p.m.

From there the group will move eastward on Franklin St. and down Raleigh St. to Woollen Gym, picking up students from all the residence halls along the way.

Then the paraders will proceed past the Bell Tower and through Scott College (Parker, Teague, Avery, moving toward Morrison, Ehringhaus and Craige.

The last leg if the victory march will carry the group by Memorial Hospital and Carolina Inn and finally up Cameron Ave., past South Building, and onto Emerson field for the pep rally.

Coed's Dean Names Aides

Mrs. E. Jackson Flahum and Mrs. Larry S. McDevitt have been appointed assistants to the Dean of Women. They replace Mrs. Peter Walker, the former Daryl Farrington, and Miss Sue Ross.

Mrs. Falghum graduated from Carolina in 1958. She is past president of the Valkyrice and was chosen "Miss Alumna" by her class.

Mrs. McDevitt is a 1964 graduate of the UNC School of Nursing. She served as secretary - treasurer of the Order of the Old Well and secretary of her freshman class.

Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael also announced three changes in dormitory administration. Mrs. Celeste Leffingwell, Spencer Hall hostess, replaces Mrs. Allen Thurman; Mrs. Sam Carrington replaces Mrs. Hal Mixon as third floor Nurses hostess; Mrs. Mixon is Winston Hall hostess.

Miss Carmichael also announced the appointment of 15 graduate counselors who will serve in women's dormitories this year. They are Sandra Asher, Fontaine Belford, Mary Chisholm, Mary Evans, Elizabeth Griffin, Joan Heighes, Susan Hinman, Margaret Jackson, Margaret Ann Smith, Fatma Ramazonah, Judy Rockefeller, Patricia Waties, Anne Vick, Margaret Whittecar, and Nancy Walker.

"This office considers the position of graduate counselor very important to the welfare of our women students," Miss Carmichael said. "The graduate counselor is young enough to see life through the eyes of a student, and yet sufficiently old enough to give another demension to student activities."

Protests Begin Again At UNC; SPU Pickets Hound Dog Missile

'It Surprised Only Frosh'

By WILL BERNARDIN
UNC News Bureau

Student Peace Union picketers staged a two - man parade in front of a U. S. Air Force "Hound Dog" missile in Y-Court yesterday.

But the picketing of the UNC's Air Force ROTC display was a decided flop.

The SPU had set up a table to recruit members also, during their demonstration. They recruited no one.

Two students, Chuck Schunior, a sophomore from Park Forest, Ill., and Chairman of the SPU, and Gary Waller, a graduate student from Versailles, Mo., and not a member of SPU, carried the signs.

The students were picketing in an attempt "to get people to think about the world situation" and "to give out more information than Johnson and the State Department do."

Schunior said, "Johnson is well meaning, but he's gotten caught up and he hasn't really got too much control over the situation." One of the signs read, "Johnson promised peace. Who won the election?"

In reply to the statements about President Johnson, Jerry Rutledge, secretary of the Young Democrats Club, which had a recruiting table about ten feet from the picket line, said, "we support Johnson's stand on Viet Nam."

Rutledge unconcernedly commented about the demonstration, "picketing has become an accepted thing. Nobody pays much attention to it anymore. Some of the fresh men were excited, but that's about all."

Another demonstration against SPU was scheduled for later in the afternoon, but it never came off. There were two signs pinned to a table near the SPU display saying, "Let's Hear it for the Hound Dog," and "support USA, Oppose SPU," but the rumored larger scale show never occurred.

Picketer Waller, who is not an SPU member but who sympathizes with this cause, said that the Air Force display was against the national interest. He also said that he wanted "to show that we can speak freely."

Parking Rules Try The Impossible: 3,900 Automobiles In 2,100 Spaces

By ED FREAKLEY
DTH Staff Writer

If you are among the 3,900 lucky people allowed to park on campus the odds are almost 50-50 that you won't be able to squeeze into one of the 2,100 available spaces.

According to Robert F. Kepner assistant to Dean of Men William G. Long, an estimated total of 5,200 cars have been registered during this first week.

Of this number, 1,758 cars belong to students living on campus and have 1,500 available parking spaces. Commuters, those living farther than 20 minutes walking distance of classes, have registered 2,200 cars for 600 available spaces. However, commuters will also be allowed to park in all other student parking areas.

Town Students

Town students, who are not allowed to park on campus during restricted hours, have registered an estimated 1,200 cars.

Kepner said there have been about 1,200 more cars registered than last year's first week total of 4,000. He said the figure at the end of last year grew to about 6,000.

Motorcycles are not included in any of these figures.

Kepner said that over the summer there had been an over all decrease in the total number of parking spaces.

Kepner has worked this summer zoning the parking areas and attempting to fit all the cars in their allotted spaces.

Regulations

Here is a run down on student stickers and where you may park on campus during the restricted hours which are 7 a.m. through 6 p.m., Monday through Fridays, and 7 a.m. through 1 p.m. on Saturdays.

For the purposes of parking on campus the campus is defined as the area bounded by Franklin St., Battle St., Country Club Rd., Ridge Rd., Manning Dr., Hibbard St., Mason Farm Rd., Pittsboro St., Cameron Ave. and columbia St.

Those with "G" stickers may park in "G" areas only which included the Craige, Morrison and Ehringhaus lots, Ridge Rd. and the parking area in front of Scott College to the Kenan Stadium entrance.

Those with "H" stickers may park only in "H" areas including Country Club Rd., the areas on the road directly behind Everett and Lewis Halls, the road behind the tennis courts, South Rd., the Monogram Club lot and the Rams Head Lot.

'Ban All Except 100 Per Cent Americans'

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

Art Buchwald thinks that the North Carolina speaker ban law is a blow for truth, justice and the American way.

The famed syndicated humor columnist recently told the Daily Tar Heel that he "not only agrees with the State Legislature and the American Legion about the ban, I also think all speakers — Communists and non-Communists alike — should be barred from state - supported campuses; that is, all speakers except state legislators and Legionnaires."

For good measure, Buchwald agreed to be photographed (without his cigar) waving an American flag on behalf of the ban, but he would not pose with the "Stars and Bars" — even as a gag.

He said North Carolina is the only state with such a law "because Tar Heel students, as the State Legislature has made quite clear, are the only ones in America susceptible to subversion by foreign ideologies.

"In my opinion, it doesn't matter if UNC loses its graduate students and its accreditation, just so the remaining students are 100 per cent American."

The nationally syndicated satirist will soon have a record out called "Sex and the College Boy." To collect the necessary information, he questioned 200 students. He found that none of them admitted "having an affair" — which "greatly restored my confidence." Buchwald, however, confessed he did no research on the UNC campus.

"When I hiked down to see my girl in North Carolina on my way to joining the Marines, I stayed at a Carolina fraternity house. I was there long enough to get the feel of the place before I left."

Buchwald views formal education as "baloney, but I don't knock it" although "nowadays there are more and more phoney educated people." He himself dropped out of high school, spent some time with the Marines, resumed his education — and soon abandoned his studies at the University of Southern California. He is quick to distinguish between formal education and knowledge.

Constantly in demand at $1,500 a talk, Buchwald regrets that the big colleges "don't pay you to speak since they consider your speaking there a big honor. The small colleges do." Thus, he thinks little New Haven College is a much better institution than, say, Harvard. "After all, the only way to really honor me is to hand me a check."

According to Buchwald, the President's attitude toward him probably hasn't changed since a recent Newsweek interview. "Some of my inside sources at the White House tell me that President Johnson reads me and chuckles. Other equally informed sources tell me that LBJ does not read me. I suspect the truth lies somewhere in between; he reads me but does not chuckle."

Vice President Humphrey is "a big fan of mine," and Barry Goldwater is "one of my regular readers. We're very friendly." Richard Nixon and Buchwald "get along well. It's his secretary who gets mad for him."

On his office walls he keeps the crackpot letters he receives. He exhibits these souvenires of his trade as members of a German dueling team would display their scars, a fisherman his biggest catch, or a press agent a photo of his best stacked client.

Jews, he said, "have a great tradition of turning unhappiness into humor. They find it's easier to laugh than to cry, and besides, it pays better.

He uses the column to blow off steam, confessing that if he weren't writing for his 235 papers, he'd "be a mean man, perhaps rob a bank. On the other hand, who knows? Maybe without my column I'd be a great lover."

Buchwald, though, will probably stick with the column. "I made $155,000 last year," he told Newsweek, "and I'm now negotiating a loan to pay the taxes. I remember walking past Cartier's with my wife and I said, 'Remember when I used to buy stuff there — when we were poor?"

Buchwald's a liberal, "but I don't like labels. I wish I could be more a political." He doesn't lambast Republicans these days as much as he formerly did, since "they're not as important as they once were." He's a firm believer in "the one and a half party system."

At times, Buchwald is hated — even by his enemies. One column drew this comment from "A Frankford Christian Woman": "I was absolutely sickened by the enclosed column . . . I would not even tell my husband I am writing to you; I am ashamed I have even read your column. Next time I will know better."

"IN MY OPINION it doesn't matter if UNC loses its graduate students and accreditation, just so the remaining students are 100 per cent American."

"REPUBLICANS are not as important as they used to be. I believe in the one and a half party system."

Child Taken From School

A UNC student and father of a 3-year-old girl swore out a warrent Sept. 13 against a man for the alleged kidnapping of his daughter from a local nursery school, according to Chapel Hill Police Chief William Blake.

Blake said Hugh Heigh, 26 Willow Dr. Apt., swore out the warrent for Michael Cary after Cary and Heigh's former wife Joan Heigh supposedly took Sharon Heigh from the nursery school.

Blake said the father told him that he and his wife were divorced and that a Mississippi court awarded him custody of the child.

The child's nursery school teacher told police that Mrs. Heigh came to the school about 2:30 Monday afternoon to get Sharon. She told Mrs. Heigh that she could not take the child.

Mrs. Heigh then told the teacher she would call her husband and see if it was all right to take the girl. As they walked to the phone the woman allegedly turned and grabbing the child ran out the door.

Chief Blake said that copies of the warrant had been sent to the sheriff in Madison, Wis., after Mr. Heigh told him he believed that is where the couple and child had gone.

Thanks A Lot, Ralph

After more than two years of wearisome mess with the speaker ban law, things are finally looking up.

The supporters of the law are obviously scraping the bottom of a notably shallow barrel when they resort to the tactics used by Assistant State Attorney General Ralph Moody.

In a statement that fairly gasps with desperation, Moody suggested in a letter to Rep. David Britt, chairman of the Speaker Ban Study Commission, that the General Assembly could "control the situation" by playing with the University's purse strings if the law should be amended or repealed.

Moody said, "If this statute does turn out to be unconstitutional we still think the people of the state will find some method of controlling the situation and we still believe that the General Assembly has the right to control the allocation of funds that it makes to the institutions of higher learning by means of its Appropriation Acts."

However, we feel this plainly worded threat to intimidate the University will turn to ashes in the mouth of Moody and ultmately create sympathy for the University's stand.

Higher education in general, and this school in particular, have been the butt of attacks for a good while now, and we have faith in the inherent nature of most people — and especially North Carolinians — to rally to the side of those being subjected to excess abuse.

This University is strong and great and is significantly responsible for whatever measure of greatness the state can claim. Most people recognize this, whether or not they say it out loud.

This group is concerned about the quality of education their children are receiving here, and in their own minds this is justifiable grounds for support of the ban law.

But it is a different matter to start talking about taking money away from the school. There can be no doubt that the cutting off of funds is outright strangulation of the university, with no self-deceit about "protecting our children from themselves," as ban supporters now argue.

Those who wish to control speakers on this or any other campus by waving the money bag will find little enough support, and by the extreme irrationality of their reasoning perhaps may raise some new doubts. These doubts will come in the minds of those who have gone along with the gag until now, but will stand for no more.

Now that the Speaker Ban Commission hearings have been held, we feel the tide of opinion about the law is turning favorably. Trying to stop a tide has always been a rather futile job. Stirrings such as Moody's will only hasten it.

'The Date Ticket Situation'

Despite the grumbles going around campus about "the date ticket situation," students aren't getting the raw deal some of them think they are.

C. P. Erickson, director of athletics, shed some light on the subject yesterday by pointing out that the step of putting dating students in two sections in the north stands was requested by students themselves last spring.

He said student representatives to the Athletic Council asked for the number of date tickets allotted for each game to be doubled — from 1,000 to 2,000. It's doubtful that the student representatives asked for seats down about the 10-yard line on the visitors' side, but nevertheless they had to be put somewhere.

Erickson said he feels the "first obligation is to the students" when it comes to passing out the seats, so it was decided that those students who bring outsiders as dates will in effect "pay" for the privilege by not having the choicest seats. And no regular student will lose his place in the south stands to a visitor.

Erickson indicated that this arrangement is by no means absolutely final, and if students are dissatisfied with it, others can be tried.

Anyway, we see no cause for despair yet. The number of dates allowed in the stadium has been doubled, and predictions about this season indicate there is always the possibility that fellows will spend more time looking at their dates than at the playing field — so which yardline he sits on may not prove to be especially vital.

U.S. Reported Using Zippos On Viet Cong

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

WASHINGTON — Reports that GIs are using Zippo cigaret lighters to burn up Viet Cong Villages rocked the nation today.

Earlier, he had held an emergency National Security Council meeting.

Johnson reaffirmed "our intense desire for a peaceful solution to the problem" and said that, for the moment, the lighters would not be used in the vicinity of Hanoi.

House Minority Leader Gerald Ford criticized Johnson's "lack of will to win. Rather than negotiating with the Reds, we should use Zippos to destroy the missile sites near Hanoi. I am fully convinced this is within our military capability."

Replying to Ford's statement, Johnson warned that the USSR might move to enlarge the war should the Zippo attacks kill any Russian technicians manning the sites.

Sen. Wayne Morse of Oregon, in a two-hour Senate speech, called the employment of Zippos "inhumane and contrary to the Geneva Convention."

Morse said he believes the Zippos could eventually mean Red China's entry into the conflict.

Near Saigon, two Viet Cong terrorists were caught attempting to blow up a Zippo lighter fluid tank. Had they succeeded, the United States war effort in Viet Nam would have been significantly set back, according to Defense Secretary McNamara.

U. N. Secretary U Thant said the Zippo attacks are hampering peace negotiations.

Radio Peking said the Zippos "strengthened the will of the oppressed people of South Viet Nam to resist imperialistic aggression."

The Chinese reminded their listeners the People's Republic had detonated its first Zippo in 1964, and would use it on San Francisco should the situation worsen.

Students for a Democratic Society announced that hereafter, only matches would be used to destroy draft cards. "We must not have anything to do with racial genocide," a spokesman for the organization commented.

French President De Gaulle said his country had "learned the lesson of Dien Bien Phu. Zippos are definitely out of place in Southeast Asia."

Columnist Drew Pearson said he is investigating rumors of wartime profiteering by the Zippo Company.

Prime Minister Harold Wilson called for the banning of open-air Zippo testing. Worried about the expected proliferation of Zippos among the smaller powers, he said:

"First the United States had the Zippo; then the Russians; then us; now France and Red China. Suppose Sukarno develops the Zippo as he says he will. Then where will we be in Malaysia?"

Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor, former U. S. Ambassador to Saigon, confidently predicted the Zippos will "lead to a decisive American victory in South Viet Nam. They've been run over by automobiles, used by prisoners in P.O.W. camps and found in the bellies of sharks — without serious damage. Clearly, the United States has a military advantage.

"Besides, Zippo lighters are guaranteed to last forever, and if anything happens, we can always get a new one free from the factory."

Discrimination Will Divide Students In Kenan Stadium

By BOB ORR

United we SAT . . . divided we SIT, or at least that's the way it's going to be, thanks to a new University policy on date tickets.

For those students who buy date tickets, the University has reserved a special section for them. The only hitch is that the section is on the north side of the stadium across from the student body.

Vernon Crook, athletic business manager, announced that the policy change came at the request of the student members of the University Athletic Council. The request stemmed from the problem of seating an increasing number of students and dates from other colleges in the 10,340 seats alloted to the Carolina student body.

Crook said that the only feasible solution at the present was to have those people bringing dates from other campuses to sit on the north side of the stadium between the goal-line and 20-yard line. He said that enough seats would be reserved for each game to accommodate those with date tickets.

As with all decisions, somebody isn't going to like it, in this case, probably those people who bought date tickets and sit on the North side of the stadium.

But look on the brighter side of things. And unfortunately one of the brighter aspects of the situation is going to be the sun. The north side just isn't very shady and those students sitting over there better bring their dark glasses.

One of the inovations for college football is the two platoon system. How effective a "two platoon cheering section" will be, remains to be seen. At least when one side gets tired of cheering the other can pick it up. And those on the north side will be able to see the card section in action for a change.

For those who don't like the new policy, the administration says it isn't permanent. It all depends on how the students like it. If they don't, they can always go back to "first come, first serve" on the south side. And you can't really gripe with the administration because for the first time there will be three games that you can get date tickets at half price.

Students Pay For 'Privilege' Of Not Parking

Editor The Daily Tar Heel:

New parking regulations have been now issued for University students. As the folder indicates, they are indeed strict. I have been issued a 'T' zone sticker. This forbids me from parking anywhere on campus, yet I still must swell the coffers of the University with my five dollar fee.

One glaring inconsistency arises. The campus, as defined by the regulations, includes the portion of the married student's housing in which I live. This means I am not allowed to park my car at home. For this I must pay five dollars?

Even if the University overlooks this difficulty, there is still the ridiculous situation in which we in the Village are placed. We must pay for the 'privilege' of being forbidden to bring our cars to school, even under the most adverse of conditions. Yet the fine line of distinction drawn by the Board of Trustees allows a student on the West side of Mason Farm Road parking rights denied to one living on the East side.

Little can be done to relieve the congested parking conditions, but we shouldn't be forced to pay for stickers which deny us the right to park even in front of our own homes.

Old Salt Gives Advice On Game

Ah yes tomorrow. It will be good to make the treak over to ol' Kenan and take a peek at this year's crop of pumpkin kickers.

Now remember you freshmen, on Saturday you dress up in your Sunday best. Everybody even the pumpkin kickers — wear nice clean clothes.

Why we been going down to sit on the slopes of the valley of the shadow of death for nigh on three years now and don't recollect ever seein' anyone that wasn't dressed fit to kill.

Remember its the clean cut American kids in the Blue and White that you all are sposed to hollar for. Ya booo like a wrestling fan at those dirty coal miners in maize (what ever color that might be) and blue.

When the little fellow with the train whistle whistles for a kick off, and there may be a lot of them, all of you all stand up and hollar like mad, and cross your fingers. That's a tradition here at Carolina or soon will be.

Ya might keep an eye out for the man with ears like Dumbo's. He's the head whip cracker down there in the valley.

Don't forget that when those pretty little things in the skirts that's all the time come up, ask you to stand up, you stand up and fast too. Ya can see better that way.

When the games over, if it ever ends, whether us Tar Heels win or lose you walk out with your head held high and be a good sport.

Then go out and finish off the bulge.

Aging Stewardesses Dance A New Bye-Bye A-Go-Go

By DICK WEST
ROLL CALL

One of the advantages the airlines have over the railroads is the fact that the average stewardess is prettier than the average pullman conductor.

Let us keep this in mind as we examine the testimony of Mrs. Colleen Boland before a House Labor Subcommittee.

Mrs. Boland, representing the AFL-CIO Trasport Workers Union, appeared at a hearing to protest the policy of some airlines of imposing age limits on hostesses.

In some cases, she lamented, stewardesses are arbitrarily grounded at age 32. In others, the ceiling is 35.

Mrs. Boland said this had nothing to do with the ability of the stewardess to balance a tray of food, pour a dry martini, or aid and confort a passenger who is getting green around the gills.

She said it was "pure and simple sex." She quoted one airline executive as saying, "If we put a dog on the plane, 20 businessmen are sore for a month."

Mrs. Boland, who at 37 retains a girlish figure and has no hint of grey in her reddish-brown hair, resented that remark. I don't blame her.

No lady likes to be told that she is over the hill at 32, or for that matter at 62.

Members of the subcommittee were sympathetic. I don't blame them either. There are a vast number of women voters who will never see 32 again.

It seems to me, however, that some consideration should be given to the part that sex appeal has played in the onward and upward march of commercial aviation.

Would the airlines be where they are today if the pioneers had hired little old ladies in tennis shoes to walk down the aisle chanting "coffee, tea or milk?" I doubt it.

It may be unfair, as well as unchivalrous, to turn a stewardess out to pasture simply because she is teetering on the brink of middle age. But caution must be exercised to avoid impeding further progress.

Rep. William D. Hathaway (D. Maine) called for measures to "eradicate from the minds of the public" any notion that airlines should be operated like "flying Bunny clubs." Which is easier said than done.

Perhaps some sort of compromise could be worked out. The airlines could assign a grandmotherly type to help the passenger fluff up their pillows and otherwise get comfy.

Then a couple of young swingers could bring on the drinks.

Moody Rapped For Ban Stand

By HUGH STEVENS

Ralph Moody, North Carolina's Deputy Attorney General, thinks the Speaker Ban Law is just about the greatest thing since gas lights.

He thinks so highly of the law, in fact, that in 1963 he authored a log, rambling legal opinion supporting its constitutionality.

But now an upstart Duke University law professor, Dr. Van Alstyne, who just happens to be one of the nation's true experts regarding speaker regulation policies, has put the Speaker Ban's constitutionality on the ropes by means of a scholarly brief presented during the August public hearings of the Speaker Ban Study Commission. In typical fashion, Moody is fighting back by hitting below the belt.

Earlier this week, in a letter to commission chairman David Britt, Moody suggested that if the law should be held unconstitutional by the courts, the General Assembly might well respond through "power of the purse." He did not elaborate, but his message was clear: budget slashes injurious to the University should be used in reprisal if the Speaker Ban collapses because of internal weakness.

Moody hasn't even lost yet, but he has already put himself on record as the poorest loser this side of Tom Nugent. His statement was as vicious as it was juvenile.

By crying for revenge before a decision concerning the law has even been made, Moody has degraded whatever prior claims he may have had to a true legal mind. He not only lacks the objectivity to concede defeat if it materializes; he comes up short on integrity as well.

The Speaker Ban Law has many facets, and constitutionality is only one of them. Yet it is the only point to which Moody has been asked to address himself. His first opportunity was in 1963; the second was in rebuttal to Dr. Van Alstyne.

On both occasions, Moody chose to project a considerable percentage of his verbiage in the direction of political and other questions not directly concerned with the legality of the law.

— "I find that certain academicians, editors, college presidents and the Communist Party of the United States are on the same side in this matter and are all in bed together in opposition to this act."
— "It is not unjust to say that the AAUP has usually been soft on Communists . . ."
— ". . . academic freedom has nothing to do with the situation at all."

Moody showed an even greater talent for wandering from his assigned dutics in this week's letter to Chairman Britt. He touched only briefly on the technical aspects of Van Alstyne's elaborate brief, admitting that one case around which he built his initial argument had not been finally decided at that time. The remainder of the letter consisted of a flagrant espousal of the pro-Ban cause and insinuative rah-rah tactics on behalf of budgetary reprisals.

"We do not think," he wrote, "it would be unconstitutional for the General Assembly to use the power of the purse in such a situation if it desired to do so and it was the will of the people."

Moody is right about one thing. Such revenge would almost certainly be constitutional. He apparently cares little that it would be childish and downright unethical.

Throughout the entire Speaker Ban controversy, the University and other opponents of the law have attempted to work carefully through established channels to have this odious statute removed. The assumption has been that education and logical persuasion can win over even the most obstinate fores, provided they are honest, reasonable men.

By his remarks this week, Moody has stamped himself as an enemy of another kind. His emnity is not with Communist speakers and their like; it is with the University and its basic purposes. If the law which he favors collapses because it is vague, unenforceable, or a violation of constitutional rights, he will not accept it. Instead he will lash out at the children of North Carolina and their educat onal well-being.

By insinuating that the General Assembly would follow his suggestions of budgetary retaliation, Moody has degraded himself, his office and the legislators of which he spoke.

It is an interesting commentary on the inherent worth of the Speaker Ban Law that it requires such vindicative little men for its preservation.

Draft Call Decreases For A Change

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara today ordered the hiring of civilians to replace military personnel in non combat jobs. He estimated it would reduce draft requirements by about 75,000 men.

This disclosure by McNamara was the highlight of a news conference today in which he asserted also that he is cautiously optimistic over progress of the war in Viet Nam.

Specifically, he said he is "very clear in my own mind" that the buildup in U. S. and South Vietnamese forces blunted the monsoon season offensive which the Viet Cong rebels had hoped would cut South Viet Nam in two.

McNamara said also he intends to push ahead with his controversial plan to merge the Army Reserve and the National Guard, despite a congressional rebuff.

Senate - House conferees refused yesterday to eliminate a provision of the $46.8 - billion defense appropriations bill which bars such a reorganization without enactment of a law to authorize it.

McNamara, who had tried to effect the merger through executive order, said today he feels the congressional action only postpones the move and added:

"We have not given up on the plan. We will continue to sponsor it."

ians to be hired, largely for jobs within the United States, will replace about 75,000 officers and enlisted men on non-combat assignments.

The 15,000 differential, he said, is due to the fact that the civilians will be long-tenure employes whereas many of the military personnel are on short-term duty tours. The resultant frequent turnover in these jobs means loss of manpower effectiveness due to retraining requirements.

Actually, the 60,000 added workers will mean a very small percentage increase in the department's civilian employes who numbered 1,033,000 at lastest count.

Averaged out, the hirings would mean a decrease of a little more than 4,000 a month from the 35,000 draft-call figure set up as a rough requirement to meet the increased manpower needs stemming from the greater military effort in South Viet Nam.

McNamara said that a side dividend of the civilian hiring will be to reduce the number of servicemen whose overseas tours of duty must be extended involuntarily because of the Viet Nam crisis.

In a wide-ranging review, McNamara also:

— Said communist assertions that civilians are the chief victims of U. S. air attacks in Viet Nam are "an absolute distortion of the facts."

demonstration by SPU, said chairman Schunior, was "to serve as a witness against this symbol of American militarism. We are trying to get people to speak out."

"We feel we're speaking for millions," he said. However, the enthusiasm of the many student onlookers was not, perhaps, as uncontrolled as he had expected. Most of them watched for a few minutes, giggled, and then walked away.

Captain Richard Bucher of the Air Force Science Department said that he was pleased at the large number of recruits for the AFROTC.

WCHL First Choice With Campus Smart Set

$200 Prize Offered In Pepsi Treasure Hunt

The Pepsi-Cola Bottling Company of Durham and WCHL will again make some fortunate hunter in this area two-hundred dollars richer.

Beginning September 27th, the Pepsi Treasure Hunt is on, and it's finders, keepers for the 200-dollar cache, to be hidden somewhere in Chapel Hill

Clues to the location of the loot will be given every day—several times a day—on WCHL Radio. But it is important to hear each day's clue, as none will be repeated at a later date, and every one contains information that will eventually reward diligence with cash.

PEPSI . . . Campus Favorite

Thousands have participated in past Treasure Hunts. In 1961, William Young, III, and Kenneth Lundstrom, University graduate students in Chemistry, came up with the right formula—a prize-winning solution that was not only lucrative but lots of fun.

Those waiting for their ship to come in, may find it in a bottle. Last year's winner discovered the money bottled by Pepsi and buried beneath the gravel surface of the new Municipal Parking Lot.

WCHL Program Director Jim Heavner won't drop any hints about this year's contest. His lips are sealed as tight as Pepsi-Cola's flavor, except to admit that a Pepsi bottle is a good hiding place because it pleases the clients and protects the prize.

"The bottle also adds two cents to the prize money," Heavner said.

Plan to participate in this year's Pepsi Treasure Hunt. Your chance to cash in on the clues begins Monday, September 27th when the first clue of the contest will be broadcast on WCHL.

BILL WALKER

CARL SWANN

Announcers Talented Triumvirate

The well-disciplined bass belongs to Win Donat (Donay), on the left. Win's easy going, low-keyed personality is a soothing sound to hear by the dawn's early light. If you have to get up at six, begin the day with Win Donat. He'll help get you on your toes with music that's not too hot; not too cool. But a palatable mixture that is just right.

Donat majors in Zoology, but he's no minor talent in radio. In case you haven't heard, he returns to the air weekday afternoons from four until sign-off; and noon to sundown on Saturdays, with music to suit ANY afternoon mood.

What does he do evenings? He's a fireman, of course, with an occasional night off for good behavior. What's more, Win Donat is one of the all-time great cats.

WCHL is Chapel Hill's only direct line to DAILY, up-to-the-minute local news coverage. Five-minute summaries are heard five times a day, five days a week on LOCAL REPORT, news gathered exclusively for the Chapel Hill audience.

Bill Walker, second from left, is largely responsible for reporting all the news that COUNTS, on campus, in town and throughout the Research Triangle Area. Bill is a 1965 graduate of the University, and a four-year veteran of WCHL — experience that makes him well-qualified for his job as News Director at 1360, as well as a correspondent for stations and newspapers in other North Carolina cities.

Walker is not only a competent news director, but the music he conducts at the WCHL turntables sounds almost as good as his voice, entertainment heard from seven to 10 a.m. every week-day.

But Bill Walker is probably best known as Parkwood's Official Host each Sunday afternoon on the Parkwood Sunday Caravan, a program that is so easy to stay home to. Spend a quiet Sunday this week-end with Bill Walker, the man of the hours from two until five p.m. for Parkwood and WCHL. You'll enjoy it.

Third man from the left is the newest member of WCHL's announcing staff. But Carl Swann has already broadcast his own subtle style without even trying to.

A Tar Heel transplant from Tennessee, Carl combines a quiet sense of humor and quick-witted delivery with a well-tuned ear. He knows a good thing when he hears it, and he shares it with WCHL listeners from 2 to 4 p.m. weekdays, and on Saturday and Sunday mornings.

Carl Swann is also an accomplished juggler. He manages to keep a double major in radio-TV and English, and balance his career on the air at the same time.

If you don't believe it, just listen to Carl Swann on WCHL Radio, 1360 on your dial.

WCHL Enjoys Good Reception In Triangle

Words to this effect are expressed daily by enthusiastic listeners.

A University student "never felt moved to write anyone a letter expressing my enjoyment before, but I can't let this chance go by. WCHL is the only station in the area worth listening to."

Another loyal fan once wrote, "You deserve the thanks of everybody for the high quality of your programs."

Acceptance of WCHL is not limited to Chapel Hill and Carrboro.

Listeners from the surrounding area are equally receptive. A typical response is expressed by a Duke student in "a short note to tell you I am enjoying your selections this afternoon. This has been an exceptionally good day for a habitually good station."

A native of Cuba who teaches Spanish at North Carolina College felt "obliged to express to you my thankfulness for the good music played daily on your Interlude program."

Word from a Durham couple praised "the high caliber of your programming and staff," and added, "We are tuned to your station more than any other."

A UNC State fan complained that he "cannot pick you up. Please increase your power to a million watts and go on 24 hours a day. I miss that beautiful music so much that I've written (a Raleigh station) trying to get them to have programs like yours, but (they) won't change."

The extent of WCHL Radio's widespread appeal is expressed in the following messages from visitors to the Research Triangle area:

From Illinois, an appreciative listener said, "Don't know when I've enjoyed better music or more entertaining commercials."

A New Yorker wrote, "Recently, I was visiting your neck of the woods." I'd like to say thank you for the truly great music I heard while tuned to your station. Being fond of good taste in music, may I commend Radio Station WCHL and its staff for a job well done."

On November 4, 1962, an editorial in The Daily Tar Heel praised the tasteful, adult approach maintained by WCHL—from the selection of music and news coverage, to advertising, contests and station breaks. It also commended the station for resisting the majority in a downward swing catering to "juvenile idiots." The last paragraph suggests:

"It might just be the case that of that mysterious something which makes Chapel Hill the wonderful place it is can be attributed to the sensible style of WCHL's presentations."

Good Music Featured On WCHL

Music is the backbone of all you hear on WCHL.

Lively, bright, young in taste, but never offensive, Caravan's music list always features the current best-sellers including pop, folk and jazz.

"Just like everything on WCHL, our music is keyed to sophisticated, adult tastes," says station manager Sandy McClamroch. "But it's never stuffy. Take Ahmad Jamal, for instance. He's a good jazz artist and he recorded a former rock 'n' roll hit called "The In Crowd." It's selling well and we play it. We wouldn't lay the rock 'n' roll version, but this one has class. Add that to Ella, Doris Day, Frank, Steve Lawrence, Julie London, and you begin to get out picture."

"We could play the top forty, the nifty fifty, the sexy sixty, or whatever the rock stations choose to currently call what they air," Sandy goes on, "but we have preferred to entertain people who think, whistle, or hum along with the song. WCHL listeners are swingers, and we try to give 'em something they can swing with."

1360 Radio No. 1 in UNC Sports

Sports Line-Up Includes Currie and Quincy

Because of the unusual demand, Bill Currie will be back at his usual post when the gun salutes the Tar Heels 1965 football season.

BILL CURRIE

Bill Currie is an unusually demanding guy. A perfectionist at play-by-play reporting, and a past master at playful by-play, Currie always insists on giving an accurate account of Tar Heel action.

Bill begins his 13th season against Michigan tomorrow afternoon at 1:30 in Kenan Stadium. If you can't be in the stands, listen to Bill Currie on WCHL radio. It's the next best thing to being there (especially if it's raining). And you won't miss a thing.

In addition to these exclusive interviews, Caravan's Post-game Show will bring you the latest scores from other games in the Atlantic Coast Conference as well as major games around the country.

No longer will local football fans have to wait for the Sunday papers to read the coaches' comments on the game. You will hear them, live, right after the game on WCHL.

After Bill's colorful description of each game, WCHL will broadcast a post-game show live from Kenan Fieldhouse. Airmen Jim Heavner and Bill Walker will coordinate the show, interviewing coaches, outstanding players and alumni.

And if Clemson Coach Frank Howard kisses Jim Hickey this year, you will hear it described on WCHL.

BOB QUINCY

He can make Tom Wolfe look short-winded without clouding the issue, or survive the rigors of Writer's Cramp without losing his grip.

At WCHL it's a matter of time for Bob Quincy. His 4:45 report of Tar Heel Sports keeps him confined to a capsule at Kenan Field House, Monday through Friday. But Quince goes the five minute limit every day without losing momentum or stumbling over a single extraneous word.

How does he do it?

It's all in the game," says Bob, wiping his award-winning brow.

Hear it for yourself. The Bob Quincy Show, Monday through Friday at 4:45 on 1360. And keep tuned to the Tar Heel Sports Network. WCHL microphones are ALWAYS where the action is.

Allen Calls Soccer Team "Better Than Last Year"

By RON SHINN
DTH Sports Writer

Soccer Coach Marvin Allen calls his 1965 team "one of the best ever." He thinks it will be an improvement on last year's squad, which lost only to nationally ranked Maryland and Navy, finishing second in the ACC with a 5-2-2 record.

Thirty-five candidates turned out for the initial practice session Monday. Drills are scheduled daily as the squad prepares for its Oct. 1 opener here against Air Force.

Allen singled out senior co-captains Drew Murphy and Tom Roberts as the twin mainstays this season.

Murphy is a center forward who is versatile enough to play several positions. Roberts is big (6-2, 200 pounds) with the quick reactions necessary to the good goalie.

Allen, though he insists that his team is better, isn't promising that they'll improve on last year's record. Like football coach Jim Hickey, he faces a tough schedule.

His boys play Navy, for instance, the 1964 national champions. They also face Maryland, which was eliminated by Michigan State in the national playoffs. The Terps have never lost an ACC soccer duel.

The 1965 schedule:

*Oct. 1	Air Force
Oct. 5	East Carolina
*Oct. 8	American University
Oct. 15	N. C. State
*Oct. 21	Pfeiffer
*Oct. 25	Belmont Abbey
Oct. 27	Virginia
Nov. 1	Maryland
Nov. 6	Navy
*Nov. 11	Trenton State
*Nov. 17	Duke

HYPERTENSION

What is "hypertension"? It is the medical name for high blood pressure and ranks second only to hardening of the arteries as a cause of heart disease in North Carolina, according to the North Carolina Heart Association.

Gridiron Queen

Nita Wilkinson, the pert Carolina majorette from Durham, will be in the final stages of a football contest of her own when the Tar Heels face Virginia here Oct. 2.

It'll be Band Day but Nita won't be kicking up her heels out front, helping to lead the way. She'll be in Norman, Okla., instead, competing in the final stages of the Miss Football, USA contest.

Nita, who was Miss Durham in 1964, was chosen to represent North Carolina at the contest to try to bring the title, won last year by a South Carolina Miss, to Chapel Hill.

Nita, who is 5-2 and weighs 100 even, is short for a beauty. She was the shortest girl in the Miss North Carolina pageant year before last.

The Miss Football contest is run much like the state beauty contest. Judging will be based not only on beauty and bearing but talent as well.

Nita, who has been dancing since she was three and has had four years of voice, will perform a song and dance routine. It will be "The Secret Service Makes Me Nervous" from the Broadway play Mr. President.

She will leave here Sept. 26, fly to Dallas, Tex., where she will meet a plane that will carry all the contestants to Oklahoma City. The competition will last an entire week.

"It is the very next week after rush and it is going to be hectic," Nita said, "but of course, I'm looking forward to it very much.

Still Too Early To Tell About Frosh Footballers

By RON SHINN
DTH Sports Writer

North Carolina's freshman football team is still an unknown quality.

"It's hard to tell if this group will be as strong as last year's because we haven't had a lot of practice time to ourselves," Coach George Barclay said.

"The team has been used extensively against the varsity to help them prepare for their game with Michigan tomorrow. So far I haven't had a chance to see what they can do."

Barclay enjoyed his best year at the helm of the freshmen last season. This year's Tar Babies may have a rough time equaling its perfect 5-0 mark.

That team produced some top varsity prospects. Charlie Carr, (6-3, 201 pounds) end from Virginia Beach, Va., will start tomorrow against Michigan.

The team is blessed with big linemen. Terry Rowe from York, Pa., weighs in at 255. Stephen Forrest from Greensboro is at 260 and Tommy Gardner from Plymouth weighs 262. Five other players are 225 pounds or bigger.

Two of Barclay's charges were Shrine Bowlers — Chip Bradley from Lee Edwards High in Asheville and Doug Thomas from Asheboro. John Harris, a quarterback and halfback at Roxboro, played in the East-West All - Star game.

Last year's frosh quarterback Tim Karrs passed 122 times last season, completing 59 for 751 yards and seven touchdowns. Karrs is the number three quarterback on the varsity this season, behind Danny Talbott and Jeff Beaver.

Barclay is confident that a greatly improved ground attack will make up for Karrs loss. He also predicts an improved passing game as the season progresses to go along with a better running game.

"The squad is in good shape physically and we have some new boys that have just come out who have looked good," Barclay said.

The Oct. 1 Tar Baby game with Wake Forest and the final game with N. C. State Oct. 29 will be broadcast over WCHL radio.

The schedule:

Sept. 25	N. C. State
*Oct. 1	Wake Forest
Oct. 15	Virginia
Oct. 23	Duke
*Oct. 29	N. C. State

Harriers Want ACC Crown Back

By BOB ORR
DTH Sports Writer

Tar Heel distance runners will be making an all-out effort to regain the ACC cross county title they surrendered last fall to Maryland.

Leading the way for UNC will be senior captain Jim Meade. He was runner-up in last year's conference meet behind Bob Crombie of South Carolina. Joining him will be senior lettermen Bill Janowitz, Charles Lefler and Bill Graham, who returns after a year in Germany.

Juniors Eddie Daw, Trip MacPherson, Rus Putnam, Charles Worley and Stu Mathews all have a year of varsity experience behind them and could strongly influence the team's record.

Joe Hilton, who starts his second season as head coach, singles out depth and the individual performance of Meade as his team's strong points.

Hilton will be assisted for the second year by Boyd Newnam a graduate student here now and a former ACC champ in the 880 yard run.

Williams, the freshman ACC indoor mile champion, has only one year of cross country experience, but is considered a top prospect.

The schedule:

*Oct. 1	South Carolina
Oct. 8	Maryland
Oct. 11	Wake Forest
Oct. 19	N. C. State
Oct. 23	Clemson
*Oct. 27	Duke
Nov. 2	Virginia
Nov. 8	State Meet
Nov. 15	ACC Meet

* home meets

An Old Story

Lack of space cancelled a column by Sports Editor Pat Stith on why true Carolina football fans are breathing a bit easier about this season in spite of such fees as Michigan, Ohio State and Notre Dame.

Also out was a rundown on UNC opponents for the entire year, the record they made last fall, their hopes for this season, and a column by Fauntleroy, a football expert (?) who claims he has never missed a prediction.

Tomorrow, maybe, the old story will change.

Tar Heels Are Quiet, Confident

By PAT STITH
DTH Sports Editor

Playboy, the magazine which claims to (and does) entertain men, says Michigan is the best football team in the country this fall.

Playboy says that it it is Coach Bump Elliot's defense, headed by two pre-season All-America picks, and a sophomore quarterback who is much like North Carolina's Danny Talbott, that will make the difference.

The experts are sure that Michigan, which crushed Oregon State 34-7 in the Rose Bowl, will repeat as Big Ten Champions.

Most are saying that they will win nine ball games and that Carolina will be victim number one — and by a large margin. The Wolverines are too big, too fast, and too experienced to be beaten, they say.

But Tar Heel players aren't buying it.

They say that they are not lying awake at night worrying over Wolverine press clippings. They say that the "experts" have underrated them, and that on Saturday they will take the field to win.

Jimmy Byrd, at 5-8, 157 pounds, is the smallest player on the Carolina squad. The second string winback sat in his room one night this week and put it on the line.

"What have we got to lose?" he asked. "O. K., so maybe Michigan is number one but Saturday they are going to have to prove it. Carolina is ready to play ball, anxious, in fact. We want to show people we are a good team.

"We are not interested in just playing a 'good game,'" he said. "You remember what Tatum use to say, 'Winning is not the most important thing, it's the only thing.'"

Charlie Davis is 25-years-old, the oldest player on the North Carolina team. He came here in 1958 as a freshman and then dropped out after a year and when into the service where he was twice named All Europe as a fullback.

Charlie isn't buying it.

"We don't have any proven stars on this team," he said. "But we do have everybody pulling for each other. We know we're in good condition and Ed and Hank, our co-captains, have given us leadership.

"Everybody knows Michigan is a good team. We respect them but that's as far as it goes. We have confidence in ourselves."

Danny Talbott, the quarterback who directed Carolina's 21-15 win over Michigan State last year, put it another way.

"Michigan puts on their pants the same way we do," he said. "What it's going to boil down to is who wants the game the most, and we want it awfully bad."

Michigan is due to fly into Durham today.

It's lineup appears set. The backfield leader will be sophomore quarterback Dick Vidmer. The men to watch on defense are tackle Bill Yearby, a 6-3 222 pound senior who made All-American last year and linebacker Tom Cecchini, the team captain who is 6-0, 200 pounds even.

Michigan is in good shape physically; Carolina is not. Three starters have been hurt; one may be out for the season.

UNC will go with three sophomores. Tom Lampman, a red shirt last season, will be at fullback in place of Co-captain Hank Barden, who has been injured. Barden will play, however.

Charlie Carr, who led the frosh last season with 25 catches, will be at wide end and Jim Masino, a converted fullback, will start at right defensive end in place of Lynn Duncan, who is probably lost for the season.

Some 40,000 are expected to be on hand Saturday to see if Playboy knew what it was talking about when it tabbed Michigan as king of the mountain. They'll also want to find out if this quiet confidence the Tar Heels have will make any difference.

Goldwater Says Communists Should Be Allowed To Speak

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

COPYRIGHT 1965
The Daily Tar Heel

"I don't believe that anybody — including Communists — should be prevented from speaking on a state - supported campus," the 1964 Republic presidential candidate said.

"However," he continued, "the University should require Communist speakers to answer questions, and anti-communists should be allowed to provide a rebuttal."

Spoke On Yacht

Goldwater spoke from the yacht Sun-Dance, cruising off the California coast. He was in contact with amateur radio station K4DIG, Alexandria, Va.

BARRY GOLDWATER

Radio fading and interference from other stations interrupted the conversation, but Goldwater later confirmed his views in a letter to The Daily Tar Heel.

Sharp Comments

UNC Chancellor Paul F. Sharp, when notified of Goldwater's comments on the law, said, "We are gratified to learn of Sen. Goldwater's forthright statement on behalf of freedom. The right to speak freely in open discussion on a university campus is not a position monopolized by either liberals or conservatives.

"I am not surprised therefore to learn that an honest conservative is opposed to the speaker ban law. He is one of many," the Chancellor concluded.

Consolidated University President William C. Friday said, "I certainly concur in Chancellor Sharp's observations on the Goldwater statement and I particularly note that Mr. Goldwater advocates procedures very similar to those proposed by us to the Britt Commission."

Eure Refuses Comment

Thad Eure, secretary of State refused to comment on Goldwater's views, saying, "You can understand why I refrain from making any comment on Sen. Goldwater's views since I have refrained from commenting on the views of another U. S. senator which I have in my possession."

Tom Walker, Gov. Dan K. Moore's news secretary, said the Governor will hold to his present policy of not commenting on the ban until the commission set up to investigate the law has made its report. Moore himself could not be reached.

"No Comment"

Assistant Attorney General Ralph Moody said he could make "no comment in any form."

The law which was rushed through in the closing minutes of the 1963 session of the General Assembly, prevents known Communists and those who have pleaded the Fifth Amendment in loyalty hearings from speaking on the campuses of state-supported institutions in North Carolina.

A special nine - member commission has been conducting hearings on the law and its implications. The Commission held its final session September 9, and an announcement of the Commission's future plans expected shortly.

Erickson Clears Ticket Situation

Much dissatisfaction has arisen on campus this past week concerning student date tickets for Carolina football games this year.

Students with dates from off campus will be seated on the visitors' side of Kenan Stadium in sections 11 and 12 (in the west end zone.)

Rick Cramer, president of the Carolina Athletic Association, made the following statement to the Daily Tar Heel yesterday concerning the new arrangement.

"Last year I made requests to the Athletic Council that more date tickets be available to Carolina students, and that the date tickets be reduced in price for more than the usual one or two games per season.

"These requests were acknowledged so that this season the number of date tickets has been increased to 2,000 with the assurance that even more can be available if needed. The price of date tickets has been reduced to half-price for three games — Virginia, Maryland and Clemson), and a 50-cent reduction has been made for the Michigan game.

"The number of date tickets and the frequency of reduced prices are greater this year than ever before.

"However, he continued "the increased student enrollment and the greater number of date tickets has presented a seating problem.

"With 12,400 students, 1,000 student wives and at least 2,000 dates from outside UNC, more space had to be provided. The student section on the South side seats approximately 10,000 and the end-zone bleachers hold less than 3,000. Thus, the student section was extended to the North side.

"But why do students with date tickets have to sit on the North side?

"The first obligation of the Athletic Department is to the Carolina student. Some spectators, by simple arithmetic, will have to sit in the new student section.

"For each date ticket holder who sits on the South side, one more Carolina student is displaced to the North side of the field.

Cramer said that he talked with Chuck Erickson, Athletic Director, Thursday about the dissatisfaction over the new seating arrangement.

"We discussed several possibilities for relieving the situation, but nothing can be decided until the arrangement at the Michigan game is analyzed.

"However, regardless of what future changes, if any, are made, it must be realized that this season for the first time enough date tickets are available so that large numbers will not be denied them, and the prices for the date tickets will be reduced more often.

UNC CO-CAPTAINS Hank Barden (left) and Ed Stringer will lead the Tar Heels into their first game of the season and their first game with Rose Bowl and Big Ten defending champ Michigan. Stringer will operate at center; Barden, who was hurt earlier in the fall, may start at fullback. He is slated to share the workload there withomore Tom Lampman.

Temperature 90 Today; Heels Hope To Make It Hot For Michigan Too

By PAT STITH
DTH Sports Editor

According to the weatherman it's going to be hot today — hot and humid.

When Michigan and North Carolina square off at 1:30 p.m. in Kenan Stadium for the first time in their football histories the temperature will be somewhere between 84 and 90 degrees.

And that's football weather—Carolina style. Tar Heel players, who say they are in top shape, think that the hotter it is, the hotter it's going to be for the Wolverines.

Michigan coach Bump Elliott told the Daily Tar Heel yesterday afternoon after his Wolverines finished working out in Kenan Stadium that the weather would not be a factor.

"I don't think it is going to effect us, one way or the other. We've had some cool weather but we don't expect any trouble with the heat."

Elliott said he definitely would start sophomore quarterback Dick Vidmer, a 6-1, 185 pounder who was knocked out of his job last season when he broke his leg early in the fall.

He'll be backed up by Wally Gabler, a 6-2, 190-pound senior who saw only limited action last year playing behind All - America Bob Timberlake.

Michigan will go with junior halfbacks, Jim Detwiler and Carl Ward. Both were starters as sophomores. Ward, at 5-9, 178 pounds, is their go-go back, and the man to keep your eye on if you can. Detwilder, at 6-3, 217 pounds, is the biggest of the Wolverine backs.

North Carolina will start a backfield that is short on experience.

Max Chapman will replace All-America running back Ken Willard. Chapman, the fellow who beat Duke two years ago on a last minute field goal, is a proven kicking specialist but he carried the ball only one time last season.

Bob Hume, a 6-1, 185 pounder is slated to start at wingback in place of injured Bud Phillips of Charlotte.

Except for Talbott, who was a starter when he was injured in the fourth game last fall, all of the UNC horsemen are newcomers.

Michigan's offensive line is slightly larger at 217 per man. Carolina's defensive forward wall goes at an average of 220 a man.

On defense for North Carolina the boys to watch are end Bo Wood (81), middle guard Joe Fratangelo (63) and tackle Hank Sadler (71).

The defensive quarterback for UNC is linebacker Ronnie Kaplan (66), a 5-9, 214 pound senior from Greensboro, who came here without an athletic scholarship but was quick to prove his mettle.

This year marks the first time since 1957 that Michigan has opened on the road.

Coach Elliott enjoyed his best year last season, winning eight out of nine games during regular season and then smashing Oregon State in the Rose Bowl. His team's only loss came by a 21-20 margin to Purdue.

Michigan got its first look at Kenan Stadium yesterday afternoon in a 45 - minute workout in sweatclothes and helments. They went through drills.

About 150 Carolina fans reclined in the newly - backed Stadium seats or gathered around the edges of the field, watching the Wolverines go through their drills

Wide-Spread Repercussions Expected From Goldwater's Statement On Ban

Former Senator Barry Goldwater's opposition to the controversial Communist speaker ban law has dealt a death blow to the conception that the ban's enemies have leftist tendencies.

This view, although not common in most of the state's urban sections, is especially evident in some of North Carolina's rural areas.

The former senator's views could have a significant effect on the internal workings of the Young Republican organization here in North Carolina. At its recent convention, bitter words were exchanged between advocates and opponents of the law.

The North Carolina Republican Party, as a whole, of course, is also affected. GOP politicians may be less reluctant to discuss the speaker ban now than they were during the last elections.

The Goldwater statement also makes the ban more of a national issue, much like the denial of civil rights in some southern states.

Nevertheless, the issue most likely has not been publicized widely enough to inspire foreign comment on Goldwater's statement. Perhaps the former senator's remarks will inspire one - paragraph articles in English and French leftist publications, but certainly not more.

Secretary of State Thad Eure, in a statement to the DTH, reasserted his reluctance to comment on the statements of any U. S. senator discussing the ban. Though he denied it, he seemed to fear the possibility of the constitutional questions raised by the law becoming nationally important.

Academic critics of the ban — among them UNC Chancellor Paul F. Sharp and Consolidated University President William C. Friday — were delighted to hear of Goldwater's views.

Friday felt the senator's opinion had strengthened the recent proposal made before the Commission studying the law — namely that Communists should be allowed to speak on the affected campuses as long as opposing views are also presented.

In content, Goldwater's statement, of course, offers nothing new. The point where everything that can be said about the gag law had already been said was reached a long time ago.

This was more than abundantly clear to any observer at this month's speaker ban hearings. After a while all pro-gag testimony started sounding alike, and the same was true of the other side's speeches.

It was at this point that the person speaking became more important than the exact words he used, save for which side he spoke.

Goldwater's statement was simple and to the point, and rightly so, because a lengthy and profound could not have been more effective than his few simple words.

Car Towing Starts Monday

Starting Monday all illegally - parked cars will be towed away.

According to Robert Kepner, assistant to the dean of men, all vehicles parked in areas not authorized by their registration stickers will be removed to the Motor Vehicle Storage Compound at the Department of Buildings and Grounds on Airport Road.

In order to reclaim his car, a student must see Alonzo Squires in the Traffic Office, 02 South Building.

A towing fee of $10 and a storage fee of $5 per day will be charged in addition to the regular parking fine of $1.

Kepner pointed out that the Building and Grounds Department locks its gates at 5 p.m. daily and at noon Saturday. Since the storage compound is located within this area, automobiles must be reclaimed before closing time, or owners will be charged for the next day's storage fee.

He also noted that a student receiving three parking tickets will lose his automobile privileges for the remainder of the academic year.

Dave Brubeck Backstage: Beer Cans And A Battered Piano

By ERNEST ROBL
DTH Staff Writer

It was still hot backstage.

Most of the lights were already off, but the bass man asked if a few more of the lights couldn't be turned off to let the stage cool down.

With more than an hour before the next show, the members of the Dave Brubeck Quartet sat in the dressing room and talked shop — Mostly they talked about how hot it was out on the stage during the first performance.

The Dave Brubeck Quartet Swinging

Morello, the percussion man sat bare - chested, his fingers tapping out a steady rhythm on the formica-covered table top, his feet keeping perfect time with his fingers.

All Morello wanted were two cold beers and some toast — a student was dispatched to get these. It was almost 9 p.m., and none of the members of the quartet had eaten since lunch.

A table at a local restaurant which had been reserved for the group waited in vain. They had decided it was too much trouble, and they wanted to sit around and cool off.

Morello picked up his shirt and waved it back and forth in the air — partially to dry it out, and partially to fan himself. Finally his beers arrived.

Paul Desmond, the sax man, picked up his instrument, blew a few notes, and then put it down in favor of a cigarette.

Eugene Wright, bassist, carried his instrument onstage, surveyed the empty house, and then began to tune his instrument by tapping a key on the piano with the bow and then adjusting his strings.

Morello, having finished off his beers, picked up a pair of drumsticks and began tapping somewhat tentatively on top of the dressing room table. Then he tried out the beer cans.

At first only his fingers moved but then his whole body picked up the rhythm, turning a table top and two empty beer cans into an entire percussion section.

Brubeck in the meantime had put his shirt back on, and wandered around backstage somewhat listlessly until he noticed an old battered upright in a corner behind a curtain.

As he walked by the piano, he reached out with the index finger of his left hand and tapped a key. He stopped and tapped out a few more notes. Then he sat down and began to play, with his fingers flowing back and forth over the keyboard producing soft and almost haunting music totally unlike the jazz renditions he is so well known for.

He sat in the dark corner, playing just for himself, because there was no one else around to hear him. The paint was peeling off the piano in a few places but that made no difference to the pianist.

He played for more than ten minutes, until someone came by and said "two minutes."

Brubeck picked up his coat, quickly slipped into it and joined the other members of the group in the wings.

The house lights dimmed, and the hot stage lights came back up to their full intensity.

Slowly the group went out to meet the wave of applause rising from the audience.

Almost before he was seated, Brubeck's fingers were already flowing over the keys of the piano again.

Phi Beta Mu Top Graded Sorority

Pi Beta Phi ended the 1964-65 academic year at the top of the sorority scholastic list with a grade average of 2.6230 after trailing Phi Mu by .012 in the second semester standings, according to a sorority grade list compiled by the Dean of Women's office.

Chi Omega and Alpha Delta Pi shared the honor for the second highest average for the year with a 2.5630.

Next was Kappa Delta with a 2.5367; Kappa Kappa Gamma, 2.5366; Phi Mu, 2.4960; and Delta Delta Delta, 2.4762.

The overall sorority average for the year was 2.6155.

Long Faces And T Stickers

About the only thing that can cause a longer face around campus than six 8 a.m. classes nowadays is a T sticker.

Actually, the K, H, J, G, C, E and D stickers haven't caused many smiles because they have one thing in common with the T sticker — they restrict parking.

For the first time in quite a while, many students are having to walk more than a few minutes to class because of the new zoned parking regulations which prevent leaving a car in any lot except the one designated by the sticker on the left rear bumper.

And the T sticker means the car cannot be parked anywhere on campus at all. Students who live off campus, but within what the university administration considers to be 20 minutes walking distance, get T stickers. It means they either walk to class or compete for the limited number of parking spaces on city streets, such as those near Carolina Inn.

The plight of the T sticker holders points up rather painfully a problem which is acute now and will be a crisis soon. As our classrooms bulge with students, our parking lots bulge with cars. Even now there are almost twice as many cars as parking spaces.

An amazing lack of coordination and foresight on the part of university administrators is mostly responsible for the mess we have today. It is impossible to think they did not see trouble brewing, yet their plans never got out of the talking stage.

We realize that students have cars here only under a privilege granted by the administration. There is no divine right which says students who are fortunate enough to own cars must be allowed to keep them at school. However, we think most administrators agree that an automobile is much more of a necessity than it once was, and they will do what they can to retain the privilege of possession.

There now appear to be three possible courses of action which would affect the parking problem:

1. Ban cars completely. We consider this the most drastic plan, and the least likely to be used, but it is nevertheless a strong possibility.

2. Build parking garages on campus. This would be most desirable from the students' point of view, but cost is a major factor. Each parking place in a multi - level garage would cost almost as much as a room in a new residence hall. Car registration fees might be raised fantastically. Private endowments would probably be necessary to build garages.

3. Outlying parking lots with shuttle bus service to and from campus. We consider this to be the most feasible solution. The university owns property which is suitable for this purpose, and a bus system — either privately or school-owned — could probably be put into operation faster than garages could be built.

This is significant because we think speed is important. The problem has been talked about for quite a while, but as anyone who has made a few of those 20-minute walks will testify, something constructive should be done immediately or sooner.

A two-year study of traffic problems here should be available to officials any day now. We think the administration should at last commit itself to some course of action which will solve the problem and not just shove it under the rug for a few more years.

The rules being put into effect this year are virtually emergency measures and are creating a problem and a half for every one they solve.

We think things should have passed the talking stage long ago, and some solid action from South Building is considerably overdue.

An estimation of the situation in the meantime: UNC students should soon be well - fixed for leg muscles.

LBJ's Congress Rolls On Despite Adjournment Fever

FROM ROLL CALL

Congressmen are citing fresh evidence that "What Lyndon Wants Lyndon Gets." One said the only way Congress can expect to adjourn for the year is to start killing some of the President's Bills.

In one action - packed week Johnson forces racked up easy and in some cases unexpected advances for Washington Home Rule, highway, beautification, foreign assistance, college aid, the war on poverty, and getting a 150-mile-an-hour train rolling to Boston.

Prospects glowed for favorable final action on all these bills and others before the first session of the 89th Congress gets clearance to quit for the year. Everybody agrees the session will last at least until the end of this month.

As the President's already-spectacular legislative score for the year continued to mount, one out-voted Southern dissenter volunteered the thought that Johnson is not likely to quit — or let Congress quit — while he is ahead.

"If we want to adjourn, we better start voting against some of these bills," this unhappy conservative said. There was no immediate indication his suggestion would win general favor. Nevertheless adjournment fever was beginning to set in at last.

Instead of knocking off for the year before Labor day, as Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.) once predicted they would, the lawmakers were accorded no more than a short weekend away from the job.

Tuesday they were back at work, in the House to stamp an okay on a big batch of relatively routine bills plus one — the annual Foreign Air appropriation which used to guarantee a sure-fire session's end battle.

The appropriation of almost $3.3 billion, as recommended Thursday by the appropriation committee, was within pocket change of what Johnson asked.

The Senate meantime began to talk about and, hopefully, act on priority Administration bills to overhaul the immigration laws and extend and revamp the farm program — both already passed by the House.

Some Members were being heard to grumble, at least to each other that with everything that has already been passed and sent to the White House these and a few other items ought to be enough for one year.

However, Johnson's strategy was obvious. His program was rolling as it may never again. As he himself has said, his idea is to get as much done this year as he can, and then let Congress quit early next year to electioneer.

With that in mind the President last week turned on the charm and in some cases exerted the muscle and wrapped up in a hurry a House decision to act on a Senate-passed self - government bill for the District of Columbia. Previously it wasn't given much chance at this session.

Under prodding from Lady Bird Johnson, who started the whole thing, he also built a fire under House and Senate committees which had thought to let his highway anti-billboard campaign lie over until January. Now it looks like Congress will act on this before quitting.

The House already has defied early forecasts to vote for repeal of State Right-to-Work laws, and the Senate will follow suit unless Republican Leader Everett M. Dirksen (Ill.) can filibuster long enough to persuade Democrats they may as well wait till next year.

Both houses have already voted for more and broader assistance for colleges and their students. Differences in the two bills will be ironed out, maybe this week, without much trouble in sight.

Johnson's war on poverty, although criticized, already has got a green light from both houses to double its fire. Only final ratification of a compromise bill remains to be routinely effected.

The House got aboard a Senate-passed bill to pump $90 million in federal money into development of a new and possibly exotic system of ground transportation, including as a starter a fast train that will travel the congested Northeast corridor. Later trains may even run underground, whistling along at airline speeds and bringing Boston within two hours of Washington.

Of course quite a few Johnson - backed bills will be left for next year, probably including a higher minimum wage, gun control, Federal participation in fine arts, improved jobless pay, and preservation of what's left of the nation's wilderness rivers.

But Democratic leaders point out that every Congress continues two years. For the 89th, this is only the first.

Marijuana Use Increases On U. S. College Campuses

A survey of a New York City college last spring found that five of the school's student councilmen, seven of nine on the newspaper editorial board and half of the members of the Theatre Workshop admitted experience with marijuana.

A student at a small midwestern college estimates tha half of the students there have used marijuana, and a respected survey at a large state university revealed that there were 200 to 500 habitual users and 500 to 3,000 "dabblers" on the campus.

The use of marijuana has become a problem on college campuses throughout the country. It is claimed in a current magazine article that school and police officials contribute to the problem of "pot" because they don't admit its prevalence on campus and answer the questions about it.

The cover stoy in the October issue of Moderator, the national college magazine, explores these questions. The article documents the sharp increase in marijuana usage on campus, and points to the central reasons for the increase.

The real problem is the attitude of officials who combat the sources of marijuana instead of the rational for its use.

Some of the important questions are: Should marijuana be legalized? Is it harmful, or merely repugnant to society? Is it the way of the future, as scientist-novelist Aldous Huxley claims, or is it just a manifestation of campus rebellion, as liquor was in the twenties, as sexual license was in the fifties?

Until college administrators will admit that marijuana is on their campus, it will certainly not leave. The police department needs the cooperation of school officials if they are to end the influence of drug syndicates on campus, and the Food and Drug Administration needs the same cooperation if it is to face students with the possible dangers of marijuana.

If the marijuana user is not found and confronted with evidence that his usage of drugs is harmful, the article concludes, "he may well convince the whole world to turn on with him — law or no law."

'Operation Test Maul' Shot On Location With Cast

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

WASHINGTON — Secretary of Defense Clophurt Factnamara revealed the existence of "Operation Test Maul," which, he said, is intended to perfect new weapon systems by having underdeveloped countries like India and Pakistan test U. S. armaments under actual battle conditions.

Factnamara commented: "I'm rather pleased to see how well U. S. - supplied tanks are holding up near Lanore. Nevertheless, we hope that in the future we can build better bazookas. However, we're very worried about the armored personnel carriers we've sent out for evaluation — despite renewed confidence in our machine guns.

"American - donated aircraft, of course, are proving themselves quite capable of adjusting to wartime conditions, though quite a few of them, naturally, have been downed by the missiles we supplied the belligerents."

According to Factnamara, the M14 rifle "seems to be a particularly effective weapon for snipers, even when they are being hunted with U. S. - produced infrared sniper - detection gear."

He added: "Submarines from American shipyards are highly valued by the warring underdeveloped countries, except after the subs encounter U. S. - supplied destroyers equipped with the latest sonar devices.

Factnamara conceded that "Operation Test Maul" has its limitations. "For instance," he said, "we'd be somewhat reluctant to give Nasser some Jupiter - G's and let Israel test our Nike - Zeus anti-missile missile. But we are extremely confident that minor technical complications, among these fallout, can be dealt with — so that eventually it will be possible for Nasser to check out the rockets with his soon-to-be-developed atomic weapons. Meanwhile, we know that his needy but frugal nation can make good use of American wheat."

Factnamara also said: "Although Sukarno's countrymen have burned down several American libraries in Indonesia, the United States is so eager to have him evaluate advanced military radio systems that it might even supply him with the latest communications equipment. Meantime, Malaysia can continue determining how our weapons stand up under tropical envoronments, especially those in which they're used against Indonesia."

Discussing the Chinese question, Factnamara said: "Obviously, certain foreign policy limitations presently prevent us from sending Mao Tse-Tung our surplus B-52's. But this doesn't stop us from thinking that such an arrangement would vastly improve the aircraft's design once we know how the plane will perform in the heat of battle with atomic weapons abroad. A very likely target for Red China might be Taiwan — if we can persuade Chiang Kai-shek to evaluate more of our Sidewinder-equipped jet interceptors.

"For the time being, the United States, I'm afraid, weill have to depend on its experiences in Viet Nam with conventionally-armed B-52s. Southeast Asia, you know, is where we have adopted a do-it-yourself policy as far as the testing of weapons is concerned."

Factnamara denied rumors that he has asked for an appropriation to check out U. S. weapons against uncooperative politicians and troublesome generals. The Secretary of Defense reportedly believes he can use a TFX fighter to gun down B-70s piloted by Curtis LeMay, Strom Thurmond and Barry Goldwater.

Tar Heel News Analysis

Police Faced With Few Clues In Murder Case

By ED FREAKLEY
DTH Staff Writer

Chapel Hill Police Chief William Balke is a man in a frustrating situation. For 47 days and long nights he and his department have been searching for the killer of Suellen Evans.

How do you catch a murderer? What does Blake have to go on? Practically nothing. His description amounts to two words "dark skinned." Blake told the Daily Tar Heel that "We don't even know for sure that the killer was a Negro. All we know is that we found some Negroid hair close to the scene and a witness who said she saw a "dark skinned" man running from the Arboretum after the murder."

The whole case seems futile. The only solution seems to be having the killer confess to police and then do so in court. But as long as the man remains quiet he is safe. No one knows what he looks like. Chief Blake said he might be a foreigner, a Negro or a tanned white man.

For this reason Chief Blake is asking the co-operation of all Carolina students. "We want all reports of men following coeds. It may not seem like much to them at the time, but it could help us a great deal," Blake said.

The Chief said there had been 20 to 30 incidents of coeds being followed on campus during the summer. In most of these cases a Negro janitor was involved. Blake said he was given lie detector tests on three occasions and police are convinced he is not involved in the Evans murder.

Last Spring, Blake said, a coed was attacked in the basement of Davie Hall. The attacker was found guilty at his trial Wednesday and is being sent to a mental institution for observation before entering.

Early this summer a coed ran out of the Arboretum and into McIver Resident Hall. There she asked a girl "do you live here?" The other girl said yes and the frightened coed told her a man had been following her. This happened only five days before the Evans slaying. Police have been searching all summer for this girl, believed to be a student here.

Blake said the reason many coeds don't come forward is because they fear publicity. He said their name will be protected and they need not fear talking with police.

Although the case has led nowhere, Blake refuses to give up. He and his force are checking out every detail. They have questioned many people and traveled throughout the state to do so.

A killer is running loose, perhaps on this campus. He knows he is safe for the time being, at least until he strikes again.

If anyone has any information of any kind, turn it over to Chief Blake. What may seem like a very insignificant item to you, may turn out to be a key link in finding the murderer of Suellen Evans.

Police lead a hard life. They are here to protect you. They welcome help. In this case they need it.

Tar Heel Marching Band Will Perform At Half Time

The University of North Carolina Marching Tar Heels, under the direction of Major John Yesulaitis, will perform today in Kenan Stadium during half-time.

The boand has incorporated a "block progession" drill into its football halftime shows this year.

The sequence involves the formation of patterns of squares while the band marches, spreading out into a larger area and drawing back together.

Following the drill the band will salute both the University of Michigan and the University of North Carolina.

Daily drills have been held since Monday in preparation for this routine.

A spokesman for the UNC Band said that the group is in the process of expanding this year, with its membership now approaching 100.

They will perform at eight of the scheduled 10 games, traveling to State, Duke, and Wake Forest.

Football And The Bottle

Football games of the Roarin' 20's were once described as events inviting raccoon coats and hip flasks. The modern grid attraction, in the South, is all but divorcing both.

The coat is seldom needed. Last year five games were played on the University of North Carolina campus to shirt - sleeve crowds. Games as late as November. Only a fraternity pledge on initiation day would dare wear such a coat.

Drinking at games, which is prohibited on campus and enforced as strictly as possible, has slowed considerably as compared to the old days. Perhaps it is the hot weather; perhaps the games have become so enjoyable the average fan can't afford to miss the action.

"Our starting times of 1:30 p.m. have proved to be quite attractive to the public," notes Athletic Director C. P. (Chuck) Erickson of UNC. "This is rather early in the day for almost anyone to start a party. We want our spectators to have fun, but we definitely discourage drinking at the stadium."

"We try to be quite understanding with our students and guests," says Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey, "but we also take a firm stand against drinking at games. We take special precautions to see that it is not done. We greatly appreciate the cooperation we have received from the public in past years."

"Thrills are expected to be 100 proof," Erickson said. "It is a far better stimulant than the kind that comes in a bottle."

Campus Events For Today

All Campus Calendar items must be submitted in person at the DTH offices in GM by 2 p.m. the day before the desired publication date (by 10 a.m. Saturday for Sunday's DTH). Lost and Found notices will be run on Tuesdays and Saturdays only.

TODAY

Olin T. Binkley Baptist Church will hold its annual free picnic Sunday, 5:45 p.m., to welcome Baptist students to the University. All Baptist students are cordially invited to come, eat, and learn about the Binkley church. Sunday morning coffee and at 9:30 a.m. before the church school. Rides to the church are available from Y Court, Chase Cafeteria, and Nurses' dorm at 9:15, 10:30, and 10:40 Sunday mornings and 5:30 Sunday afternoons. Anyone unable to reach these pick-up points may get a ride by calling 942-4964.

Students for a Democratic Society will hold a meeting for old and prospective members Monday evening at 8 p.m. in G.M. to plan activities for the year.

Rhapsodians Combo sponsored by F.M. from 8 to 12 p.m. in the Rendezvous Room (air-conditioned) Saturday night.

All Attorney General staff members report in as soon as possible.

Episcopal Student Congregation will sponsor a supper 5:30 p.m. at the Chapel of the Cross. The new chaplain Bill Coats will meet students.

LOST AND FOUND

Lost black rimmed glasses on campus Thurs. evening. If found, return to Robert Phillips, 8 Howell St.

Lost Wednesday, Sept. 15, two ten dollar bills. If found; please return to 113 Joyner. Reward.

A Japanese student visiting the campus played the role of a gentleman by helping a coed with her books. As it turned out she walked off with his diary by mistake. He is leaving the state Tuesday and requests the young lady to return his diary to: Kazuhiro Makino, in care of Dr. Harper, 3322 Ocotea Dr., Raleigh.

Demos Organize

Tom Bolch, president of the campus Young Democrats Club, announced that the organization is now conducting its annual membership drive, aiming for large representation at two YDC gatherings this month.

The local organization will provide rides to the state YDC reconvention in Charlotte September 24 through 26. Rides will leave from the Law School.

Information on membership and attendance at the gatherings can be obtained from YDC booths near the registration lines at Woollen Gym and booths in Lenoir and Chase cafeterias.

Tryouts Set

Tryouts for singing - acting roles in Gilbert and Sullivan's comic operetta, "The Mikado," will be held at 4 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. today in Memorial Hall.

There are nine principal roles and thirty chorus parts in the opera, and tryouts are open to anyone in the university community.

That's right, football fans, ol' Fauntelroy will make his pick. That's me, you know. "Lord Fauntelroy is his name. I dropped the "Little" bit a long time ago.

I'm an expert — you see? But don't get me wrong. I'm specialized. Football's my game and I know about everything there is to know about that ol' pigskin.

I get inside information for my football picks. How do you like my disguise this week? Believe me, I had little trouble getting all the "inside" dope I needed.

Oh I forgot to tell you Tar Heel fans one thing. I refuse to predict any Carolina games. I mean let's face facts. I never miss—so why spoil everything by telling you how the game will turn out?

But I don't care about these other guys. So get your money out boys (and girls). Here goes the sure things:

DUKE vs VIRGINIA — Here's your chance DOOK haters. Bill Murray thinks he has a good team this year. As a matter of fact, he claims he's going to beat everyone under the sun. Well, it just "ain't" so. Pick UVA by 3.

Oops! I almost forgot my upset special: Cloudy over Chapel Hill — no contest!

WAKE FOREST vs VPI — Well, VPI wants to get in the ACC and the Deacs want to prove that last year's 5-5 record was no accident. Accidents will happen but Wake should take it by 14.

SOUTH CAROLINA vs THE CITADEL — Coach Bass of USC has been fishing (get it— Ha!) for the right combination for years. The cadets should pay attention — he may have it his year. USC by 11.

N. C. State vs Clemson — Ol' Frank Howard of Clemson has seen some lean years lately so his Tigers should be hungry. Clemson will beat the Wolfpack by 6.

U.M. Challenged By No. 1 Rating

By GENE RECTOR
Assistant DTH
Sports Editor

Michigan is on the spot against the Heels today.

Coach Bump Elliott's Wolverines have been tabbed the class of the always 1-1 tough Big Ten Conference and one of the nation's gridiron elite.

"Yes, it's quite a challenge," aid Coach Elliott, watching his charges go through final pre-game preparations at Kenan Stadium yesterday afternoon.

"We hope to be able to meet that challenge," he said, "but you never can tell for sure until you are under fire.

"I really don't know what type of team we'll have," he continued. "Even the boys we have back from last season will play and act differently this year. The game itself should determine the type of team."

Michigan, who has six defensive and four offensive starters returning from last year's Big Ten and Rose Bow champs, has a problem at the quarterback position.

The problem is to replace graduate All American Bob Timberlake now with the New York Giants. Sophomore Dick Vidmer seems to have the inside track over senior Wally Gabler.

"Both are good quarterbacks and about equal in ability," said Elliott, "but Vidmer will start. Both will see action."

Many experts believe the 85-90 degree temperatures in Chapel Hill will have an adverse effect on Michigan.

"I hope not," said Elliott, "and I don't believe it will. The weather in Ann Arbor has been cool (65-70 degrees), but we shouldn't have much trouble."

Brief Sketches On Carolina Foes

No. 1 — MICHIGAN home Sep. 18 — The Wolverines are Rose Bowl and Big Ten defending champs. Pollsters have ranked them as high as number one this year. Michigan won nine, lost one (21-20 to Purdue) last season. Only commong foe with UNC last fall — Michigan State. The Wolverines whipped 'em 17-10 Carolina won 21-15.

No. 2 — OHIO STATE Away Sept. 25 — It's opening game for the Buckeyes. UNC and Ohio State met for the first and only other time in 1962 at Columbus. Carolina lost (41-7). Ohio State's record last year, 7-2.

No. 3 — VIRGINIA Home Oct. 2 — The Cavaliers won 31-27 last fall; Carolina won 11-7 in 1963 and 7-6 in 1062. Virginia has a new coach, George Blackburn, and two of the best back around in junior quarterback Bob Davis and junior fullback Carroll Jarvis. Virginia ended up five and five last year.

No. 4—NORTH CAROLINA STATE Away Oct. 9 — Seven times in the last nine years Carolina has opened with State. Six of those games the Wolfpack won. UNC won both mid-season matches. Last fall State defeated a heavily favored Carolina outfit 14-13.

No. 5 — MARYLAND Home Oct. 16 — The experts are saying Maryland is the team to beat in the ACC. The Terps have 31 lettermen back allowing Coach Tom Nugent to start a completely veteran offense and nine experienced men on defense. Bill VanHeusen, a sophomore triple threat quarterback who passed the Carolina freshmen dizzy at Kenan Stadium last year, may be the starter. Last year's record, 5-5.

No. 6 — WAKE FOREST Away Oct. 23 — "I'd rather beat Carolina than all the others put together." That's how Deacon first team quarterback Kenny Hauswald feels about Wake's 23-0 loss to Carolina last year. Most of the people who are paid to find out about such things think Wake will wind up near the bottom of the ACC pile. But the Deacons intend to win a few, including the Carolina game.

No. 7 — GEORGIA Home Oct. 30 — It's homecoming. It's also a chance to even a score with the Bulldogs. They smashed Carolina last fall 24-8 en route to a 7-3-1 season and the Sun Bowl championship. All-America tackles Jim Wilson and Ray Rissmiller have graduated and Georgia is saying it will employ a more wide - open passing game.

No. 8 — CLENSOM Home Nov. 6 — Last year UNC whipped Frank Howard's Tigers (29-0) for the first time since 1957. Old Frank didn't like it none either. And he's talking like he intends to do something about it.

No. 9 — NOTRE DAME Away Nov. 13—The Irish, who posted a 9-1 record last season, must find replacements for All Americas John Huarte at quarterback and Jack Snow at end, but the South Benders still seem to be loaded. Jim Hickey, who coached the only Carolina victory over Notre Dame in 1961, would like nothing better than to add another win to his record.

No. 10 — DUKE Away Nov. 20 — Duke, who figures to return to the top in the ACC this season, would like to break a two-year drought against the Tar Heels.

Career Twins Meet When Talbott, Vidmer Tangle

When Danny Talbott meets Dick Vidmer here at Kenan Satdium on Saturday afternoon he'll be shaking hands with a career twin. Both young men, who were heralded for early stardom, took their lumps as sophomores.

Talbott, from Rocky Mount, was one of the most sought-after high school products in the state. He led his high school to an unprecedented triple sweep of state titles in football, basketball and baseball.

In the process, Danny won All State, All Southern and All America honors.

There was little wonder why he entered the university with a tremendous build-up. As a freshman, Talbott proved to be a great prospect playing all three sports.

As a sophomore the picture was equally bright. From his quarterback post he paced wins over Michigan State and Wake Forest. He attempted 46 passes completing 24 for 243 yards and two touchdowns. He also carried the ball for 108 yards in 34 carries.

But stardom was not the case for Talbott. The sophomore sensation was injured in the fourth game with LSU and played little the remainder of the season.

But Danny is well now. He paced the Tar Heel baseballers in hitting with a .362 average this past spring. That mark was good enough tor second place in the ACC.

Vidmer is the starting quarterback for the University of Michigan. Perhaps he would have been last year, but a broken leg sidelined him before the first game. A fellow named Bob Timberlake came along to replace Vidmer and did all right. Among his many honors was All America.

Danny Talbott

So the eyes fo the public will be on both young men here in one of the nation's foremost intersectional contests. They are strikingly similar in physical size. Talbott is a six footer who weighs about 180. Vidmer stands 6-1, weighs 185.

Approximately 40,000 will witness the first meeting between the two schools. They faced one identical foe last season. Carolina thumped Michigan State, 21-15, while Michigan topped the Spartans, 17-10. A touchdown margin in each game.

Michigan is a one to two touchdown favorite against the Tar Heels

UNC Will Win, But Not Over Michigan

By ED VICK
DTH Sports Writer

What kind of football season do Carolina student expect from this year's Tar Heels?

Better than last year's 5-5 showing — or worse?

In a poll of 250 students taken last May, the majority predicted a 7-3 showing, with losses to Michigan, Ohio State, and Notre Dame.

They were most pessimistic about the Tar Heels encounter with Notre Dame at South Bend. Only 36 out of 250 had the nerve to go against the almost national champions of 1964.

Against Michigan and Ohio State, only 40 and 48 respectively would go with the inexperienced Tar Heels.

And the other seven games? All victories, say the students. Two hundred and seventeen picked wins over Virginia and Wake Forest and 196 predicted a good day against the Wolfpack.

But students are not the only ones who make predictions. And the men who are paid to pick 'em do not see things quite the same way.

"Jim Hickey's team has fair prospects and a very tough schedule," reports Inside Football magazine. "The team will have a lot knocked out of it in non-league games. The result will probably be a sub-potential team in ACC games."

Says Sports Review's 1965 Football, "Hickey has failed to produce with better equipped squads. That schedule is likely to complicate things, if not ruin his season altogether." The magazine goes on to predict an 0-7-3 season.

"It would be nice if Hickey uncovered some running," adds THE pigskin previewer, Sports Illustrated. "He is not exactly brimming with confidence. 'We do some things 'Some things we do extremely bad.' "

Today will tell.

Ya ever notice how fast and silent the road runner runs? Look carefully next time. He's riding a Honda, that sneak.

Heck, I always thought that he could run that fast.

Legislators Say They Are Ready For Action On Ban

By LAWRENCE MADDRY
and
DAVID WITHERSPOON

If members of the State House of Representatives voted now on the speaker ban law, it would be amended or repealed.

This was the indication of a poll taken last week by The Chapel Hill Weekly.

The results of the poll showed:

— 56 Representatives in favor of amendment of repeal of the law.

— 41 in favor of keeping it on the books.

— 15 with no comment or undecided.

112 Replies

The Weekly received replies from 112 of 117 members of the House of Representatives who served in the 1965 General Assembly. No attempt was made to get answers from three Representatives — David Britt of Robeson, Lacy Thornburg of Jackson, and A. A. Zollicoffer of Vance — who are serving on the Seaker Ban Study Commission. Five House members could not be reached.

The question put to Representatives was: "If you could vote today on the speaker ban law, would you vote to amend, repeal, or keep it?"

Speaker Comments

"Assuming your poll is correct, it would appear that the majority of members of the House are looking for a settlement. I think it is tremendously important to end this controversy over the speaker ban law and I further think that this is a controversy that can be settled to the general satisfaction of everyone."

Senate Poll

A poll of the State Senate, made last week by the Charlotte Observer and also released this morning, indicated a strong majority of Senators favoring repeal or amendment.

The Observer managed to contact 38 of the 50 Senate members. Of the 38 contacted, 24 said they were for either amendment or repeal, 7 favored keeping the speaker ban, and 7 had no comment or were undecided.

Of the 24 for repeal or amendment, 8 said they would vote for outright repeal.

Of the 7 favoring retention, 5 qualified their answers by saying they might go along with some sort of amendment.

And of the 12 Senators who could not be reached by the Observer, 5 previously had placed themselves on record as favoring amendment or repeal.

Anonymous Answers

In the poll taken by the Weekly, Representatives were promised anonymity. Several nidicated that their stands and a possible later vote, could be influenced by recommendations made by the Speaker Ban Study Commission.

The Commission, headed by Rep. David Britt of Robeson, completed hearings in Raleigh, Sept. 9, on the 1963 law which prohibits Communist Party members and those taking the Fifth Amendment in loyalty hearings from speaking on campuses of State-supported colleges and the University.

37 for Amendment

Of the 56 Representatives who said they would vote for amendment or repeal, 37 were for amendment and 19 for outright repeal.

Of the 15 members who had no comment or were undecided, two said they would vote for whatever recommendations the Study Commission makes.

Comments from the Representatives ranged from one extreme to another. Several on both sides of the speaker ban said their minds were made up and could not be changed.

One representative who favored a change said: "I now believe the best solution would be an amendement placing the authority in the hands of the trustees, where it belongs. I believe the Commission report will endorse this very position."

"Effective Regulation"

A House member who wanted to keep the law said he would vote for an amendment only "if there were some effective regulation of speakers."

Another who would vote to keep the law said: "I think the people of my county and of North Carolina want the ban retained, and I'm representing the people of my county and North Carolina."

But he added: "I would like to hear the Commission's report. The Commission's report could have an effect on the way the people feel about this."

Fifth Amendment

Still another, who would vote for amendment, said his objection to the law was based on "the unconstitutional part about the Fifth Amendment. I would weigh the Commission's report very heavily. They have studied the situation at first-hand and I haven't."

One Representative said his mind had been made up before the end of the 1965 legislative session. "The law is too strenuous and prohibits educational freedom. I would vote to amend it . . . the Commission's report would have no effect."

Another said he favored amendment, "but only if trustees adopt a resolution saying they won't allow Communist speakers. Otherwise I'd retain it."

And one Representative who declined to comment on how he would vote said, "I feel very strongly that the members of the Commission are fine folks and they have worked very hard. I hope they will come up with a unanimous decision, which I will support."

UNC Tar Heels Fall 31-24 In Opener
Comeback Try Fails To Stop Michigan

By PAT STITH
DTH Sports Editor

North Carolina fell behind Michigan 21-9 after 18 minutes of play here in Kenan Stadium Saturday and then, in the heat of battle (86 degrees), proved that it has a football team.

Michigan won the game 31-24 but not before fighting off a determined Tar Heel bid that had cut its lead to a touchdown at 21-16 early in the third quarter.

	UNC	Mich.
First Downs	16	19
Yards Rushing	91	255
Passes	24-41	6-12
Yards Passing	199	74
Passes Intercepted	1	1
Punts	8-42.7	4-39.5
Yards Penalized	71	30
Fumbles Lost	1	5
Score by quarters:
Michigan	14 7 0 10—31
Carolina	0 9 7 8—24

If both the offensive and defensive Carolina teams collaborated to get UNC into a hole, it was obth of them, working together, who almost clawed their way out.

It was, for Carolina, a good loss — if there is such an animal. Next week when they fly to Columbus to do battle with Ohio State, they can go with their heads up.

Michigan, rated by many as the best football team in the land, had to play good football to win.

The game proved Carolina has a whole new crop of good football talent coming up. There was soph Jeff Beaver, who came in late in the second quarter and directed the Tar Heels down field with the ease of an old field general.

There was soph Charlie Carr, who caught five passes; sophomores Jim Masino and Jack Davenport who learned under fire how to hold down their side of the line; there was Ronnie Kaplan, who led the team in tackles with eight.

After the ball exchanged hands once, the Wolverines took it and marched 76 yards in eight plays for the first score with 8:33 left in the 1st quarter.

They made it look ridiculously easy, sweeping both ends, but particularly Carolina's right, down the field and into the end zone.

Twin safeties Bill Edwards and Alan McArthur both had their hands on Gabler at the 12 but he slipped through.

Touchdown number two was a gift of the Tar Heel offense. The first time it had the ball after the Michigan's opening score, running back Max Chapman fumbled and the Wolverines covered it on the 27 yard line.

Michigan made it 21-0 when end Jeff Hoyne picked off a Danny Talbott pass in the left flat and lumbered 50 yards to the UNC six, where Talbott overhauled him. Fullback Dave Fisher scored two plays later.

Then while a near capacity crowd of 41,000 sat stunned in the heat, fanning themselves, Carolina got its ducks in a line and began playing ball.

The defense spread out, got tough, and started taking Michigan's outside play away. On the right, sophomores Masino and Davenport began playing like they weren't sophomores — both of them drew Coach Jim Hickey's praise after the game.

After Jimmy Byrd, a 5-8 dasher, hauled the Wolverine kickoff back 20 yards, Talbott whipped the offense together and drove it down the field to the UM 11.

Less than three minutes later left corner back Billy Darnall picked off Dick Vidmer's pass at the Michigan 43 yard line, ran to his right then cut back through a pack of Michigan players at the 35 yard line and broke out into the clear. He picked up a key block from Alan McArthur at the 13 and went in for the score.

Late in the 2nd quarter Michigan marched to the UNC 11 yard line. From there Gabler tried the same play he used to get Michigan's first score but end Masino shook him loose from the ball and nie Kaplan recovered for Carolina in the end zone.

Sophomore quarterback Jeff Beaver took over at this point and made his first appearance, a brilliant one. In less than two minutes he moved the ball from Carolina's 20 to the Wolverine 15.

He hit six of eight passes en route and ran the ball three times himself. Talbott kicked a field goal from the 15 with the clock running out to make the score 21-9 at halftime.

After intermission Carolina's defense made the big break. End John Atherton jarred Dick Volk, who was returning a punt, loose from the ball and UNC was in business again on the Michigan 23 yard line.

Two plays later Atherton caught a Talbott pass, went in for the score, and Carolina was back in the ball game at 21-16.

For the rest o the second half, except for two Michigan drives in the fourth period which resulted in a field goal and a touchdown, Carolina dominated the game.

UNC's last score came after a Wolverine fumble on their own 40 yard line. Talbott directed the drive to the 19 yard line where Beaver came in and on his first play, dropped back and hit Chapman on the left side for the first touchdown pass of his career.

For their next tilt, the Tar Heels will take to the road to face Ohio State in Columbus. Predictions for the game put the Carolina team in the second best place, but local hopes are high.

Free Flick

The Graham Memorial Sunday Cinema today features "Smiles of a Summer Night" with Eva Dahlbeck, Harriet Anderson, Ulla Jacobson and Gunner Bjornstrand. The winner of the Cannes Film Festival award for comedy was directed by Ingmar Bergman. Skillful camera work and a charming plot centered on manners and morals make it a delightful film. It will be shown with English subtitles at 7 and 9:30 in Carroll Hall.

What It Was Was Football

Pleased Heel Fans Never Gave Up Hope

Michigan won, they were disappointing as a nationally ranked team. Carolina lost, they were inspiring for anyone.

But for a dropped pass in the end zone and a fluke Michigan touchdown UNC might have won. Admittedly a temperature in the high 80s was an important factor. The mighty Wolverines were a sparkless and tired team after the first quarter.

Short Long Day

Tar Heel fans sweated through the heat but most of them expressed delight with the outcome of what was supposed to be a long day for the Heels. Instead Michigan had to hold on to squeek out a win.

Carolina supporters walked out of Kenan Stadium with smiles on their faces saying "They were surprisingly good. That, my friend was a football game."

One Tar Heel felt Jeff Beaver should have played more. "Talbott did all right," he said, "but more of the sharp passing Beaver could have made a difference."

Wolverine Fumble

Many fans said the team looked very inexperienced. A Michigan back fumbled behind the line and a quick UNC lineman landed on the ball. If he had picked it up and run it would have been six easy points for the blue and white.

The fans never gave up hope. Most sat right to the end hoping for the impossible. In the third quarter cheerleaders threw peewee footballs to the crowd.

New Faces

Several new faces in the Tar Heel line - up made a favorable impression with the fans. Little scantback Jimmy Byrd made two fine kickoff returns. The 157 - pound Byrd also caught a couple of passes for good gains.

Although Charlie Carr dropped a touchdown pass, fans were impressed by his fine performance. On two occasions the 6-3 end leaped high into the air to bring down passes and gasps from Tar Heel supporters.

Complaints

The only real complaints came from students who had to sit on the Michigan side because they were dating girls from off campus. "It just isn't the same over here" said one. "You lose a lot of the spirit, which is so much a part of football, if you aren't sitting with the student body," said another.

The marching Tar Heel Band put on an entertaining halftime show that prompted one person to say "Are they as good as they look, or is this heat really that bad?"

Most people don't give the Heels much of a chance against Ohio State in Columbus next week. But everyone who was asked said the team would play them a game.

Carolina cast away the doubts yesterday. They play football, hard, with hustle and for keeps.

"Let's Go Big Blue, Let's Go!"

The Pinch Of The Manacles

From The Charlotte Observer

When Wright Tisdale, chairman of the Duke University board of trustees, suggested in Charlotte this week that Duke is the state's best bet to become an outstanding national university, partisans of the University of North Carolina felt the pinch of their manacles anew.

The first pinch was felt in June when Duke announced a broad program of expansion and improvement. At that moment, the University of North Carolina was fighting to keep legislators and other proponents of the speaker-ban law from inflicting additional harm on state-supported higher education.

At a time when Duke officials and alumni were accepting the task of raising $187.4 million for the university's development, the legislature had little enthusiasm for meeting the large capital needs of the University of North Carolina and other state senior institutions.

There was, at the same time, the spectacle of the governor and legislators refusing to rescue the University from the extremely damaging assault being made on it by the speaker-ban law and other legislation striking at the heart of quality higher education.

Tisdale reported that a study about to be published will rank Duke among the top 20 universities in the country. The same study, he said, will show the University of North Carolina in the top 30. But that gap will widen considerably if the University's prestige continues to suffer and if its faculty is badly depleted by the speaker-ban law and other anti-intellectualism.

We stated in an editorial on June 16 that "Duke University today can talk for greatness and reach for greatness because it is not the captive of little political minds." That statement goes double today. The longer the leaders of North Carolina procrastinate in restoring full freedom to the University to educate, the greater the damage will be.

Dr. Douglas Knight, president of Duke, had no hesitancy in ripping into the speaker-ban law as a futile and foolish piece of legislative mischief that would be destructive of the University's interests.

President William C. Friday of the University, every bit as opposed to the law as Duke's president, risked the fiscal wrath of legislators every time he opened his mouth to criticize it in terms less emphatic than Knight's.

There is no reason North Carolina can't have two great national universities. Both Duke and UNC have broken out of the cocoon of regionalism and provincialism in the last 20 years. Only recently, the doctoral program of the University at Chapel Hill was rated the best in the South.

Duke's prospects for higher national ranking are good because it is attracting strong financial support from business and industry and from alumni, and because it is substantially endowed. This produces better facilities and higher faculty pay, hence a better faculty and better research.

The University of North Carolina depends upon the willingness of the people of this state to sacrifice for the building of a nationally recognized state university. That aspiration must have a strong voice in the governor's mansion and in the State Legislative Building.

Both universities can maintain a high level of service to North Carolina and the South while attracting top faculty and students from outside the South. Here, the University of North Carolina is somewhat limited, for it must serve the youth of North Carolina first. Only 30 per cent of the Duke student body is native of North Carolina.

The choice is clear. North Carolina young people should have the same opportunity to get education of the highest national quality that compares to what is available at Duke. But the people of this state must come to believe that this quality is worthwhile and attainable.

The best possible start toward that decision will be repeal of the speaker - ban law, followed by a decision to make bold and imaginative decisions about facilities and support.

Coed vs. Cabbie On Speaker Ban

By JANE MARCOTTE

We have just had an opportunity to observe that our affinity to Hoof and Mouth Disease has not diminished over the years.

It all began when we were subject to a talkative cab-driver. Not feeling particularly gregarious at the moment, we were quietly enduring the driver's comments about the weather when he asked the sure-of-reply question: "Are you a student at UNC?"

That bit of pseudo-conversation seemed to dampen his spirits. We then decided to do our good deed for the day and renew his self-assurance. That is, we decided to get his opinion about some topical affair. There is nothing more rejuvenating to one's esprit de personne than to hear oneself talk.

By now we should know better than to play Boy Scout. But not being able to tolerate the black-cloud atmosphere in the cab, and not having the courage to jump out, we blurted "What do you think of the Speaker Ban Law?"

Immediately we could feel the dark cloud begin to precipitate and could have bitten off our tongue.

The driver gave us a probing glance; then affirmed "It's a good thing. Somebody or something has to keep Communists from teaching our children. It's pretty bad when students don't even know that those professors are giving them Red propaganda. The students here will lap up anything that they can march for. They just don't have any respect for us tax-payers who have experience and know."

"Oh." we said while fingering the door-handle.

The driver gave us a demanding look and asked, "What do you think about it?"

"Your mouth is already open; you may as well stick your foot in," we told ourself. We proceeded with a hopefully non-committal "People should grow up and realize that closing the front door does not keep someone from entering."

This was met with a challenging "Do you want the Communists to take over?"

Our reply was a lecture on the necessity of being exposed to a variety of ideas. And for good measure we added that nothing is as simple as black and white.

By the time our much awaited destination was reached at least one thing had been confirmed: The driver's suspicion that students could not make wise judgments and were easily subverted.

So, feeling that if we wished him a "Good day" it would be taken as a Communist inspired plot, we silently paid our fare and beat a hasty retreat.

Mock Trial Creates Distrust

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

If the hissing displayed by the audience during the mock trial at the Student Government convocation for freshmen was any indication of its feelings, the Women's Council must have weakened the belief of the entering freshmen in the members of the bodies which have jurisdiction over Honor and Campus Code offenses.

The girl, presumably a first offender, who was accused of staying out late and lying about it, was suspended indefinitely. More important than the harshness of the sentence was the remote frame of mind and lack of concern shown by the girls sitting in judgment during the trial.

Almost all students who come to the University believe in the Honor System and what it stands for; but if what we witnessed was truly an example of our judicial proceedings, heaven help us all.

Congressman Explains Later Adjournment

By REP. WALTER ROGERS
(TEXAS)

ROLL CALL

Section 132 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 provides as follows: "Except in time of war or during a National emergency proclaimed by the President the two Houses shall adjourn sine die not later than the last day (Sundays excepted) in the month of July in each year, unless otherwise provided by the Congress." A state of war or National emergency has existed since 1939. On August 1, 1949 Speaker Sam Rayburn ruled that the First Session of the 81st Congress could legally continue after the last day of July because the National emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939 and May 27, 1941 were still in effect. Since that time Congress could legally have stayed in Session after the last day of July every year, including the present one. If the declaration of National emergency were terminated by the President we would not be in Session legally at the present time. Although there is a state of war in Viet Nam, it is an undeclared war and would not meet the requirements of the Constitution. However, the National emergency declared by the President in past years has not been retracted, hence it is this latter situation that creates legality in the continued Session of Congress this year.

The Members would like very much to terminate the Session by August 1st each year. However, there is always something to prevent it. It is virtually impossible for any of the Members to have vacations with their families or to be in their districts for any length of time during the summer months. As the summer wears on and fall begins a high degree of tension develops which is commonly called "adjournment fever." This tension is the result of long and exhaustive hours in committee meetings and long Sessions of the Congress with attention divided among a great number of bills of major import. All the Members are desirous of obtaining passage of their own particular bills affecting their districts. Add these to the many bills having national and international significance and you have an almost impossible situation. It is during these latter days of the Session that many ill-advised pieces of legislation have been able to slip through.

UNC's First President Was Disciplinarian

(This is the first in a series of articles on presidents of the University.)

By OTELIA C. CONNOR

Proud as we are of President Friday, the youngest university president in the United States, he is not the youngest president in the history of the University of North Carolina.

Joseph Caldwell of New Jersey, a graduate of Princeton and a tutor at his Alma Mater, was only 23 years old when he was called by the Board of Trustees to teach mathematics at UNC, October 31, 1796, one year after its opening. The journey from New Jersey to Chapel Hill took over 30 days, traveling by stage coach to Petersburg, Va., where he bought a horse and a two-wheel sulky, holding one person, for the rest of the trip to Chapel Hill.

When Mr. Caldwell arrived at the University there was no office of president. He was made presiding professor for the spring term 1797. The responsibilities of acting president, combined with that of teaching, were so heavy that he declared his intention of leaving the University, but was persuaded to stay upon the election of James Smiley Gillaspie as presiding professor at the close of 1797. In two short years Mr. Gillaspie was beaten by the students because they didn't like him. He resigned and Mr. Caldwell was elected to succeed him in 1799.

Small Faculty

There were four other professors besides Mr. Caldwell, and about fifty-six students. These ranged in age from mature young men to young boys who were so poorly prepared for college that a grammar school had to be organized, where corporal punishment was administered when the lessons were not learned.

There were only fourteen bedrooms in Old East. Six students were crammed into a room with their trunks, beds, tables, chairs, books and clothes, "which by the excessive heat of summer are enough to stifle them, and in the winter scarcely admit them to sit around the fireplace. When the weather permits they fly to the shade of the trees, where they find a retreat from the burr and hurry and irrepressible conversation of a crowded society."

There were no bathrooms. Most of the students used bath tubs in their rooms. "There was no sewerage system, and until shortly after 1850, slops were thrown from the windows freely." Yet there was very little sickness at the University. There was no doctor, and no infirmary. As a rule, when a student died he was buried in Chapel Hill, his expense being paid by the society to which he belonged.

Study By Candlelight

The students studied at night by adamantine candles, two students to a candle. Lamps came in after the middle of the century.

Board was fixed at $35 a year. Coarse corn bread was the staple food. A student writing to his parents described the food at the Commons as follows: "At dinner the only meat was a fat middling of bacon. At breakfast we had wheat bread and butter and coffee. Our supper was coffee and the corn bread left at dinner, without butter." The students showed their disgust with the food by stoning the steward's house, overturning his outhouse, and taking the gate off the hinges and putting it in the Chapel. In a protest to the Trustees, they described their grievances in the dining room: "We have long observed an insufficiency of butter. The beef has been such as to shock every sentiment of decency — frequently unsound and covered with vermin."

It is small wonder that after such a supper, the students went prowling at night and seized upon everything eatable within the radius of one or two miles. Beehives, chickens, watermelons and potato patches, roasting ears — in fact, everything eatable that they could lay their hands on, was found missing in the morning.

First President Chosen

In 1804 the Trustees decided the time had come for the University to have a president. The hour and the man had met, and Mr. Caldwell was unanimously chosen for the Presidency, at a salary of $1,000 a year. He had been at the University eight years, most of that time as Acting President, and was now thirty-one years old.

The choice was a happy one. Caldwell was first a mathematician, but he was a scholar in the true sense of the word in that he was interested in all fields of learning. And he had the highest interest of the University and the State at heart. He was a powerful preacher. "He was utterly fearless, indefatigable in the discharge of every duty, and skillful in the administration of discipline. He was strong of arm and swift of foot and often engaged in a wrestle or a race with disturbers at midnight." The Trustees had such confidence in his wisdom and devotion to the University that they gradually stopped interfering with the internal government of the University. Whenever Caldwell showed displeasure the Trustees gave in.

South Carolina Offer

A few months after he became president he was made a flattering offer by the University of South Carolina to become professor of mathematics at a salary of $1,500, with the expectation of being elected president at a salary of $2,500 per year. The friends of the University were highly upset at this offer. "The Board of Trustees unanimously passed resolutions urging on him the irreparable loss, which the University would sustain by his leaving it." President Caldwell declined the offer, writing a friend that he "had become attached to the place and disliked change."

In 1812, with the University running fairly smoothly, he asked the Trustees to relieve him of the presidency and allow him to return to his first love, mathematics and science. He was according to Dr. Archibald Henderson, "a true scientist, an engineer of eminence and a competent astronomer."

Presidency Too Strenuous

The Trustees graciously acceded to his request and elected Mr. Chapman, a Presbyterian minister from New Jersey, as president. The job proved too much for Mr. Chapman. He resigned four years later, and Mr. Caldwell was again elected president by the Board of Trustees in 1816. He retained this office until his death in 1835.

Judge Walker Anderson, in his June, 1835, Commencement eulogy to President Caldwell said that "the whole present generation of citizens of North Carolina owe more to him, than to any one individual, the very remarkable change that has taken place in the moral and intellectual character of our State within the last forty years."

The General Assembly of 1841 named a county for him, "the only county honoring a teacher." Caldwell Building on the campus was named for him.

President Caldwell was succeeded by Governor Swain.

Interviews for the Toronto Exchange will be held from 3 to 5:30 p.m. Sept. 27-29 in Roland Parker I and II. Persons interested should obtain application blanks at the GM Information desk.

WILLIAM CASTLE WARNS YOU— "FASTEN YOUR SEAT BELTS!"*

It will jet you to new heights of terror, suspense, excitement!

STARRING JOAN CRAWFORD

'I Don't Share Distrust' Sharp Tells Class of '69

Chancellor Paul F. Sharp told 2,400 freshmen Friday that "the greatest weakness of the speaker ban law is its distrust of you."

Sharp declared, "We do not share that distrust. We know that you are here to learn, to weigh carefully and critically what you hear and read."

distrust of you."

Freshmen were told by the Chancellor Sharp. He said of naivete to think that a speech will send you stampeding to the front to join with the speaker in his enthusiasm.

"We know students to be a tough and durable lot," said that not one college graduate had been among the defectors in Korea. "Education is the greatest guarantee of true patriotism this nation possesses; men who do not understand freedom will not defend it."

The Chancellor called the incoming freshmen "carriers of great promise." Reminding the class of 1969 that they are the final 2,400 of 11,000 applicants, he said, "In each of your places three other students could tonight be sitting. We can never forget this and our obligation to them is to make sure you are honest in your role as students. College freshmen used to be told in years gone by to 'look at the man beside you — at the end of the year he won't be here.' The educational environment is much tougher today. But look at the men on each side of you. They will be here. Will you?"

Citizens of the State and Nation, including the parents of students, annually invest $60 million at Chapel Hill, Mr. Sharp said. "All that they ask in return is that you conscientiously fulfill their faith in you as carriers of promise.

"You have chosen to become part of a larger world when you come to Carolina. I applaud your choice; you have given yourself an opportunity to be a carrier of great promise. We are determined to do our best to help you realize that promise — fully, richly, and in a satisfying and fulfilling way for you and the society we serve," he said.

Morehead Show Stars Are Stars

Morehead Planetarium will present a program entitled "The Earth in the Universe," beginning Sept. 28.

This presentation, scheduled to continue through Nov. 22, will explain the effects of the earth's rotation, movements of the moon and the planets and the predicted future of the Solar System 11,000 years hence.

The Planetarium's Zeiss Projector, well known for its ability to simplify astronomy's complexities, is featured in the program, which until Sept. 28 will be centered around Mars.

From Nov. 23 to Jan. 10, the planetarium will offer its Christmas favorite — "The Star of Bethlehem."

After featuring a program about the Zodiac (a band of 12 installations lying in the plane of the earth's orbit), Morehead will repeat still another holiday special — "Easter, the Awakening," expected to be attended by thousands of school children.

"Zodiac" will run from Jan. 11 through March 7, and the Easter program from March 8 through April 18. Between April 19 and May 31, the planetarium will present "All About Planets."

Morehead admission fees are 75 cents for adults, 50 cents for students grade 7 through college, and 35 cents for children grade 6 and lower. One adult chaperone is admitted free with each 10 pupils in organized groups.

Acting Physics Head Named

Dr. Eugen Merzbacher has just been appointed acting chairman of the Department of Physics at the University. He replaces Dr. Everett Palmateir, who was recently appointed Vice Chancellor for Graduate Studies and Research of the University.

Merzbacher, who has been with the University since 1952, will serve a one-year term.

"The Department," says Merzbacher, "has prospered under Dr. Palmatier. I have a good launching point."

The first major task Dr. Merzbacher will have will be to set up the Department in the recently renovated 'old wing' of Phillips Hall.

Solid state physics and the well-known Institute of Field Physics are the strongest areas in the Department, says Dr. Merzbacher. "But, we will try to open up some new areas; in particular we are hopeful that we will be doing more nuclear physics.

"My own interests are in the teaching of quantum mechanics at all levels — making it more accessible to people at earlier stages of their development.

"I am also very interested in using the computer for our physical problems. I am looking forward to the new computer center in the Research Triangle in which we will participate."

Merzbacher is Associate Editor of the American Journal of Physics. He is also the author of Quantum Mechanics, a text book used at the University, and at several other college and universities throughout the country.

Report on Dusty Treasure

Here's a special report for faculty and students who spent the summer in far places:

Philosophy Library — There are still a few books left from that great collection we put out last April. Everything in that batch was top-notch, but we've trimmed the prices on what's left so as to make room for some lively libraries that are still to come.

Poetry — In the space under our limited editions display, we've set up a permanent poetry shelf. Here are obscure poets, the faint voices of bygone days crying for immortality — at low prices!

German Books — During the summer we bought in a rather nice collection of German literature. What's left of it is in our Foreign Language shelf.

Facsimile Manuscripts — Another summer success was a collection of facsimiles of manuscripts in the British Museum. If you'd like to decorate your room with something by Browning or Wellington, in his own handwriting, now's the time to check up on this offering.

Shucks — Everything is either changed or reduced! — We were checking up the other day, and in theory we've sold out the entire contents of our 29c shelf twice over this summer. We know this is some kind of a statistical trick, but we do feel somewhat like a traffic cop at a busy intersection, and we'd suggest that you lovers of dusty treasure might profit from a browse sometime soon.

Hickey Praises Team's Courage In Comeback Try

By GENE RECTOR
Assistant DTH Sports Editor

A much-used white handkerchief worked overtime.

His sophomore-studded Tar Heels had given the highly-rated Michigan Wolverines all they could handle before 41,000 in sun and sweat drenched Kenan Stadium.

"It was a hot one," he said, removing his hat and loosening his rumpled tie.

JIM HICKEY

"But I was proud of the way the boys played. When you play one of the best teams in the country, fall behind 21-0, then get back into the thick of the game — well, you've done pretty well.

"Sure, we made so many mistakes," he continued. "Chalk that up to inexperience. But we straightened out our defense and really came after them. The boys showed guts — a lot of courage."

The Tar Heels set a UNC single game record for most passes attempted and completed with 24 completions in 41 attempts for 199 yards.

Junior Danny Talbott attempted 31 passes, completed 16 for 112 yards. Sophomore Jeff Beaver completed eight of ten for 87 yards.

"It's hard to say if we planned to pass that much," said Hickey. "Let me say this. If the opportunity to pass is there, we'll pass every time. Michigan is a team we thought we could throw on.

"Talbott played a fine game," he said. "He got hit pretty hard; the heat got to him a little and we brought on Beaver. Then of course Beaver took up the slack and played a fine game also."

Michigan had quite a fine football team according to Hickey.

"We won't meet many teams who can run the ball harder than they did," he said. "They have good size, they're quick, and they play a tough brand of football. They should get better every week.

Defense was a major key to the Tar Heel come-back.

"The defensive line came back real well in the second half," said Hickey. "Our ends and tackles were playing too tight in the first half and Michigan was running around them. We spread them out a little and things worked pretty well.

"The defensive secondary played well also," he added. "They hit hard all afternoon."

Hickey had high praise for his sophomores.

"Masino played all afternoon," he said, "and backed up to no one. Davenport and Wood did a bang-up job.

Little flankerback Jimmy Byrd also was mentioned.

"Byrd isn't the biggest passing target in the world," said a now smiling Jim Hickey, "but he's a scrapper."

End John Atherton (83) had this Danny Talbott pass under wraps for a 13-yard gain and a Tar Heel Touchdown. This play spearheaded a Carolina second-half drive that cut the Wolverine lead to 21-16. Atherton, who is a 6-0, 225 pound senior from Burke, Va., caught three passes for the day, good for 36 yards.

'Hottest Weather We Have Ever Played In' — Elliott

By RON SHINN
DTH Sports Writer

If there was ever a man that needed to get cooled off it was Bump Elliott.

The Michigan coach disappeared into the dressing room to join his team in a round of "Hail Michigan" after the Wolverines had turned back a hard playing band of UNC Tar Heels 31-24. It was hot (86) degrees and humid.

"I've never seen anything like it," said Elliott as he emerged from the sweatbox. "This is undoubtedly the hottest weather we have ever played in, including the weather at Southern California."

The fair-skinned coach had perspiration dripping from his chin as he leaned back to take a long swig of his coke. praise for the Tar Heels. "They are a real good football team. Their passing was excellent. Talbott is a very versatile player and Beaver also gave us a hard time.

"UNC was tough defensively. We expected their passing but not their pass defense. The team has great personnel."

When asked specifically about the Tar Heels passing he explained that they had been forced to protect deep and leave the area directly behind the line open. "We had to give up some of the short ones to protect against the home run play."

Fumbles were numerous because of the slippery ball. "The perspiration of the players made the ball hard to hold all day," explained Elliott.

Michigan was forced to alter its attack in the second half. "They were stopping our power sweeps so we started sending the fullback up the middle more. The strong sweep attack that we started with soon became ineffective."

Elliott praised halfback Rick Sygar for his kicking display and expressed concern over his injured players. "Jim Detwiler and Barry Dehlin both have knee injuries. We don't know yet how serious they are because they haven't been fully examined. Bill Yearby was a victim of the heat."

"This team needs a lot of experience, however, before it will be as good as last year's Rose Bowl team. It needs experience and this game taught us a lot. I'm just glad that we could win while we were getting that experience.

"We rotated our quarterbacks frequently to see what they could do." When asked about how he planned to play the quarterbacks during the rest of the season, he replied, "They both did a good job so we'll just have to play it by ear."

The Michigan passing game was lacking all afternoon.

Daily Tar Heel SPORTS

Intramural Department Expects Bigger Program

A wide variety of intramural sports are on tap this year, and the intramural department is expecting even greater student body participation. An effort to have a sport for everyone on campus has resulted in a 12 event slate plus several special programs.

Competition is divided into three categories; fraternity, residence hall, and graduate.

The fraternity and residence hall divisions are divided into two parts, the white division for the experienced players and the blue division for the more inexperienced. The graduate division includes independents.

All male students registered in the University are eligible to enter any of the events. Grant-in-aid students and letter winners will not be allowed to participate.

Tag football is the only sport scheduled to begin in September. Last season saw 131 teams competing for honors in a round robin tournament.

October will be a full month as track, volleyball, and wrestling starts. A long list of special events including a golf tournament, the Rod and Gun Field Meet, fencing, and swimming are also on tap.

The twentieth annual Big Four Sports Day will be held at Wake Forest in the spring. The top intramural athletes representing Duke, N.C. State, Wake Forest, and UNC will compete in the ten spring sports.

Two co-rec events are held each year. A men's and women's team are paired with a point system determing the overall winner at each event.

A record number of 5,020 different people took part in the rapidly growing intramural program last year, according to Bob McDonald, undergraduate assistant.

Campus Leaders Ask President To Resign Due To Recent Honor Council Conviction

Wilson Hits 'Reactionary Forces' Within The Party

By JOHN GREENBACKER
DTH Staff Writer

Student Party Legislative Floor Leader Don Wilson atacked "reactionary forces within the University Party" Sunday night for allegedly trying to "unceremoniously remove" UP Chairman Jim Hubbard.

Speaking before the first annual meeting of the SP, Wilson praised Hubbard as, "An outstanding leader who was handpicked for his job by Bob Spearman."

Spearman, a UP member and immediate past president of the student body, has received praise from students and University administrators for his leadership during the past year.

"No one may say a word against Bob Spearman," Wilson said.

"When Spearman goes to England on a Rhodes Scholarship," Wilson said, "he will no longer be able to clam the rebirth of these reactionary forces."

Ingram Comments

Hubbard was not immediately available for comment, but UP Legislative Floor Leader George Ingram said, "I know of no 'reactionary forces' in the University Party which are unhappy with the leadership Chairman Hubbard has given us.

"Mr. Hubbard has the backing of 100 per cent of the University Party leadership and members," he said. "I don't know where Rep. Wilson gets his information."

Wilson also outlined the proposed SP Legislative program for residence hall improvement.

Color TV

He promised to work for the installation of a color television in every women's and men's reside ce hall and the institution of a free bus system for students between distant residence halls and campus.

Wilson also promised to work for the establishment of a campus carrier current radio system if students vote in its favor in a campus-wide referendum to be held during the fall elections.

Need Help

"Student Government needs help," he said, "and I hope all will give it the aid it needs."

Dickson reminded all Student Government office holdpersonal benefit, but we are here to serve the student body."

He announced plans for a residence hall leadershp conference to be held this fall for the purpose of, "making new officers aware of their responsibilities.

"It has been said that the University has lost touch with the state," Dickson told his party, "but I don't believe its so."

Insure Communication

To insure communication between the University and the state, Dickson proposed a 15 minute weekly radio show on campus activities to be broadcast on a state-wide network.

Tyndall announced the results of a recent SP fund raising drive which helped toward elimination of a long standing deficit in party funds.

Date Ticket Plan Revised

After receiving numerous complaints about the date ticket situation at the Michigan game, Rick Kremer, president of the Carolina Athletic Association, UNC Athletic Director Chuck Erickson and athletic business manager Vernon Creek have worked out a new plan for the Virginia game Oct. 2.

Under this plan the first 1,000 students to buy date tickets will be allowed to sit in the regular student section on the south side.

Other date ticket holders will sit in the west end zone entering through gate four. If there are not enough seats in the regular student section the overflow will also sit in the end zone. However, indications from the Michigan game show there is little threat of an overflow.

Kremer said some students have already bought their date tickets for the coming game and that the tickets say to enter gate one. However, these students and their dates will be admitted through gate five, the regular student gate.

"We made the change because students complained about being away from the student body and in the direct heat of the sun. This plan will put them close to the student section and the sun will at least be at their backs," Kramer said.

Another reason for the change is that the Virginia game has been designated as Band Day. Bands from all over the state will make their yearly trip to preform in Kenan Stadium.

Kramer said there were several problems at Saturday's game. Some freshmen failed to pick up there seating tickets after there I.D. cards were punched at the gate. He also said that students who wanted to sit together should ask for seats together.

Civil Rights Tests Start In State

From The Raleigh News and Observer

WASHINGTON — North Carolina will be a major testing ground for new legal keys designed to open job doors for qualified Negroes on production lines, at office desks, and behind retail counters.

At the same time, the effort will test two differing methods of civil rights action.

The effort was signaled Wednesday when the NAACP filed formal charges of racial discrimination against a roll-call of top North Carolina retail chains, textile industries, and innkeepers.

The charges were lodged in the U. S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, headed by Franklin D. Roosevelt Jr.

Forty stores, plants, or branches were cited, mostly in the eastern communities of Fayetteville, Jacksonville, Wallace, and New Bern.

The specific charges were developed during the summer by volunteer field workers for the old-line civil rights organizations.

The North Carolina complaints make up about 10 per cent of the workload of the new federal agency, which went to work 90 days ago as the newest offspring of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Under the commission's proceedings, each specific complaint will be investigated by a staff member of the agency.

If the investigation produces a recommendation for action, the five - member commission itself then considers it, formally seeks mediation of the complaint with the complainant and the firm charged with discrimination.

The specific complaints were lodged against such widespread firms as Burlington Industries, Belk's department stores, Sears Roebuck, Carolina Telephone and Telegraph, Piggly-Wiggly food stores, Howard Johnson's eat-and-sleep chain, and American Bakeries.

At the same time, they feel that North Carolina is the perfect testing ground for the legal methods, for two reasons.

One, North Carolina probably has more qualified Negro job-seekers than any other Southern State.

After A Hard Day Of War

DA NANG, Viet Nam — The weary U. S. Marine platoon had just fought its way out of a Viet Cong ambush when it got the word in the field: "Word received from Saigon. Your shipment in the mail."

The shipment: two quarts of vodka, a fifth of bourbon, a pint of scotch, a bottle of pink champagne and a bottle of screw driver mix.

A Navy hospital medic with the Marines, Larry Freeman, placed the order from a calendar put out by Al Rustice's liquor store in West Babylon, N. Y. The calendar which Freeman picked up while on home leave, said, "We deliver anywhere."

The liquor arrived in Saigon Friday and was being flown to Da Nang, 380 miles away.

Lt. Donald McCloskey of Santa Barbara, Calif., said he planned to let the platoon have the liquor when it returns to Da Nang from the field.

"It will be held for a special occasion — one that doesn't affect their marksmanship," he said.

Rustice sent the liquor free and threw in an assortment of cheese dip, salted nuts, potato chips and a box of cigars. He added a quart of scotch for the company commander. An airline agreed to pick up the freight costs.

Freeman placed the order as a gag — he has never met Rustice.

China Claims It Downed Plane

TOKYO — Communist China charged that a U. S. plane "intruded" into China's Hainan Island and was shot down by Chinese aircraft today.

A broadcast heard here identified the pilot of the F104 fighter as Capt. Philips E. Smith (hometown not given). It said he was captured "when he parachuted from his plane and tired to flee."

The broadcast claimed the plane was shot down over Hoihow, on the northern shore of the island, or just south of the mainland.

It gave this account:

"The U. S. Plane intruded into China's territorial air apace from west of Hainan Island at 1100 hours today. It penetrated deep into the air space of Hoihow and carried out military provcations at 1132 hours. Chinese aircraft promptly took off and intercepted it. The U. S. Fighter plane was hit and fell.

"The U. S. Pilot, Capt. Philips E. Smith (Serial No. 4360), was captured when he parachuted from his plane and tried to flee."

Pakistani Forces Advance

RAWALPINDI, Pakistan — Pakistan Claimed today its forces had knocked out 41 more Indian tanks, all but one during a battle in Sialkot Sector, where fighting entered its second week.

A spokesman said the pace of the battle was reduced somewhat from the fighting yesterday in which the Pakistanis said they shot down two Indian jet fighters, captured two tanks, and took 143 Indian prisoners.

Diplomatic activity in the Pakistani capital continued but there were no Pakistani comments on the U. N. cease-fire resolution or the Soviet proposal for an Indian-Pakistani summit meeting in the Soviet Union.

Among visitors to the presidential palace was U. S. Ambassador Walter P. McConnaughy, who saw President Mohammed Ayub Khan. McConnaughy saw Ayub Kahan minutes after word was received in Rawalpindi of the U. N. vote.

Italian To Head Assembly

UNITED NATIONS — The election of Italian Foreign Minister Amintore Fanfani as president of the U. N. Assembly was assured today when the only rival candidate, Koca Popovic of Yugoslavia, withdrew from the contest.

The election will take place when the 114-nation assembly opens its 20th session this afternoon.

Popovic had the backing of the Eastern European Communist bloc and had substantial support among Asian and African delegates, but the Yugoslav delegation notified other delegations today that his name was being withdrawn.

Dickson Refuses To Resign In Spite Of Severe Pressure

By ERNIE McCRARY
DTH Editor

A group of eight student leaders has asked Student Body President Paul Dickson to resign because of circumstances created by his conviction of a campus code offense last month.

Dickson was found guilty of helping a woman student break the rule against entering a closed fraternity house and was given an official reprimand by the Men's Honor Council. The coed, a visiting student, was suspended from school here by the Women's Honor Council. Dickson's sentence carries no penalty except a notation of the offense on the back of his permanent record card.

Dickson has said he will refuse the demand made in the letter, which was presented to him late Sunday night. The signers of the letter are: Van MacNair, chairman of the Men's Council; Leith Merrow, chairman of the Women's Council; Gray Reeves, women's attorney general; John Ingram, men's attorney general; Sonny Pepper, president of the Men's Residence Council; Frank Martin, president of the Interfraternity Council; Penny Scovil, chairman of the Women's Residence Council; and Jeri Moser, chairman of the Carolina Women's Council.

The letter says: "Because of the deepening crisis surrounding the question of your continuance in office, we the undersigned feel compelled to clarify our collective position for the entire University community.

"When the University administration issued you an ultimatum to resign, all of us intervened in your behalf, risking our reputations and personal influence with the administration, because we deeply felt that the proper judicial processes must always be maintained. As a result of this intervention you are again presented with the opportunity of honorably resigning."

Last Tuesday Dickson was notified by the administration that unless he resigned the presidency his judicial case would be reopened for review by a faculty board. About a dozen student leaders went to the administration Wednesday, protesting what they called its "coercive tactics" and "perversion of the judicial system." Dickson did not participate in that meeting.

The administration reconsidered its stand and Thursday Dickson was notified that the ultimatum had been withdrawn. He was told that there would be no threat of further judicial action in the case, and the decision of whether or not to resign was his own once again.

Dickson spent the weekend considering his course of action, and told Honor Council Chairman Van MacNair Sunday night that he intends to stay in office. He was then presented with the letter demanding his resignation.

It says: "The following reasons compel us to conclude that your continuance in office relegates our Student Government to a position of total impotence:

"(1) Although we affirm that ,as a student, you have fulfilled your obligations to the student judiciary, we place a far greater importance on the president's position as the elected head of our entire system of honor, and on his responsibility to protect the integrity of Student Government and that of the entire University community. It is clear that the continuance of the present situation can serve only to undermine all respect for our Student Government and its traditional authority.

"(2) When this entire matter becomes public knowledge, and it surely will, the students, faculty, administration, and trustees of this institution will be placed in a position untenable in the eyes of the state of North Carolina.

"(3) Although we strongly opposed any arbitrary and unilateral action on the part of the University administration in your case, we are compelled to agree with them that honor and the well-being of Student Government in particular and the University in general demand your resignation. It is abundantly clear that the University administration no longer recognizes you as the representative head of this student body.

"(4) Your continuance in office places insurmountable obstacles in the path of each of us as we attempt to carry out our responsibilities to the student body, and should your position remain unchanged, we have serious reservations about our ability to continue effective service to this government."

A spokesman for the group said each person who signed the letter did so with the understanding that it would be made public. Copies are to be sent to UNC President William C. Friday, Chancellor Paul F. Sharp, Vice Chancellor J. C. Sitterson, Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey, Dean of Men William G. Long and Dean of Women Katherine K. Carmichael.

The letter concludes, "We are advising you in good faith, and we challenge you to show where we have failed to support you when your position was tenable. Certainly we have the right to expect that your concern for the preservation of the ideals of our University community will override personal ambition and will dictate your final decision.

"When you assumed the presidency you surrendered your right to personal indiscretions. Your every act became subject to the scrutiny of this community and, indeed, the scrutiny of the entire state.

"We call upon you in the name of honor to have the courage to tender your resignation as president of the Student Body without further delay."

Dickson issued a statement yesterday afternoon saying that "with the best interest of student government in mind," he had decided not to resign. He called resignation "the easiest course" and said decision came "after many hours of personal thought." (See accompanying story for text of Dickson's statement.)

Spokesmen for the group which signed the letter said early last night that it had not been decided what further action, if any, would be taken since Dickson has refused to resign.

Honor Council Chairman MacNair said, however, "speaking for myself, I would say that Paul's actions have widened the gulf between the judicial and executive branches of Student Government. I think it will be almost impossible for me to work with him and I personally feel some further action will be necessary."

Dickson Calls On Students To Decide

There have been many rumors on campus during the past week regarding my conduct this summer. I was charged with a Campus Code violation and given an official reprimand for being a party in the violation of the Fraternity Visiting Agreement. The official reprimand which I received is in accord with former decisions by the Council.

This matter and its effect on Student Government and the University community have weighed heavily on my mind for the past five weeks, and I have sought the advice of many students, faculty, administrators, and friends in the State. I wish to thank them for their advice which has been considered carefully.

With the best interests of Student Government in mind, I have decided that I shall not resign.

I have reached this decision after many hours of personal thought. It has not been an easy decision to make, but I am confident in the belief that it was one which was made honestly and with a sincere regard for Student Government and the University.

I believe in a Student Government which must at all cost maintain its integrity in relation to the Administration. There have been pressures, to be true, pressures which were motivated by concern for the University, but pressures nevertheless. These pressures have not ceased.

The easiest course for me to have taken would have been to have submitted to these pressures. As long as I am President I cannot. To let any group of individuals other than the students themselves determine who should be and remain their President would be to abrogate the responsibility placed in me last spring.

There is much to do in the coming months. Student Government needs the vigorous support of every student.

Paul Dickson, III
President of the Student Body

Astronomy Is Taught At Morehead

"Introduction to Astronomy," a beginning course for adults, will be offered by the Morehead Planetarium during October and November.

In making the announcment, Director A. F. Jenzano explained that the course will be given for two hours each Tuesday beginning October 5 and ending November 23. The classes will be given from 7:15 to 9:30 p.m. The first hour will be conducted in a classroom. There will be a 15 minute break between hours.

"Introduction to Astronomy" is open to all adults who are interested in knowing more about the universe of which they are a part, and assumes no prior knowledge of astronomy.

Fire Erupts In Old East

A transformer fire in the basement of New East knocked out power in McCorkel place yesterday afternoon for about an hour.

Campus Police Chief Arthur J. Beaumont said a slow oil leak was the cause of the fire which was discovered about 1:30 p.m.

It took maintainence men about an hour to replace the $1,000 transformer and restore power to the area.

Beaumont said people in New East had been smelling something burning since last Friday but couldn't locate the source.

ERNIE McCRARY, EDITOR
JACK HARRINGTON, BUSINESS MANAGER

Paul Dickson

Our Student Government is in the throes of an agony absolutely unprecedented in the history of this University. In a few short months Student Government has made a tragic plunge from a pinnacle of respect and authority to an abyss of disrespect and discredit.

Rumors have swirled around campus since Student Body President Paul Dickson's trial for a campus code offense more than a month ago. Dickson has been faced with the question of whether or not to resign his office since that trial. The Daily Tar Heel has avoided comment on the matter until now because we wanted him to reach his decision as independently as possible, free from the conflict and confusion of a public debate involving him.

But now Dickson has decided — he will stay until he is forced out. He says his decision is final, but eight of the most important student leaders on campus — some of them appointed by Dickson himself, the others elected — feel very strongly that he has made the wrong choice. They have said so publicly, thus bringing the case into the open.

We have made every attempt to be fair to Dickson, but our greater responsibility is the students of this University. Our duty is to print the truth, not select just those facts which we think will present Student Government or the administration or the University itself in a favorable light.

There is no question that nothing favorable can be found in this story, and its interrelated effects on the University, its inhabitants and the people of the state cannot be foretold.

We commend the administration for deciding to withdraw its blackmail attempt against Dickson, but we condemn them even more heartily for suggesting in the first place that his judicial case would be reopened unless he resigned. For him to have resigned under such conditions would have been totally unthinkable and would have meant the literal death of Student Government at the University of North Carolina.

The threat was removed after a group of student leaders appeared before top administrators and made it clear that such a course of action was the worst possible one which could have been pursued. If the administration had not reversed itself the integrity of student self-government would have been damaged beyond all hope of repair. The ultimatum was withdrawn in good faith, and as one administrator put it, "It's back in Dickson's lap now."

We do not question Dickson's obligation to the judicial system in this affair. He fulfilled that when he was tried and convicted as Paul Dickson, Individual.

We do question his obligation to the students of this University as Paul Dickson, President. He holds the highest elective office in Student Government, and knew well enough when he was sworn in that he was assuming responsibilities far and above those of other students. For that reason, a Campus Code violation — especially one which has implications of moral laxity — is more serious when it is committed by the person who should be the most responsible one on campus — the example-setter. He is a public figure and must expect close inspection.

Dickson has set a poor example. We have never doubted his sincerity or honest intentions to do the right thing, but the fact remains that he has not been a frequent practioner of "the right thing" and has brought relations with the administration to an unbelievable low.

In stating why he is not resigning, Dickson says he is confident that his decision "was made honestly and with a sincere regard for Student Government and the University." Such a statement reminds us of the trite but appropriate saying, "The road to hell is paved with good intentions."

Dickson says, "The easiest course for me to have taken would have been to have submitted to these pressures (to resign). As long as I am President I cannot. To let any group of individuals other than students themselves determine who should be and remain their President would be to abrogate the responsibility placed in me last spring."

Such reasoning evokes as much pity as indignation. Does he presume to tell us that he has not already abrogated the trust of the students by getting their government into this mess?

Does he mean to tell us that it takes courage to do nothing and let "students themselves" determine what is to be done?

Is he so naive as to think that relationships with all the people with whom he must deal will ever return to normal, so that he can carry out even the most perfunctory tasks of his office?

Dickson is kidding only himself. He is perpetrating a hoax on the students if he tries to kid them too.

The easy decision, he said, would have been to resign. We think not. The hardest choice was to resign — so hard in fact, that he could not make it.

He should have.

"Don't Knock It 'Til You've Tried It!"

Support For The 'Beauty Bill'

By HUGH STEVENS

A few years ago, in the midwestern United States, a retired farmer went about the countryside by night burning down billboards. Adjacent to each pile of ashes that resulted he erected a small sign bearing the following terse verse:

I think that I shall never see
A poem lovely as a tree.
In fact, until the billboards fall
I may never see a tree at all.

If the farmer's methods were destructive, his sentiment was admirable. The billboard curse has been an American cancer for years, and many of our highways and byways have become a national disgrace. Along one mile-long stretch of US-1 near St. Augustine, Florida, no less than 92 billboards fence off drivers from what was once bucolic scenery.

Some Americans, however, have had enough. Sixty-three of them are U. S. Senators who voted Thursday evening in favor of the highway beautification bill inspired by Mrs. Lyndon Johnson's one woman campaign.

Now only House support, which is expected, stands in the way of a revampment program which will remove billboards from federally-supported primary and interstate highways. The bill will also require screening of offensive junkyards and garbage heaps, and provide $120 million in annual grants to the states for scenic improvements and landscaping.

Perhaps the most far-reaching aspect of the legislation is the banning of signs on the primary system, which includes most of America's oldest federally-subsidized roads.

The outcome of all this is that the garish blight which has been encroaching upon some of our most traveled roads will at long last begin to recede, and soon the trees will indeed be on lovely exhibition.

Creeping federalism, you say? Sure it is. But is happened because all too many of the sovereign states allowed Stuckey's and other exponents of the "ONLY 500 YARDS TO . . .!" approach to turn their highways into distracting, ugly irbbons fit only for getting from one place to another. In some cases, including much of the new interstate system, the states actually chose to reject additional federal subsidies which would have accompanied state anti-billboard action.

But the same billboard lobbies which Keep North Carolina Ugly couldn't get to the 63 Senators (including our own) who backed the beauty bill. And now the federal government is well on its way toward cleaning up the mess which has accumulated, brothersome and expensive as it will undoubtedly be.

No doubt the new legislation will be contested in the courts if it finally becomes law, perhaps under the First Amendment. And no doubt billboards will remain visible in some places where they can be effectively placed outside the highway right-of-way.

But if we assume that most Americans do not want "ugliness" to become a national adjective along with "efficiency" and "tolerance" and the like, then this legislation seems to be a step in the right direction.

In an age when we condemn those who pollute our water and defile our atmosphere, it is fitting that we also make the national concern known to those who desecrate our vistas.

How To Win At Berkeley

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staffwriter

University of California researchers at Berkeley recently told their professional colleagues that campus protest leaders are "the nucleus of future scholarship."

What is not known, however, is Berkeley's new graduate school admission policy. To get the inside dope, I interviewed Koob Egdelwonk, who, although he graduated from UNC with a 4.00 average and an impressive record in student government, was turned down at Berkeley, where he wanted to work for a Ph. D. in nuclear physics.

"You look extremely qualified," the admissions officer said, "yet you have a 4.00 average without ever having belonged to the Free Speech Movement."

"Yes sir," answered Koob—very respectfully.

"Well, I'm sorry," the official replied, but we cannot accept you because you haven't engaged in creative protest. I'm sure you see our side of the story; the statistics show campus activists rank higher on the intellectual orientation scale."

"Maybe," Koob suggested, "I could develop myself intellectually once I got to Berkeley, perhaps stop a few troop trains or threaten to become a human torch."

"We're sorry," the admission officer said, "but we must rely on past deeds, not just on ability. Judging from your record, I would say you lack the motivation one needs to succeed at Berkeley."

Six months later, Koob revisited Berkeley after changing his identity. This time he wore dark glasses, a dirty T-shirt, and sandals. What's more, he did not hesitate before accepting the marijuana cigarette handed him by the interviewer.

Koob casually remarked that he had barely managed to graduate from UNC, that he had been suspended from school several times at the request of Governor Moore, and that he used LSD.

"I'm very impressed," said the admissions officer. Seems to me you're just the type fellow who'll fit into our local Free Speech Movement, although the experts say FSM people are not beatniks."

"Sure thing, old man," Koob replied. "Me—I go places. Just ordinary stuff, picketing the university administration, working to legalize pot, vandalizing military monuments."

"Wonderful!" the interviewer exlaimed. "I can see you are the sort of material we want here. But first we've got to do a little checking. Just formalities."

"Fine with me Daddy-O! Give my regards to the other squares around your joint," Koob shouted.

Two weeks later, he received a letter from Berkeley.

"Dear Mr. Egdelwonk," it read. "We have been checking, and have found that you have never been disciplined by the school as you said you were, and furthermore, that Chief Beaumont has never arrested you for smoking mariujuana. We find you to be an intellectual fraud."

Depressed by the letter, Koob ran out into the middle of Franklin Street and began screaming obscenities at the top of his lungs. When the authorities threw him into the paddy wagon, Koob claimed he was merely exercising his right of free speech.

The Berkeley admission officers read about the incident in the papers, and the next day they paid his bail so he could immediately take advantage of a $6,000 scholarship offered by their physics department.

Governor Swain Believed In Building Character, Not In Breaking Students

By OTELIA CONNOR

When David Lowry Swain, Governor of North Carolina, and third President of the University of North Carolina, was a small boy living in a mountain cove of western North Carolina, he saw a horse and wagon approaching in a washed-out channel of the creek near his home, and was so frightened that he ran and hid.

What manner of man was this, who with only four months of college education at the University of North Carolina, got his law license when he was 22 years old, when he was twenty three years old was elected to the General Assembly for five terms. When he was twenty eight years old he was chosen solicitor for the Edenton Circuit, an extreme eastern district of North Carolina. When he was twenty-nine years old he was transferred to the Superior Court bench.

When he was thirty-two years old he was elected Governor of North Carolina, the youngest man ever elected to that high office in North Carolina.

During Governor Swain's last year as Governor, 1835, Joseph Caldwell, President of the University of North Carolina, died and Governor Swain was elected President of the University to succeed Caldwell. He was then thirty-four years old.

In appearance he had a homely face and a large, ungainly figure. He was so knock-kneed that the students said that the pigs on his farm must have gotten away easily, as they could run right between his feet.

It is a fair question: What did this man have that other men didn't have, that he always landed on top of every pile?

As an educator it was held against him that for twenty years he never bought a book for the library. Except for the Phi and Di libraries, the University library was non-existent. Yet many prominent men gave him credit for much of their success in later life.

He was accused by some of being a toady, and booting up the rich. If so, it seems to have paid off in his case, as the University grew under his administration, and was rated the best college in the Southern States. Three Presidents of the United States were commencement guests at the University during his administration. No other administration can make such a claim.

He was criticized by some for being too lenient in discipline. He often over-ruled the faculty and refused to expel a student. He held that the chief concern of the University was to make character and not to break people.

He was criticized for granting diplomas to students after four years at the University, regardless of their scholastic standing.

Dr. Battle defends Swain's position on easy diplomas, and lists the following advantages to the possessor of a diploma from the University:

"He had learned human nature and how to handle men. He had learned to considerable extent polished manners. He could think and speak on his feet. In county meetings he knew the rules of order and how to conduct business—this he had learned in his Literary Society. He had confidence in himself. He saw that his neighbors expected much of him and his self-respect forced him not to disappoint them, on the principle 'noblesse oblige.'"

Governor Swain aroused resentment in the village when his beautiful daughter, Elinor, married General Atkins, a Union General who was stationed at Chapel Hill at the close of the war. It was due to Governor Swain's conciliatory attitude that the 4,000 soldiers and their horses, quartered in the buildings on the campus, committed no acts of vandalism or looting in the town during that period of occupation.

Governor Swain was also on intimate terms with Republican General Sherman, who furnished him a team and gave him a horse. Governor Swain's death was inadvertently caused by his horse which bolted, throwing him out of the buggy on the ground. He died from shock about two weeks later.

Most people in the South were as poor as Job's turkey hen after the war, but Swain, who died three years after the close of the war was a wealthy man, worth $600,000, notwithstanding the losses of the war.

Because of his great faith in the University he kept the University open during the War Between the States, even when there were only thirteen freshmen admitted. After the war the Reconstruction Government dismissed President Swain, the Board of Trustees, and the faculty, and the carpet-baggers took over. Because of the lack of money and patronage the University closed its doors in 1871, and remained closed until 1875.

President Swain died August 1868. Thus he was spared the pain of witnessing the desecration of the instutition he loved and for which he had labored so long.

By his contemporaries Governor Swain was not considered a great man in many senses of the term, but he developed to the utmost all the talents and abilities he possessed, and in so doing "raised himself above and beyond the great mass of his fellows." Furthermore, he knew when he was licked and saw no point in continuing to fight for a lost cause.

If politics is the art of the possible, Governor Swain was a consummate politician. His political acumen, together with a very bright mind, was reason enough for his rapid rise in the world.

Buchwald Covers New Beat

By ART BUCHWALD

I spent last week in Grand Teton National Park as the only male correspondent covering Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson and her daughter Lynda. There were 12 lady reporters on the trip, and it was typical of their sex that not one of them would give me a break.

It was every woman for herself, and we fought tooth and nail for the exclusive story of Mrs. Johnson's attempt to beautify America.

Covering Mrs. Johnson was no problem. We were briefed twice a day by Liz Carpenter, the First Lady's press secretary, and then it was just a question of running to the phone and reporting that Mrs. Johnson took a walk or amongst the pines had lunch by the lake or sat in her cottage gazing out on the Grand Tetons while a fire blazed in the living room fed by logs chopped by Laurence Rockefeller.

But Lynda Bird was another problem because she started dating a boatsman from the Jackson Lake Lodge, and suddenly what had been a simple story about beautification turned into the greatest saga of romance in the White House since Margaret Truman went out with Marvin Braverman.

The hero of the romance was Wyoming-born-and-bred Brent Eastman, a 25-year-old medical student at the University of California.

The rule of thumb for reporters covering Lynda is that if she goes out with a fellow once it's a date and if she goes out twice it's a romance. If they see each other three times, you can start writing the engagement story.

I'm probably one of the foremost beautification reporters in the United States, but when it comes to covering a love story I find myself in trouble. So as soon as Lynda's romance became the top news I was at a loss as to what to say.

The women reporters on the trip were typing reams of copy about Lynda and Brent and I kept sitting in front of my machine, sobbing because I had nothing to say.

Finally they took pity on me and said they would help me with the story.

"First you have to describe Brent," one of them said.

"How do I do that?" I asked.

"Say he'll tall, handsome, bronzed, clean-cut outdoors man with a physique like John Wayne and a jutting jaw like Cary Grant."

"Isn't that libelous?" I asked.

"Do you want us to help you or don't you?"

"Okay. How should I describe Lynda?"

"Happy, beaming, joyous, and full of song," another reporter said.

"What should I say they did?"

"They rode off in the sunset, held hands in the moonlight, and sat talking to each other in front of a blazing fire."

"That's all?"

"You've still got tomorrow's story. Don't tell everything in one day."

"Should I say anything about the President making Brent Secretary of the Interior?"

"Yes, but only after he finishes medical school."

"What happens when Lynda goes back to school?"

"Say that she hopes to see him soon and that informed sources say that he'll probably see her soon."

"Gee," I said, "once you get the knack of it, it isn't hard at all.

After being fired up by the women reporters, I decided to see if I could scoop them, and I did. I discovered that Brent Eastman used to go with Miss American Indian of 1964, but they broke up, and the reason was that she discovered his great-great-grandfather killed her great-great-grandfather at Little Big Horn.

Strike Makes N. Y. 'A Small Town'

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The situation had a strange muffling effect to many, as if the clamor of life had suddenly subsided, the peace slowed and the dimensions shrunk to neighborhood size.

"It's like being in a small town," a Manhattan office worker remarked. "It's a curious feeling."

As some sensed it, the surface impression was that nothing much was going on in the world, or so it seemed, judging from the silencing damper which had descended voer most major news circuits in this metropolis.

Feel Lost

"I feel lost," a midtown executive said, "Completely out of touch."

Such were reactions to the closing of most newspaper outlets here, as if the local scene had become oddly muted an insulated, without the stir of events-at-large.

"It's sort of peaceful," a young secretary said. "I know it's not real, and that all the fuss and happenings in the world are still going on, but without seeing the papers, it doesn't seem like it."

Newsstands were mostly bare of headlines, as crowds shuffled to work for the day. Seven of the city's eight major dailies were shut down because of a strike against one of them, The New York Times.

One afternoon daily, The New York Post, still was publishing, but that didn't ruffle the placid exterior of the morning. No papers came out here then.

Radio and TV

Unless you tuned in the radio or television set at breakfast, you were out of contact with affairs in general.

The atmosphere — on the subways, in the hotel lobbies, on park benches — was of something lacking, a missing link with the every-day routine, a vague sense of being cut off from things.

A tense commuter complained that it made him nervous. "I can't stand all these people staring at each other on the train."

It also upset special sectors of society, the stock market investor trying to learn the day's quotations, the horse player anxious about track results.

Newstand Dealer

A newsstand dealer said he was frequently asked about most anything he had in print, "Does it have the results?"

To many people, however, even though their own particular pursuits went along as usual, there was a sort of illusion of quitude, of nothing going on. It was all the more noticeable because of its incongruity in New York.

In this communications citadel, with its endless flow of news columns press agentry, celebrity stunts, cultural promotions and advertising, it's simply not normal to get no word of doings of the moment.

"It's almost as if the town had changed all at once and the usual round of activity had stopped," observed one citizen.

Life Goes On

"Of course, things are bound to be going on out there just the same." He waved a hand at the stoic skyscrapers. You just don't read about it.

To try to fill the void, broadcasters had greatly expanded their news programs. WNBC-TV yesterday devoted an hour to "The New York Times" featuring top staff members reading their stories and columns.

"You had to listen to the fashion and women's news and other stuff. I don't read to get the rest of it," a suburbanite said. "I keep the set on all morning before I get any news."

But to many working men, and the more industrious housewives, the day's schedule leaves scant chance for sitting down to radio or television until nightfall, and they ordinarily catch the day's news on the run.

Lonely Subways

That means while riding the train, at the lunchcounter, or in slack time at the office desk or store, where it's easy to have a newspaper at hand but not electronic equipment.

Eyes of subway riders wandered uncertainly, bereft of their usual refuge in the morning newsprint. Finding themselves staring at someone across the aisle, people would look uncomfortably to the ceiling, to panel posters, or down at their feet.

Others found substitute absorption in books or magazines. You could spot even some dignified elders perusing comic books and "authentic" romances, grabbed from the denuded newsstands.

To help keep newsstand dealers in business, the city license commissioner issued emergency authorizations for them to sell razor blades, shoe laces, tobacco and other small items if the shutdown noon.

There also were moves by some out-of-town newspapers to help fill the news gap. A trickle of bundled papers was beginning to reach a few city points from outlying communities.

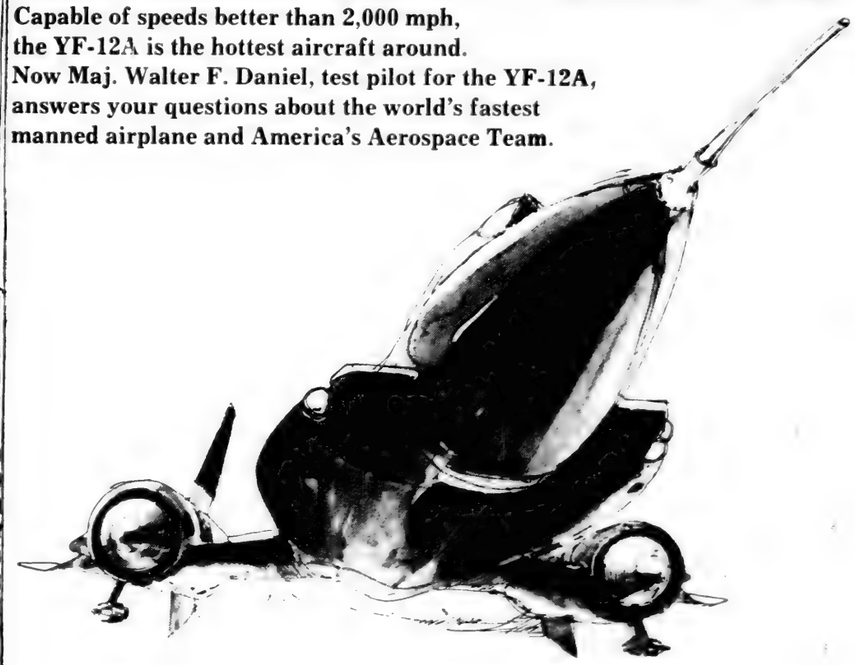
Capable of speeds better than 2,000 mph, the YF-12A is the hottest aircraft around. Now Maj. Walter F. Daniel, test pilot for the YF-12A, answers your questions about the world's fastest manned airplane and America's Aerospace Team.



(Maj. Daniel, a test pilot since 1954, is a member of the Society of Experimental Test Pilots. He received a B.S. degree in Aeronautical Engineering from the University of Oklahoma. In February 1962, he set world class time-to-climb records in a T-38 jet trainer.)

Is the YF-12A the world's fastest manned aircraft?

It certainly is. On May 1 of this year the YF-12A (formerly known as the A-11) reclaimed the world absolute speed record from the USSR. It was clocked at 2,062 mph over Edwards Air Force Base.

How big is the YF-12A?

The exact dimensions of the YF-12A have not been released yet. But it's approximately 100 feet long, with about a 50-foot wingspan. That's half again as big as our present interceptors!

Yes, very definitely. In spite of all you hear about unmanned vehicles, the human pilot is still very much in the picture. As a matter of fact, the Air Force pilot quota is on the increase.

What other kinds of jobs does the Air Force offer?

Since it's one of the world's foremost technological organizations, the Air Force has plenty of openings for scientists and engineers. There are also many challenging and varied administrative-managerial positions.

What do I have to do to become an Air Force officer?

Air Force ROTC is the best way to get started as an Air Force officer. The new two-year Air Force ROTC program makes this method available to men who have already completed a year or two of their college education. For college graduates, if you did not take advantage of ROTC, you can still get started through Air Force Officer Training School (OTS), a three-month course open to both men and women.

Can I keep up my studies while I'm in the Air Force?

The Air Force encourages its men and women to continue their educations. For instance, you may qualify to study for a graduate degree during off-duty hours, with the Air Force paying a substantial part of the tuition.

What kind of future do I have in the Air Force?

A bright one. As we move further into the Aerospace Age, the Air Force is going to grow even more important. And you can grow with it!

Baseball Fans Pay Tribute To Mantle

By SANDY TREADWELL
DTH Sports Writer

The baseball fan is a wonderful creature.

He's the man in a T-shirt chewing upon the stump of a half-smoked cigar while happily spilling beer all over himself and the people around him.

He is the lady with a straw hat and a big mouth which is always open yelling "ya bum" to the bullpen pitchers.

He is the young boy who finds both his heroes and his dreams on the smooth green grass and the red clay of the professional playing fields.

He is the cop who lets his eyes drift away from the crowds hoping that section 20 will be free of fights, foul balls, and heart attacks so that he can put his flat feet up and watch the game.

Last Saturday afternoon the baseball fan flocked to the cement walls of this historic stadium by the thousands.

They were small people but this day was special.

They stood in line at the entrances and watched. Yes, the fans at Yankee Stadium were probably more excited than ever before.

An old man pushed at the arm of a friend. "Listen to them buzz. They aren't talking about Aunt Hilda's will, or so and so's scandal, or the stock market or even the World's Fair. They're buzzing about number seven and the memories that go with it."

As I sat in the Stadium last Saturday I was one of 65,000 waiting to cheer him. His name and number had always been special to me. His was the most treasured bubble gum card and it was his name that I secretly assumed whenever I held a bat in my hands.

I remember seeing him for the first time, and I remember my disbelief when he struck out. I remember seeing him whip the ash bat through the air with such perfection that it sent countless baseballs arching into the seats. And I remember the pain of watching the swift legs slowly become stiff and fragile.

Sixty-five thousand rose to their feet and cheered as his name came through the loud speakers. Finally he walked from the dugout and waved his cap to the crowds. We cheered him for almost an hour, and we cheered loudest when he bent over the microphones and, with a nervous Midwestern voice wished that he could have fifteen more years with the Yankees.

If you happen to be in love with baseball you felt sad walking out of the Stadium after his day. You were sad because an era was drawing to a close. The sight of Mickey Mantle stepping up to the plate is sacred in the game. It is a moment of magic that millions have experienced. Soon it will only be a memory.

Co-captain Hank Barden

Michigan Battle Dispelled Doubts

By PAT STITH
DTH Sports Editor

North Carolina football players don't think Saturday's loss to Michigan, the Big Dog of the Big Ten, was a blessing in disguise. Neither does Hank Barden, their co-captin.

But Barden does see a blessing or two wrapped in the folds of that opening defeat.

"I thought we could win it," he said after watching films of the game Sunday. "I think all of the boys who had been around a while and had played that type of competition, thought we could win."

"But if there was any doubt among our younger players players that we could play evenly with a big name team, it shouldn't be there now. After last Saturday, the young ones should know that we have what it takes to handle anybody."

As college football players go, Hank Barden is an old timer. He came here as a freshman in 1960. In his junior year, he broke his right wrist early in the season and the Conference gave him another year under its hardship clause. Now he's actually in his fourth year of varsity ball.

Barden's personal injury record looks like a hospital chart for a whole ward.

Playing high school ball at Greensboro, he was the specimen of health. But during his college days he's spent a lot of time in sick bay.

His freshman year it was a bad ankle. His knee went into a cast during the spring of his sophomore year and then came the broken wrist and most recently, a partial shoulder separation.

After his last mishap, Hank handed in his old number 30 and asked for a jersey with better luck. Now he wears number 29.

"The kind of loss we took Saturday really hurts you," he said. "It's not so bad when you know you're completely out of it from the start, but we weren't.

"Michigan got us down early in the game but we never felt like we were out of it. We went on to lose by just one touchdown — it hurts."

Now the battle with Michigan is over and done with. Hank and his teammates are looking ahead to another Big Ten foe, Ohio State.

Tar Heels and Buckeyes have tangled only on one other occasion. That was back in 1962, when Barden was a sophomore, and it was under a setting similiar to this year's clash.

Intramurals Set For Banner Year

By BILL HASS
Dth Sports Writer

The 1965-66 Intramural Program at Carolina promises to be bigger and better than ever this year and things will start happening right away.

The first activity for the fall schedule is tag football, which will begin play Monday, Sept. 27. Dorm managers should have all team entries in by this Wednesday, Sept. 22. Games will be played Monday through Friday in Fraternity, Residence Hall and Graduate Divisions. A new feature of football this year will be night games on two new lighted fields adjacent to the gym. The fields should be ready for play in about two weeks.

A major change in the set-up for all intramural sports will eliminate the Fraternity and Residence Hall White Divisions entirely. Last year they were divided into Blue and White Divisions, but everyone will play in one division now. Football leagues in residence halls will be set up by the Residence College system. Preliminary competition will be a round robin schedule in a six-team league. Playoffs will be single elimination affairs until the champion is determined in each division.

A special event coming soon is the Cake Race which will be held on Thursday, Sept. 30. To enter, each person must run the mile-and-a-half course twice before the race. Entries can be made any time between Sept. 22 and Sept. 29. There are two divisions: the Novice for boys who have never run track or cross country, and the Open for letter winners, current members of the track team and freshmen planning to go out for track. Last year's winners were Bill Horn in the Novice Division and Mike Williams in the Open Division.

Thomas H. Johnson, Director of Intramurals, is enthusiastic over this year's program. Last year 60 per cent of the male student body, 5020 altogether, participated in one or more intramural activities setting all-time Carolina highs.

"We think we can do even better," Johnson said. "Every student that is physically able should benefit from at least one or two activities per year. The wide variety of sports should interest everyone."

Johnson stressed the need for student officials. At least 30 per day will be needed for football. All officials are paid a dollar an hour and anyone interested should attend an official's clinic Wednesday and Thursday of this week at 4:30 p.m. in room 304 in Woollen Gymnasium.

Also stressed was the fact that an "A" medical rating is required for participation. Any student with a "B" rating must obtain written permission from the infirmary before he will be allowed to participate. Johnson said that a new system of recording all participants on IBM cards will enable the office to check on medical ratings.

Coaches Call Prospects

Candidates for for freshman and varsity baseball, track, and swimming will hold organizational meetings and practices this week.

Baseball Coach Walter Rabb has slated a meeting of freshman and varsity candidates tonight at 7:30 in 304 Woollen Gym.

Fall practice begins tomorrow at 2 p.m. in Emerson Stadium. Those who cannot come to tonight's meeting should also attend.

Coach Joe Hilton has asked that candidates for the freshman track and cross country teams meet tonight at 7:30 p.m. in room 304 Woollen Gym.

All freshman swimming candidates should report to Coach Pat Earey in 303 Woollen tomorrow at 7 p.m.

Varsity candidates will also meet tomorrow at 7:30 in 302 Woollen.

Sharp, Cathey Say Dickson 'Unsuited' For Presidency

By ED FREAKLEY
DTH Staff Writer

Chancellor Paul . Sharp and Dean of Student Affairs C. O Cathey said yesterday they agree Paul Dickson is unsuited to remain in office as president of the Student Body.

The joint statement by UNC's two leading administrators said that the statement by a "significant number of the major student leaders" calling for Dickson to resign "represents in our opinion, their sincere conviction that he is unsuited to remain in office. With this sentiment we concur."

Dickson had no reply to make to the administration's statement.

Petition

A graduate student in political science said he is starting a recall petition. For recall to be effected 15 per cent of the eligible student voters will have to sign it.

Quentin Ludgin said, "The effrontery of the president in not resigning in the face of admitted conduct unbecoming the office of president forces me to take this action."

The issue over Dickson resigning evolved after he received an official reprimand from the Men's Honor Council this summer after being found guilty of helping a woman student break the rule against entering a closed fraternity house.

Dickson's sentence carries no penalty except a notation of the offense on the back of his permanent record card.

Dickson has said he will not resign and that he is confident his decision was one which was made "honestly and with a sincere regard for Student Government and the University."

Early last week Dickson was told by the administration that unless he resigned the case would be reopened by a faculty board.

However, a group of student leaders convinced the administration that this would be an unwise move and the ultimatum was withdrawn.

Judicial Councils

In yesterday's statement Sharp and Cathey said, "In accordance with University traditions of long standing the case involving the president of the Student Body and a coed was referred to the appropriate student judicial councils. These councils met separately, heard all evidence, rendered verdicts, and pronounced sentences.

"The two sentences differed in severity in that the woman student involved was suspended and the president of the Student Body was reprimanded. However, the sentences were pronounced by separate bodies.

In SG Hands

"The matter remains in the hands of Student Government. Any other course of action would constitute a marked deviation from tradition and would cloud the issue by creating the impression that a vendetta was being exercised by the University against the president of the Student Body," the administrations' statement said.

The letter by student leaders which asked Dickson to "honorably resign" cited four reasons.

1. "It is clear," that the continuance of the present situation can serve only to undermine all respect for our Student Government and its traditional authority.

2. "When this entire matter becomes public knowledge, and it surely will, the students, faculty, administration, and trustees of this institution will be placed in a position untenable in the eyes of the state of North Carolina."

3. "It is abundantly clear that the University administration no longer recognizes you as the representative head of this student body.

Obstacles

4. "Your continuance in office places insurmountable obstacles in the path of each of us we attempt to carry out our responsiblities to the student body, and should your position remain unchanged, we have serious reservations about our ability to continue effective service to this government."

The letter was signed by: Van MacNair, chairman of Men's Council; Leith Merrow, chairman of the Women's Council; Gray Reeves, women's attorney general; John Ingram, men's attorney general; Sonny Pepper, president of the Men's Residence Council; Frank Martin, president of the Interfraternity Council; Penny Scovil, chairman of the Women's Residence Council; and Jeri Moser, chairman of the Carolina Women's Council.

In refusing the demand made in the letter Dickson said, "To let any group of individuals other than the students themselves determine who should be and remain their president would be to abrogate the responsibility placed in me last spring."

Chinese Treat Airman Leniently

TOKYO — Communist China is bestowing lenient treatment upon Capt. Philip E. Smith, the U. S. Air Force pilot whose plane was downed by Chinese aircraft from Hainan Island yesterday, a Peking broadcast said today. It added that Smith appreciates the leniency.

The broadcast by the New China News Agency quoted one of its correspondents who said he interviewed Smith at Hoihow, Northeast Hainan, where the communists claimed Smith's plane was shot down.

"When this correspondent saw him, Smith was resting after having bathed and made a hearty meal of Chinese noodles. The Chinese army-men and people had been treating him leniently and he appreciated this," the broadcast said.

The agency also released a photograph purporting to show the capture of Smith.

"I hate this war. But I was made to come," it quoted him as saying.

"My wife must be very worried," Smith was reported as saying.

The pilot's wife, Mrs. Judith M. Smith lives in Victorville, Calif.

The agency also described how Smith was captured.

"The militiamen heard gunfire crackling overhead as they were collecting coral on a beach. On looking up, they saw a plane plummetting down, with dense smoke trailing behind.

"Then a tiny speck ejected from the plane and this was soon identifiable as two parachutes, one red and the other white.

Pakistanis Set Fire To Library

RAWALPINEI, Pakistan — White the Pakistani Air Force used U. S. planes against India, a mob of about 10,000 Pakistanis stoned and set fire to the U. S. Information Service Library in Karachi yesterday.

In the city of Lahore, the office of U. S. Consul General Lee E. Metcalf was stoned and American officials said the quarters were somewhat damaged.

Anger at American backing of a U. N. Security Council call for a cease-fire Wednesday in the Indian - Pakistani war flamed in the streets as the Pakistani Air Force announced destruction of an Indian Canberra bomber by its missile-armed F104 Starfighters, a Lockheed product.

The U. S. State Department in Washington quickly announced it is expressing strong concern to President Mohammed Ayes Khan's government, which is involved in a three-week-old war with India, another beneficiary of massive U. S. aid.

"Our present information is that Pakistani authorities are strengthening protection around our buildings in both these cities," said press officer Robert J. McCloskey. "We deplore these acts of violence and we are expressing our strong concern to the government of Pakistan."

Pakistani firemen and police dispersed the mob and put out the fire. Karachi district authorities followed up with an order prohibiting further processions, public meetings and demonstrations.

Teenagers Increased His Vocabulary

LONDON — Sir Mortimer Wheeler, 75-year-old archaeologist and expert in ancient languages, admitted today that London's teen-agers have increased his vocabulary.

Sir Mortimer told a London civil court that since a late-night coffee bar opened near his Westminster home he had learned several new expressions — especially from young girls who did not stop short of the "crudest Anglo-Saxon."

He said noise at the coffee bar went on into the small hours, mainly caused by "packs of youths and young women — I will not say maidens — who converge upon the coffee bar."

"The women I find are more precocious, and begin at 13 or 14 and probably wear out at 18," Sir Mortimer said.

He was giving evidence against an application by the coffee bar proprietor for a new seven-year lease. The hearing was adjourned to call further evidence.

CampusRadioVote To Be Held Oct. 5

Members of the Campus Radio Committee of Student Government are gathering their forces to push through approval of the campus carrier current radio system in a student body referendum to be held October 5.

Legislation establishing the system was stalled in Student Legislature last spring in one of the hottest political battles of the school year.

The carrier current system, which would cost nearly $36,000 in student funds to set up, would provide students with non-commercial AM radio programming and would feature music and news of student interest.

FM Signal

An FM radio signal would be broadcast within a five mile radius of campus from the proposed station, and transformers in University residence halls would convert the FM signal to AM for their respective buildings.

Signals within each building would actually be radiated by the electrical wiring.

"I hope that by referendum day the student body will be well informed and will take enough interest to vote on this issue," Campus Radio Committee Chairman John Stupak said yesterday.

"In the next two weeks, Mr. Dick Conelly and I will be making speeches wherever we are invited," Stupak said. "We will talk to any group interested in campus radio."

Stupak said he had several thousand pamphlets on campus radio ready for distribution.

Phamplets

"I hope the students will read the pamphlets before they put them in the circular file," he said.

Stupak said all interested groups may contact him through Student Government and speaking engagements will be arranged.

Blackwell

Campus radio legislation was held up in the Finance Committee of Student Legislature last spring because committee chairman Hugh Blackwell (SP) and other legislators wanted more time to hold hearings on the proposals.

Blackwell and his supporters stalled several attempts to bring the legislation out of committee.

If the referendum is passed, the Finance Committee will begin consideration of the proposals.

The results of the referendum, however, are not binding on the legislature, and there is no guarantee the bills will be passed.

Lenoir Hall?

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — A Swedish army conscript who took an extra pat of butter in his regiment's mess hall was found guilty today of neglect of duty and was ordered to forfeit two days' pay.

A Stockholm magistrate's court, however, rejected the prosecutor's demand for a heavy fine. The butter pat was valued at 7 ore (1 cent).

The 20-year-old soldier, Sven-Erik Thalinson, admitted he took the extra pat of butter, but said several other conscripts also had done so without being penalized for their petty crimes.

China Claims 'Complete Control' Of Dispute Area

TOKYO, Wednesday (AP)—Communist China claimed today its troops have taken "complete control" of a dispute area on the China-Sikkim border. Peking Radio said Indian troops withdrew after destroying their military works in the area.

India, in a protest note to China, charged that Chinese troops intruded a few hundred yards inside Sikkim territory at two places along the Sikkim border. Sikkim, in the high Himalayas, is an Indian protectorate.

The area, long disputed between India and China threatened in the past few days to spread the wars in Asia. Red China heated up the issue, apparently as part of a campaign to help Pakistan in its conflict with India.

China last Friday delivered an ultimatum to India warning it to withdraw from the Chinese - claimed area in three days or take responsility for "the grave consequences" which would follow. The Chinese later extended the deadline to Wednesday midnight.

The Chinese announcement issued by the official New China News Agency (Hsin Hua) said Indian troops destroyed 56 military works claimed to have been built in Chinese territory along the China-Sikkim boundary. The Chinese claimed India pulled out its forces from the area "to destroy evidence."

The Communists claimed India's pullout began Sept. 16 in an attempt "to destory evidence of its crimes against China."

The Chinese report followed the Indian government statement charging Communist Chinese troops intruded a few hundred yards inside Sikkim territory in two places along the Sikkim border.

India, in its protest note handed to the Chinese embassy Tuesday, branded the Chinese action as "premeditated acts of aggresstion and provocation," and urged Peking to "stop these military instrusions and building of many military works in Chinese territory.

"At Jelep La, the intruding Indian troops hurriedly and surreptitiously demolished the military works in the darkness of night. However, clear traces of the military works still remain at the sites.

"The intruding Indian troops had erected one military work at Cho La where there were few Indian troops. The day after China sent its note of Sept. 16, they fled, having no time to demolish the military work or take away the telephone lines."

"At Tungchu La and Nathu La, the intruding Indian troops stayed on until the 19th and 20th. Leaving behind evidence of their presence, they fled during the night and early morning mist after seeing Chinese troops drawing close to the military works to put them under observation."

SG Interviews Prospective Helpers

Interviews for students interested in serving on Student Government executive committees will continue today through Friday from 3 to 5 p.m. in Graham Memorial.

Student Government has a total of 23 executive committees which control a wide range of student activities.

Student Government officials have stressed the need for having members or supporters of both the Student and University Parties on these committees.

IFC Considers Modification Of Strict Silence Rushing

By JOHN GREENBACKER
DTH Political Writer

The Interfraternity Council heard proposals Monday night for a modification of the strict silence rushing rules, and a vote on the proposals will be held at the next IFC meeting.

Rush Committee Chairman Lindsay Freeman presented the modification which would allow fraternity men to speak to freshman students between the hours of 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. when they meet on campus.

Under current strict silence rules, fraternity men are not allowed to speak to freshmen until formal rush periods begin next spring.

Exception

The only exception to the rules comes in the case of orientation counselors, who are still forbidden to discuss individual fraternities with their counselees.

Second semester freshmen and transfer students will be bound to strict silence regulations until fall rush, whether the proposal is enacted by the IFC or not.

Several loopholes in the modification proposals, such as whether fraternity men and freshmen could speak to each other in off - campus areas, will be worked out in committee before the final vote next week.

IFC President Frank Martin warned freshmen to avoid fraternity houses during the fall semester and before rush.

He said there had been many complaints from fraternity officials about freshmen wandering into fraternity houses during party weekends.

Fall Rush

Fall rush for second semester freshmen, upperclassmen and transfer students will be held Oct. 4, 5 and 6. Hours for rush will be 7-10 p.m. on the first two days and 7-9 p.m. on the final day.

Violations of rushing rules will be treated severely by the IFC Court, according to court chairman Jeff Parker.

Parker said social probation for the fall semester of next year will be given to any house found in violation of rush rules.

Students must have a 2.0 average to be eligible for rush.

IFC members were presented copies of the new official IFC rush handbook, which greets rushees and provides them with a list of active fraternity men and a picture of each house on campus.

Fraternity officials were reminded that only fraternity men who have obtained a 2.0 average every second semester are eligible to participate in fraternity activities.

Specific details of the rules may be obtained from house presidents.

Draft Depends On State

WASHINGTON (AP)—Does the California surfer have a greater chance of getting drafted than the North Carolina farmer?

The surfer and the farmer would probably be surprised to learn that their draft chances depend very much on their fellow Californians and North Carolinians, a Selective Servie spokesman said today.

The Defense Department announced last week that November's draft call for the Army, Navy and Marines would be 36,450 — largest since the Korean War.

California, the union's most populous state with a 1965 population estimated at 18.6 million, had a draft call of 1,873 for October, 1,039 for September, and 1,133 for August.

In contrast, the North Carolina totals for those months was 431, 529 and 387. The State's population is estimated at 4.5 million.

Each State's draft quota is determined exclusively on availability, the Selective Service spokesman explained. "That means the capacity of the states to supply men qualified for military service and how many are available."

"Whatever variation takes place," the spokesman added, "would probably be inside the states."

For example, he said, the draft quotas would be lower in areas with heavy volunteer enlistments or in a retirement area populated by the elderly.

In those places, the spokesman said, "Population doesn't really have much to do with the draft quotas.

"Studies over the years have determined that the average age of the draftee is roughly the same in each state and the number of draftees reflects the state's available manpower," he said.

An Act Of Indiscretion

The administration has spoken in the Paul Dickson case.

Chancellor Paul F. Sharp and Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey have spoken loudly and bluntly — "We concur" with the sentiment that "he is unsuited to remain in office," they said.

Their statement is unwelcomed.

Perhaps they felt it best to lay things on the line. It is comforting to have an administration which has no fear of taking a strong stand, but we feel this statement will serve no purpose but providing fodder for those who would set Dickson up as a martyr.

Our conviction that Dickson should resign is not lessened, but if he continues his refusal, we feel the problem is one to be dealt with by students only. If Dickson wants to abdicate to the students his responsibility for a decision he feels he cannot make, and they decide he should remain in office, sobeit.

Unintentionally or not, the administration's statement inflames the situation.

"The matter remains in the hands of Student Government," they said. "Any other course of action would constitute a marked deviation from tradition and would cloud the issue by creating the impression that a vendetta was being exercised by the University against the president of the Student Body."

A very true statement.

However, the issuance of such a severe condemnation of Dickson contradicts their intention of wanting to avoid "clouding the issue."

We opposed administrative involvement in this case before; we oppose it now and we will continue to oppose it. If student self government is indeed to be self-governing, it must act independently.

We cannot believe the administration wants this problem handled by any group other than students themselves. Nevertheless, they have made it harder than ever for a settlement to be reached by speaking out now.

They have been forthright — but at a time when they should have been discreet.

Operation Match Is Coming

Computerized automation.

It's all around us. It registers you for your courses, it addresses a lot of the mail you get, it keeps an eye on your bank account, it can even grade your quizzes.

Questionnaires are being distributed here and on 33 other campuses in the state. For $3, a student has the privilege of answering questions about himself — interests, attitudes, appearance and reactions to various social situations.

Then the facts will be fed into a computer, which will promptly spew forth at least five scientifically compatible dates.

Sounds pretty good, but somehow we just can't reconcile ourselves to romance by electronics. How can anybody deprive himself of that enjoyable element of risk in a blind date — by knowing that she is precisely computer-tailored to his tastes?

The results of this thing could be devastating. Suppose these questionnaires are circulated in Victory Village. Some of the married folks might try it out just for the heck of it, and find out they have been happily married to the wrong person all this time. The campus could be swamped with divorces and a Dean of Marital Problems would have to be hired.

It looks as if this venture may create the only real crisis to hit this school in the last day or so, and everyone should consider the consequences before he becomes involved in this thing.

There are these things to consider: Are you willing to let a big machine with flashing lights and flying cards tell you how to run your personal social life? Do you want to get rid of that romantic air of suspense before a blind date? Do you want to risk a social upheaval on this campus? Do you want five dates — picked to satisfy your desires?

Think it over while we go borrow $3 and try to find one of those questionnaires.

North Carolina Goes Downhill With Moore Cast As Non-Leader

By ED FREAKLEY
DTH Staff Writer

When asked what his reaction was to the statement by Barry Goldwater denouncing North Carolina's Speaker Ban Law, Governor Dan Moore replied "No comment."

The Governor said he would not make a statement until he heard the report of the Britt Commission.

This is a typical reply for Moore.

Back during the heated debate over changing State College's name to North Carolina State University the Governor was again quiet and non-committal. It seems like an insignificant matter now, but at the time it was of utmost importance to his constituents around the state.

The question of reapportionment is now becoming a serious problem. And as always the Governor is remaining closed-mouth.

The governor of North Carolina, as in other states, is supposed to be the leader of the state and the spokesman of the people. The Governor's duties include formulating policy and presenting it to the legislature for approval. He, as the chief executive, is expected to be the head of the government, citizens and state.

These are the things we think the Governor is supposed to be.

Dan Moore has a somewhat different conception of his role. He seems to feel that he should remain silent on important issues. He doesn't wish to rock the boat. Or perhaps he is afraid his real feelings will not meet with approval.

North Carolina was a state on the move during the Hodges - Sanford era. These two men were leaders, they were men who were not afraid to make decisions. The government was moving, to be sure it was not always in the right direction, but progress was becoming North Carolina's foremost product.

Luther Hodges and Terry Sanford were men of action. People knew who they were, what they were doing and how they were doing it.

Some people don't even know who Dan Moore is, few know what he is doing and no one knows how he is doing whatever it is he is doing.

Over the past 30 years state governments have become weaker and weaker. The massive government in Washington is casting a shadow over the states that may never fall.

Only leadership of the highest quality and quanity will bring the sun over state government once again.

The governor in Raleigh is not a leader: In truth he is not a very good follower. Executive action has been nonexistent.

Dan Moore has become the hearse behind a very slow horse.

In Defense Of The Ban

Writer Claims The General Assembly Is Merely Revoking UNC 'Privilege'

By WILLIAM OTIS

Last Friday's Daily Tar Heel saw allies of the speaker ban characterized variously as "juvenile," "obstinate," "unethical," "petty," "vindictive," "vicious," and "odious." They were assailed as men "lacking in objectivity," plagued with "self-deceit" and "short on integrity."

The merits and demerits of the law were not discussed. It seems a foregone and unanimous conclusion in this, a university which takes so much pride in its tolerance of unpopular and dissenting opinions, that the speaker ban is entirely without value, and that its adherants are accurately described only by the most derisive epithets, befitting their foul motives and-or Neanderthal minds.

It has been said that the worth of the speaker ban has been previously debated at sufficient length. This seems a peculiar attitude in an intellectual community, and can be dismissed anyway because the legal, ethical and practical ramifications of the law are so complex and so widely felt. But it is, after all, easier to dispense with personal abuse against those with whom we disagree than to exert ourselves in a continued debate with them. At best the campus will see only one side of the speaker ban debate, as was amply demonstrated last year when a total of two articles appeared in the Daily Tar Hell in support of the law. I wrote both.

It is not difficult, though, to understand why some opponents of the ban have resorted to villification of their adversaries. For months now over-zealous Legionnaires have been insinuattng that friends of repeal are Communists, or Communist sympathizers, or at least dull-witted Communist dupes. This can become thoroughly tiring, and, if continued, quite enraging, but it should not ignite the torrent of abrasive verbiage that settled over last Friday's editorial page.

An enlightened person can certainly dismiss the indefensible assertion that opposition to the ban signifies Marxist leanings. There may appear from time to time a frantic voice of doubtful credibility (such as that of Carl Braden) among the chorus protesting the law, but such instances are infrequent and of little significance. It may be instructive, however, to reflect a moment on the motives of even these infrequent voices in calling for repeal.

A thorough defense of the ban is a formidible undertaking, complicated by the emotional atmosphere in which the discussion must now be conducted. Nevertheless, it appears necessary, for a great number of the law's supporters have proven tactless and inept in stating their arguments.

The speaker ban was drafted by the North Caroilna Secretary of State and enacted by the 1963 General Assembly. It reads as follows:

"No college or university, which receives any state funds in support thereof, shall permit any person to use the facilities of such college or university for speaking purposes, who: (a) is a known member of the Communist Party; (b) is known to advocate the overthrow of the Constitution of the United States or the state of North Carolina; (c) has pleaded the Fifth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States in refusing to answer any question, with respect to communist or subversive connections, or activities, before any duly constituted legislative committee, any judicial tribunal, or any executive or administrative board of the United States or of any state."

The law states that it is to be enforced by the "Board of Trustees, or other governing authority, of such college or university, or by such administrative personnel as may be appointed therefor by the Board of Trustees or other government authority of such college or university."

Two points must be noted here. First is that the sole ambiguity in the law itself is that it fails to provide penalties for its violation. Otherwise, the language is clear and explicit. Second and fundamentally important, is the fact that the law is a regulation governing the use of the facilities of state-supported colleges; it is NOT a proscription of the liberty of any individual. To understand why the ban is not in violation of Constitutional guarantees, one need only realize that to forbid the enlistment and use of state-owned property by Communist speakers, is not to forbid freedom of speech to Communists.

Another charge frequently directed at the ban is that it is an infringement upon the academic freedom of the University. This charge is based upon the incorrect assumption that this University has, or has had, a measure of academic freedom. THIS IS A STATE OWNED AND STATE SUPPORTED INSTITUTION, AND, AS SUCH, ENJOYS ONLY THOSE PREROGATIVES THE STATE SEES FIT TO GRANT IT. Whether the law fosters or hinders the unimpeded pursuit of knowledge which is the ideal purpose of a university, then, it is not relevant. The General Assembly has simply chosen to revoke a privilege it had previously granted; it is simply exercising a facet of the authority it has always possessed, but which it had before permitted to the Trustees.

Most opposition to the ban has thus far badly misconstrued the purpose of the law. Some claim that the ban was intended to avoid a confrontation of minds between students and slick salesmen of Communist dogma. I suppose that there are supporters of the law sufficiently removed from reality to believe that the ban would actually accomplish this, and others sufficiently dull-witted and insecure to believe that it should. However, no rational argument for the ban holds that it shields, or ought to shield, the student from seductive propaganda or Communist criticism of Western democracy.

Obviously it cannot, and it does not, and dispassionate persons can perceive that this is not the intent of the law.

Others say the law is a slap at the University for its indulgence of civil rights activity. It was, in fact, enacted after a riot in Raleigh involving some college faculty members, at a time when the president could not be immediately located. Thus it does seem likely that a few votes for the ban may have been directed as a reprisal.

Be this as it may, the real purpose of the law is neither to shield nor to punish us. The law was enacted, and maintains its high popularity, simply because the overwhelming majority of the citizens of the state do not care to see their tax revenues used for the maintenance of a platform for persons who advocate the violent overthrow of our present form of government. This seems an entirely reasonable position, one seated in neither stupidity nor malice.

The practical effects of the law are nearly non - existent. Our campus was not a favorite of Communist speakers before the ban, and is not likely to become one after its repeal, if it is repealed.

What HAS caused concern is the reaction of a number of individuals and organizations to the law. But note that these are REACTIONS TO THE LAW, NOT THE LAW ITSELF. One Professor Haldane, a widely recognized authority in biology, cancelled a speaking appearance at our campus after having been asked about his past editorial association with the Communist Daily Worker. At least one association of scholars has declined to meet at the University because of its attidude toward the ban. It is hardly reasonable, though, to hold the General Assembly or the American Legion responsible for the ever-so-delicate sensitivities of a number of scholars. After all, it was these people who chose of their own volition to shun the University; the law itself did not affect them. Furthermore, many more scholars and associations remain, as ever, satisfied to congregate at the University and pursue their disciplines.

Nevertheless, it is argued that the University was injured by the loss of Professor Haldane's lecture. Insofar as his person was not physically present on the campus grounds for a number of hours, this is true. Insofar as Professor Haldane's lecture is available in print by the ream, on this campus as elsewhere, it is false. The same can be said of other individuals and organizations — whether they choose to meet on our grounds or not, their contributions to learning will be readily available to the University in textbooks, journals, and circulars.

A second reaction to the ban, and the one causing most concern to students, is that the Southern Accreditation Association has placed our accreditation in possible jeopardy. It has taken this position regardless of the fact that no tangible or intangible evidence has been produced showing that the quality of the student body, or of the faculty, or of the administration has diminished since the enactment of the ban. To the contrary, the quality of each of these has demonstrably increased since 1963. It seems, then, that the Association has adopted its arbitrary position simply to compel the University to militate more beligerently against a regulation the Association finds more embarrassing than baneful.

A third reaction to the law has been that of the faculty. Last spring, over 100 faculty members signed a statement noting their considerable distress at what they regarded as a curtailment of their freedom of inquiry. The statement made it clear that some might feel compelled to resign should the ban remain. It can only be said that if any professor actually believes that he will be impeded in either his instruction or his research because he lacks the opportunity to hear, personally, on this campus, whatever infrequent speakers the law forbids, then he is fully justified in leaving the University. Otherwise, I trust that the devotion of our faculty to the University will outweigh the discomfort caused it by the ban. The fact that not a single professor has thus far felt compelled by the law to leave heartens this trust.

Personally, I would appreciate the opportunity to hear and to question Communists speaking on topics both intellectual and political. Thus I would welcome a now probable amendment to the law to provide this opportunity, insofar as this change is acceptable to the citizens of the state. The point is that my personal preferences are of no concern so long as I choose to exercise the privilege of attendance at a state-supported university. We should have the vision to realize that the University's life is rightfully governed by the legislature that nourishes it, and the maturity to coexist with the few regulations the legislature enacts for us.

The University is a center of learning. If it cannot function without the repeal of this single law, the speaker ban, its failure will be due to internal weaknesses, weaknesses, far more critical than any even the most benevolent regulation could remedy.

Carolina At Night — A Symphony In Black

The Moon And Stars Sing To Carolina

The kind of bright yellow moon that shines only late in the month of September is a billion years old. The oldest building on campus seems newly-born compared to all its years.

But after sundown, when all the color drains from the Chapel Hill landscape, the ancient and the new recompose, in shades of gray, to form an entirely new campus.

The crickets are the first to notice. Their chirping from the woods beside the Ramshead Parking Lot is carried on the night air into the windows of nearby residence halls.

The constant smell and noise of automobiles is hushed. The noise of the juke boxes in Harry's and of the bells in the academic buildings has quieted for a few hours.

Photos By Jock Lauterer and Ernest Robl

Campus policemen are all that is left of the work force that filled the campus a few hours before but has now retired with the light from the sun.

A new kind of light is in control now. Dotting the few still wakeful windows of the dormitories, they are less distrubing than the fiery sun. They do not interfere with the life of the night.

The few who have come away from bed to enjoy the night walk silently and alone along the dew-moistened brick walks. The sound of the leather of their shoes harmonizes with the noises and the crickets and the peacefulness of the refrain makes reality like a dream.

The night is a time for thinking. Because there is nothing in the night to worry you, you have no worries. The beauty of the campus leaves no room for sorrow.

There is, however, a faith that the night is temporary. A faith that after a few restful hours the coming of day will interrupt the serenity of the gray night.

And the campus of the day requires an attention to objectivity that the night does not demand.

How Well Do You Know Carolina Football?

From The 1965 UNC Football Blue Book

Football at Carolina dates back to 1888, some 77 years ago. There have been some great individuals who starred during that time, some events of historical importance which took place as the Tar Heels performed.

Did you know that a Carolina player threw what is regarded as football's first forward pass?

Did you know that a team from Chapel Hill once played four games in five days — without a loss?

How much Carolina football do you know? Quiz yourself in this special section. You'll uncover some interesting sidelights.

Q. What Carolina players bore the nicknames of "Snuffy," "Sweet," "Choo Choo," "Monk," "Yank," "Hump," "Rabbit," and "Runt"?

A. George Stirnweiss, Jim Lalanne, Charlie Justice, Angus Morris McDonald Jr., George Tandy, Herman Synder, Merle Bonner and Robbins Lowe.

Q. Charlie Justice scored 39 touchdowns during his four - year career at Chapel Hill. Does he hold the single game mark?

A. No! Alfred McDonald ripped off 24 points against Davidson in 1934. Several other Tar Heels scored as many as four touchdowns in a game, but their feats took place before the TD was worth six points. One of Justice's best afternoons was against Geogia in 1948 when he crossed the goal three times. He did the same against several teams during his career.

Q. Who is considered the punt return king of Carolina football?

A. Johnny Branch is usually the first name to be spoken. In his book are returns of 90, 85, 68, 63 and 60 yards—as well as jaunts of lesser distance.

It's Charlie Choo Choo

Q. When did North Carolina have three football captains—but only two wore equipment?

A. Joe Wright of Asheville and George Sparger of Mt. Airy were co-captains of the 1947 squad. However, the players elected a third captain. He was in spirit only. Cotton Sutherland of Laurinburg was killed in an automobile accident the previous spring.

Q. One of the longest kickoff returns in the record books belongs to a former newspaperman who was hailed as a great North Carolina editor. Who was he?

A. The late Louis (Louie) Graves was an outstanding Tar Heel halfback. In 1901 he hauled back a punt against N. C. State measured at 90 yards.

Q. What Carolina team was the best at goal crossing?

A. The 1914 team scored 359 points while winning 10, losing only once.

The Punt Return King

Q. What was the tremendous disappointment of the 1935 season?

A. Carolina went into the Duke game unbeaten and had allowed only 19 points in eight previous outings. A Rose Bowl bid was expected if Duke were downed. The Blue Devils surprised the football world by winning, 25-0, and the Tar Heel dream was shattered. The next week Carolina showed its wrath in the Virginia game, winning by 61-0.

Q. What prices were charged for UNC's first football game?

A. Carolina began playing football during the fall of 1888. The first game was played against Wake Forest at the State Fair in Raleigh on October 18. Wake Forest won by a score of 6-4. Admission to the game was 25 cents for gentlemen, 15 cents for ladies.

Sweet And Sure

Q. What is the largest crowd the Tar Heels have played before?

A. In 1962 a turnout of 84,000 watched the Carolina - Ohio State game.

Q. What was the occasion for Bill Blount's busy afternoon against Wake Forest in 1922?

A. The Demon Deacons were beaten on Sept. 20 by a score of 62-3. Blount kicked a total of seven extra points.

Q. What Carolina game in 1910 proved that statistics are nice, but it's only the score that really matters?

A. The Tar Heels faced a good Washington & Lee team that day. Carolina ripped up and down the field in amassing 27 first downs to a scant three for the Generals. Yet, W. & L. emerged the victor, 5-0.

Q. How did the forward pass come to football?

A. In 1895, the Tar Heels supposedly attempted the first one against Georgia. It was a shorty which was completed. The receiver then sped 70 yards for a touchdown, the margin of a 6-0 Carolina win. The famed Pop Warner, Georgia coach, protested loud and long against what he called a decidedly illegal maneuver. The referee did not honor his protest. In 1905, the forward pass went into football's book of rules.

Q. What have been the greatest margins by each side in the Duke - Carolina series?

a. the Blue Devils trimmed UNC by 47-12 in 1954. Carolina's biggest game was a 50-0 triumph in 1959.

Q. In the early days of Carolina football, how were substitutions made?

A. A player departed action only because of injury. There was no shuttling of players as seen today.

Q. What Carolina coach held office longest at UNC?

A. Carl Snavely coached a total of 10 years at Carolina, eight of them in succession from 1945-1952. Chuck Collins, who coached eight straight years, and Jim Hickey, now beginning his seventh, are the next in line.

Q. What two world-famous people attended UNC games of the past?

A. President Calvin Coolidge was on hand for the 1928 Virginia - UNC scrap on a Thanksgiving Day. The Queen of England and Prince Phillip watched the Tar Heels play Marland in 1957.

Q. Army and Carolina have met one time on the football field. When did that occur?

A. The game was held at West Point in 1944, and Army plowed under a war-weakened UNC squad by 46-0. Big Doc Blanchard ran wild, scoring once on a run of 60 yards.

Q. What was Carolina's greatest single afternoon in compiling football yardage?

A. In 1959 Carolina overwhelmed Virginia by a score of 41-0. The Tar Heels rolled up 32 first downs to Virginia's 9 and amassed 583 yards from scrimmage for a new Carolina and ACC record.

Q. Who were Carolina's best punters?

A. There is a long list of good punters in Carolina history, but Charlie Justice, a master of the quick - kick, holds the career record with an average of 42.5 over four seasons. Fullback Harry Dunkle, whose gift was long, high spirals, had the best season with a 46.6 mark in 1939. Both men were nationally recognized.

Q. Ken Willard turned in a great performance his first game after graduating from Carolina. Where was it apd what did he receive?

A. In the East-West collegiate all-star game at Buffalo, N. Y., in June, Willard, a starting halfback, reeled off 133 yards in a marvelous running performance which sparked the East to a victory. He was named the game's MVP.

Q. What unpleasant record did the Tar Heels set in 1915?

A. Seven regulars were sidelined by injuries in the VMI game that year. The substitutes found the ball squirting about like soap in a shower. A total of 16 fumbles were recorded, only two recovered. Yet Carolina managed a 3-3 tie.

Q. What high honor did Charlie Justice receive the summer after he had finished his varsity career?

A. "Choo Choo" was named the Most Valuable Player of the 1950 college All-Star game in Chicago, won by the All-Stars, 17-7.

Q. What Carolina captain was quickly picked out on the field because of his mustache?

A. Harry Schwartz, an outstanding center of the 1926-27-28 teams.

Q. What was the most impressive start in Carolina's football history?

A. The 1914 team won its first five games each by 40 or more points. The season ended on a sour note with a 20-3 loss to Virginia, the lone setback in 10 contests.

Q. What was impressive about the 1929 record of 9-1?

. The Tar Heels never scored less than two touchdowns per game with the single loss to Georgia by 19-12. Its 346 points made it one of two teams to have bypassed the 300-point figure.

UM Game Leaves Mixed Emotions

By GENE RECTOR
DTH Assistant Sports Editor

A pleased but disappointed Jim Hickey held fort at his Tuesday press conference. The Michigan loss and the coming battle with Ohio State were the big topics.

"I'm proud we came back against Michigan after being behind 21-0," said Hickey. "But I am disappointed that we were in such a position to begin with.

"Sure, we threw the ball well," he said, "but when you're behind that much, there's not much point in running with it.

The Michigan defensive secondary also had its influence on the running game.

"We completed quite a number of passes," said Hickey, "but never any long bombs. Their secondary reacted quickly and hit harder than any I have seen in a long while.

"Everytime our backs turned the corner, one of the Michigan defensive halfbacks was there to meet him.

Hickey also pointed out some glaring Tar Heel errors. "Most of our mistakes were mental rather than physical," said Hickey.

"We had troubles with our defensive line because our more experienced interior linemen were not helping out our less experienced ends.

"Let's face it," he said. "You expect the line to be blocked against a team as big and strong as Michigan. They blocked everyone they played last year."

Hickey did have praise for several performers.

Defensive backs Gene Link, Alan McArthur, Bill Darnall and defensive end Jim Masino were tabbed for their play in the Michigan loss.

Hickey, whose Tar Heels set a UNC single-game record last Saturday for most passes attempted and completed, would make no offensive predictions for the Ohio State game.

"We're familiar with the Ohio State style of defense," said Hickey. "So is everyone else across the country. But I can't say if we will run or pass more than we did last week.

"We plan to have our total offense ready. The type of defense we face will dictate our style of offense.

"For example," he said. "Michigan had eight men in their offensive line most of the time. Needless to say, we couldn't run too effectively.

"We feel that any team we play may stop either our running or passing game. When one is taken away, we use the other.

"If they take away both of them," said Hickey smiling, "you might as well pack up and come home."

Hickey plans no change in the quarterback rotation.

"We're fortunate to have two fine quarterbacks such as Talbott and Beaver," he said. "We will start the one we feel will do the best job."

Assistant coach and chief scout Emmett Cheek had no soothing words about Saturday's foe, Ohio State.

"They can be just as strong as Michigan," said Cheek who observed the Buckeyes in their final game-type scrimmage last Saturday.

"We hope their backs won't be as strong as Michigan's Ward and Ditwiler, but we're expecting a rough afternoon.

"Their offense should be their strong point," continued Cheek. "They lost only three starters from last year's unit — a left tackle, a center and a right guard.

"He plans to run at them," said Cheek. "But if they press, he'll throw the long bomb.

"Their bread and butter play," he said, "is still the fullback off tackle — the old 'three yards and a cloud of dust' style.

JEFF BEAVER

Dr. Frank Graham Cheers Tar Heels

This is a story of how not to prepare for a heat wave. It concerns Whid Powell and Charlie Stancell of this hamlet, whose duty it is each football weekend to play mother to the visiting press.

Whid and Charles set up the hot dog machinery, check the soft drink containers, display the tubs of fried chicken and lay out the various sandwiches. They also order coffee by the gallon.

Last Saturday the pair lugged 18 gallons of java to the Michigan - Carolina game. They slightly overestimated the demand. The afternoon was one of the hottest on record for a contest at Kenan Stadium. The press box was a steam cabinet.

"As best I can recall," said Powell, "I poured three cups."

"Today is the opportunity for Carolina to welcome a great sister American university to Chapel Hill. As all North Carolina and 50,000 sons and daughters of Carolina listen loyally for the score, we send you our best wishes for victory today over the Rose Bowl champions, the University of Michigan. Let's go Carolina!"

It was signed: FRANK GRAHAM.

Frosh Soccer Team Grows

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

"C'mon, move . . . dig hard . . . run it out . . . make it hurt!"

Such was a typical sequence of prodding cries from freshman soccer Coach Clarke Herdic yesterday as he paced more than 50 candidates through the second full day of pre-season conditioning.

The humid heat was almost intolerable, but Herdic expressed pleasure at the way most of the boys have shown up.

"There are a number of guys out here who show pretty good potential," the young UNC grad student said. "But it will be awhile before we see how well they mold together as a unit.

"We will be filling most of our practice time for the next couple of days with running and exercise," the frosh coach continued, "and then things should start to shape up as far as probably positions are concerned.

Changing his tone of voice and shifting his relative line of thought, Coach Herdic commented, "I was disappointed when only about 40 boys showed up for the first workout yesterday. But today the squad has built up into the 50's and I'm hoping to see still more out here as the week goes on.

"I was told to expect around 70 boys for the freshman team and maybe there will be that many with us before the week's out."

Herdic says he plans to keep between 30 and 35 players on the squad, and the decisions must be made within the next several weeks before the opening of the season.

There is no way to speculate as to who will stick with the club, but judging from the air of optimism which is evident when Clarke Herdic speaks on soccer, his select group will be ready when the starting gate is opened.

Barnes Lays Mat Strategy

Wrestling Coach Sam Barnes in confident. Although the small square westling room deep in the bowels of Woollen Gym won't echo with the agonized grunts of countless hopeful grapplers until Oct. 15, Barnes has already gone to work.

All week he has been collecting the names of dozens of competent freshmen and he has drawn up the blueprint of this season's lineup.

For the varsity, Al Fransisizin seems set at 123 pounds; Jim Goodwin will face opponents in the 130 pound division; Bill Cook in the 137; and Jay Jacobson is likely to start at 160 pounds.

Jay Hannan will fill the 167 spot, the footballer Chuck Alexander will be this year's heavyweight. All are returning lettermen The only gap to fill is at 177 pounds.

Due to a recent change in conference rules one extra weight has been added. This will provide a solution to one of Barnes most frustrating problems.

Last year two of Carolina's best grapplers clashed in a dispute over the right to wrestle in the ACC Tourney. This year their rivalry will end. Captain Roy Hagerty, last year's conference champion, will wrestle at 145 pounds and Lane Verlanden will follow in the 152 division.

Barnes believes that Maryland will once again be the team to conquer. Last year it placed first in the ACC and tenth in the nation. The Terps have lost several starters but they always come up with good replacements.

North Carolina also has this quality. The Tar Heels are young, only three seniors, and experienced.

Last year's freshmen were strong, and their successors look as though they may be the finest ever. Sam Barnes believes that his team will be rated second in the ACC, and when the seson opens he'll be shooting for number one.

Athletic Program Costs Big Money

Athletics, at North Carolina and at every other large university, is big business.

When an instate Tar Heel football player takes the field he represents an investment of well over $6,000. That figure ranges on up as high as $7,200 for those men brought in from out-of-state.

That includes such items at $29.95 for a helmet, $27.95 to $34.95 for shoulder pads. $21.45 for jerseys, $25 for pants, and $10 for hip pads. Foul weather gear and practice equipment runs the figure up to $153.

"Expenditures for football equipment runs around $20,000 annually," said Erickson. This includes sums like 6,000 for laundering uniforms and towels, $5,000 for news releases, pictures, and the combined coaching salaries of $75,000.

Football is presently the only self-supporting sport at Carolina. Erickson estimates that it takes from four to five hundred thousand dollars per year to make ends meet, and to support some 20 other teams which contribute few, if any, dollars to the budget.

Why did Erickson schedule the Big Ten powers, Michigan and Ohio State, and what does it mean to Carolina football?

He supplied several reasons: "One is prestige. You like to play the top schools whenever possible. You've got to be conscious of what the fans' desire these days. You have to try to give them the best. Otherwise they will not come on Saturday."

"More dollars from football also allows us to run a better all around program in all our sports than would otherwise be possible.

What does going to a bowl game contribute financially? "Practically nothing," answered Erickson, "unless you go to of the big ones like the Cotton, Rose, Sugar, or Orange Bowl. We barely made ends meet playing at the Gator Bowl in Jacksonville two years ago.

UNC Cardboard

Reserve seats for you and your date for the remaining home football games are now available on the 45 yard line. These seats have been set aside for members of the UNC Cardboard, a campus organization responsible for the card stunts at the games.

After a successful season last year, the Cardboard wants to expand its membership.

Any and all interested persons, male and female, freshmen, sophomores, juniors, and seniors, should attend the organizational meeting tomorrow at 7 p.m. in Roland Parker No. 1 in Graham Memorial (upstairs), or should get in touch with John Grover at 968-1385.

Help support the football team through your participation and cooperation. Stop by Graham Memorial Thursday night for further details.

Frosh Footballers Say They Live 'Tough' Life

By RON SHINN
DTH Sports Writer

What's it like to be a freshman football player?

It's tough.

Aspiring frosh footballers live tucked away in a special section of Ehringhaus Dormitory. They eat, sleep, practice, and study together.

They are supervised in nearly everything they do. They get up at an appointed time, eat their meals all at one time, study each night in an organized study hall, and go to bed at an appointed time.

It sounds more like Marine boot camp than a college freshman football camp, but it's a necessary procedure that teaches the discipline of college football, coaches say.

"It's for our own good," explains big Tommy Gardner (6-3, 262) from Plymouth. The husky tackle prospect leaned back in his chair and took time out from an impromptu guitar session to talk football.

The biggest difference in high school and college football? "Everybody up here is good, instead of just one or two on each team, like it was in high school.

"Another thing is that the game is so much quicker here. We are always moving. There's just no such thing as a loafer around here. We scrimmage every day, which is unheard of in high school."

Another player that wandered into the group quoted a remark that Coach George Barclay had made earlier about his biggest problem with the frosh.

"Our hardest job," Barclay said, "is taking these high school players and getting them to fit into our system. Sometimes we have to completely reteach them how to play. They have to be team men first, stars second."

The boys' strongest desire isn't to play varsity ball, but to do well in school, or so it seemed.

"We're up here to get a good education," said one of the group. "Dong good in the classroom is my number one goal. All of us here want to play on the varsity, but not a the expense of flunking out of school."

From the day that the freshmen reported to practice (Labor Day), they were used as sparring partners for the varsity.

Transistorized Sex

'Match' Eliminates Much Hit-Or-Miss; May Make Some UNC Misses Into Mrs.

A revolutionary new idea designed to solve the woes and frustrations of unattached college students in their pursuit of suitable dates will receive its first test south of the Mason-Dixon Line on the UNC campus this fall.

The system — appropriately titled "Operation Match"— was originally devised by five blind-date-weary Harvard University juniors last year. Its principal attraction is that, unlike other, similar ideas, it uses an IBM computer to provide date contacts based on individual likes and dislikes, academic interests, religious preferences, race, and other personality and character standards.

According to David Broadhurst, publicity operations manager and coordinator of the statewide campaign, the UNC operation is being organized by students living in Old West Dormitory. Heading the state-wide campaign is Rusty Taylor, a UNC law student, who was one of the original five men behind the Harvard drive.

Explaining that this plan is being operated this year as a "pilot program" for the rest of the South, Broadhurst added that it is limited to North Carolina schools in order to enable applicants to be within reach of their suggested dates.

Five Districts

"The state is divided into five general match districts," explained Broadhurst, "each of which encompasses most of the colleges in that district. So far, we have Match represented on 33 North Carolina campuses, and we may expand it to one or two more in this section of the country."

Broadhurst also mentioned that the questionnaires have now been placed at central points on campus and that they're available now to interested students. "They should be reminded that they've got to fill out two Match answer sheets if they decide to participate," he said. "The first is on themselves, the second on how they would want prospective dates to answer the questions."

Five Names

"All the information on the answer sheets will be fed into the computer at the same time," Broadhurst explained. "The machine will then digest the information and issue forth a minimum of five names, addresses, and telephone numbers of prospective dates for each answer sheet it receives."

In its initial tests, Match used information recorded on questionnaires filled out by 20,000 college students who were willing to subject their interest and value standards to the computer's judgment. Included in the application form were such questions as:

Examples

— "A friend of yours has been earning money in the summer by taking a door-to-door survey for a research organization. Some of the questions are quite personal. He offers you a chance to take over the job for a day.

"You would do which of the following:

(1) Be amazed that he would even ask someone like you.

(2) Thank him, but decline the offer this time.

(3) Get up your courage and accept.

(4) Accept enthusiastically."

— "In a snack bar you overhear a college girl saying how her roommate, an honor student, is in trouble for coming back at 3 a.m., two hours past her curfew, from a date at a drive-in movie. Her roommate has explained to the dean that her boy friend's car broke down on a back road.

"You would immediately think:

(1) 'car broke down—hah!'

(2) 'I doubt it.'

(3) 'Well, maybe.'

(4) 'The girl is probably telling the truth.'

— "What do you do if you have a blind date for a big dance and your roommate says she's good - looking — but you find she's not?

(1) Suggest going to a movie instead.

(2) Monopolize your roommate's date, leaving your roommate only one noble alternative.

(3) Dance with your date, smiling weakly, but end the evening as early as possible.

(4) act friendly the whole time and run the risk of getting trapped into a second date."

Other questions posed by the Match system deal with smoking and drinking habits, education, social class, academic record, church attendance record, family income, and size of the student's hometown.

Despite such probes, however, Match assures its applicants that all incoming data will be kept strictly confidential.

Information concerning Match's operation may be obtained by writing to the Operation Match Quantitative Personality Projection Test, Compatibility Research, Inc., P. O. Box 72, Cambridge, Mass.

Close-out date for the Carolina program is Oct. 15, and all information will be fed into the computer on Oct. 18.

John Morehead Foundation Goal Is Increased To 400

A new policy adopted by the John Motley Morehead foundation will enable the philanthropic organization to reach a goal of 400 undergraduate Morehead scholars at UNC at one time.

The change, which was announced this week, will nearly double the present program.

In another action, Morehead Foundation trustees added eight members to the organization's Central Committee. They are:

The first three additions are UNC faculty members.

The Central Committee had screened nominees suggested by ten district committees and selected preparatory schools.

The Hill School of Pottstown, Pa.; Lawrenceville of Lawrenceville, N. J.; The Gilman School of Baltimore; Kent School of Kent, Conn.; Hotchkiss of Lakeville, Conn.; St. Paul's of Concord, N. H.; Cranbrook of Bloomfield Hills, Mich.; and Tabor Academy of Marion, Mass.

Not dependent on the recipients' needs, the grants offer all-expense paid educations here for students outstanding in athletics as well as studies.

Largely financed by dividends from Union Carbide, the foundation has assets worth approximately $34 million.

The funds will be used exclusively by UNC at Chapel Hill.

Retrial Of Former Grad Student Is Set For Oct. 11

The retrial of Frank Joseph Rinaldi, former UNC graduate instructor, for the alleged murder of his pregnant wife on Dec. 24, 1963 will take place before a special session of the Orange County Criminal Court on Oct. 11 with Superior Court Judge George M. Fountain of Tarboro presiding.

North Carolina Supreme Court Chief Justice Emory B. Donny made the announcement.

Neither Rinaldi's attorney, Barry Winston of Carrboro, nor District Solicitor Thomas D. Cooper Jr. of Burlington had any comment on Fountain's nomination.

Rinaldi's attorney said the former part-time English instructor was in good spirits and feeling well.

Overturned Ruling

Rinaldi was granted a new trial in late June by the North Carolina Supreme Court. The court, in a five to two ruling overturned the conviction on the basis of incompetent evidence given at the trial.

Rinaldi was convicted last November in the Orange County Criminal Court in Hillsborough.

Following his trial Rinaldi has spent 10 months in Central Prison in Raleigh. He had been held without bond since his arrest on a grand jury indictment in the summer of 1964.

Chief evidence in the controversial case was the fact that Rinaldi was to receive as much as $40,000 in insurance payments for the accidental death of his wife.

At the trial, Rinaldi and insurance agent John F. Sipp said they found the body of Rinaldi's wife upon returning to Rinaldi's apartment after a shopping trip to Durham.

Witness

Chief witness for the state was a Chapel Hill handyman Alfred Foushee. He testified that Rinaldi had attempted to hire him to kill Mrs. Rinaldi. Foushee also testified that Rinaldi had made sexual advances toward him.

On the basis of the latter evidence, the Supreme overturned the Superior Court conviction.

Writing the majority Associate Justice William B. Rodman said: "Evidence tending to show that the defendant is a sexual pervert does not, standing alone, tend to establish the fact that he (Rinaldi) is also a murderer. To make such evidence competent, the state would have to show some direct connection between the defendant's abnormal propensities and the charge of homicide for which he is on trial.

Not Prejudiced

"The jury should not be prejudiced to the defendant's detrement by evidence tending to prove that he is a moral degenerate, prepared to commit the abominable and detestable crime against nature, a felony. The court has repeatedly held such evidence incompetent, requiring a new trial.

The first trial ran from Nov. 9, 1964, through Nov. 18. Both attornies in the retrial indicated that the trial could last as long as the previous one.

Solicitor Cooper said the State plans to produce the same witnesses who appeared at the last trial. Defense attorney Winston refused to comment on how he will handle his case.

Jurors

Jurors for the trial were drawn at the last meeting of the Orange County Board of Commissioners. The list carries 96 names.

The first trial jury was made up of three women and nine men.

In the first trial Judge Raymond Mallard ruled out items taken from Rinaldi's apartment the day his wife was killed. They consisted of a bent flashlight and a blood-stained sofa pillow.

A patheologist who performed the autopsy on Mrs. Rinaldi testified that she had died of suffocation. He also said that "one or more blows to the head by a blunt instrument" had probably caused her head injuries and cuts around her face."

Rinaldi's principal defense centered around testimony by witnesses who said they had seen Rinaldi in various stores in Durham on the day of the murder.

Ex-Gridiron Star Injured

Jack Tillery, a former football player, was listed in fair condition yesterday in N. C. Memorial Hospital. He was critically injured in an automobile accident Saturday.

Tillery, 24, lives in Cedar Terrace in Durham County.

He was reported to be in the intensive care ward with extensive injuries.

Police Capt. C. E. Durham said Tillery apparently was "running at a high rate of speed" when his 1961 car, traveling north on Roosevelt Avenue, went off the right side of the road, hit a curb and then a tree.

The accident occurred about 4:30 p.m.

Durham said the car was "cut practically in two" and when the wrecker lifted it, the auto broke into two pieces.

Satellite Launch In Future Of ETV

NEW YORK (AP)— The American Broadcasting Co. announced yesterday it has asked for permission to launch a satellite to transmit television programs to its network stations.

It would offer the facility free to noncommercial educational stations.

The network said it figured the satellite transmission would cost $6 million a year, compared to the $12 million the network now pays to lease micro - wave relays of the American Telephone and Telegraph Co.

John E. Young, director of WUNC-TV in Chapel Hill, predicted yesterday it would take at least two years before any definite plans could advance for National Educational Television via live satellite communication.

"I can assure you that AT & T will put up the darndest fight you ever saw," Young said. "AT & T has the lines and microwave setups to provide the same type system already."

He said that ultimately there are two possible stages in education television via satellites. "First, the shows could be beamed live to participating stations and then to homes by way of the local station.

"The second, and more extreme setup, would be to send the signal live from New York to individual homes, but this is not in the immediate future."

The transmissions now proposed by ABC, in color or black-and-white, would be to stations only, not to home receivers.

The application, filed with the Federal Communications Commission, is the first for a domestic satellite system. ABC said it would not conflict with the Communications Satellite Corp's. Early Bird which relays television internationally.

ABC said it could put up its satellite in a couple of years. It would be similar to Early Bird, and would be launched by an Atlas - Agena rocket into synchronous orbit about 22,300 miles over a spot on the equator west of the Galapagos Islands.

The plans have been worked out with the Hughes Aircraft Co.

The satellite would have five channels, allowing ABC to send its programs to its stations in all 50 states, Peurto Rico and the Virgin Islands and permitting noncommercial educational stations to receive network television for the first time.

ABC said it could be expanded to accommodate other networks on a shared cost basis.

It would be the first time Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands would have instantaneous viewing of network television.

In addition, ABC said, it would provide practically continuous 24-hour network service, whereas the present networks do not function for some hours each day because of the cost.

The cost of AT & T microwave facilities is out of the question for educational television, the network said.

ABC estimated the initial cost at $21,480,000, not including the receiving dishes which each station would have to provide for itself for about $40,000 each.

Stray Sororities Unite On Campus

Every year with the beginning of fall semester comes sorority rush.

The campus comes alive with color as rushees pin on blue ribbons and sorority women wear red ones to remind each other of silence rules. Among all these are Stray Greeks, women with green ribbons, sporting pins largely unknown to the Chapel Hill campus.

Founded in 1944, the Stray Greek organization is composed of sorority members whose groups have no chapter here. Its aims are to preserve the bonds of unity and sisterhood in sorority life, to stimulate cooperation between sorority and dormitory life, and to serve its members as a service and social organization.

Important Role

During rush the Stray Greeks perform an important role. As impartial observers, they operate the Panhellenic post office, where women receive invitations to rush parties. They also serve as advisers to rushees about pledgeship and rush rules. They are unique in that they are acquainted first-hand with Greek life, yet can remain impartial regarding sororities on campus.

This year many of the Stray Greeks are living in Winston dormitory, in its first year as a women's dormitory. As a nucleus of seniors in the predominantly transfer student living quarters they were able to aid in the organization of a residence hall administration.

"In the past the members have been scattered in different dormitories, and it has been hard to work as a unified whole," explained president Lynn Barron, an Alpha Xi Delta from Stetson University in Deland, Fla. "Since we have most of the senior members in Winston this year we hope to accomplish more and achieve greater unity.

Friendship

"We try to approximate the close friendships and the activities that were meaningful to each of us in our own chapters," she added.

The group has varied plans for the school year. Later this fall they will sponsor a picnic for all new sorority pledges, and will soon begin work on a service project similar to those of most sororities here.

"Last year we adopted a group of underprivileged girls and introduced them to some of the cultural opportunities in Chapel Hill," said Lynn. "We hope to have a similar project this year."

Mails Used To Pursue Coed Killer

The Chapel Hill Police Department is sending letters to all coeds, more than 3,000 of them, who attended summer school here asking them for information in the fatal shabbing of Suellen Evans.

Police Chief William Blake said the letters will request information on anything that might have been connected with the midday murder, or any suspicious action by a male toward a coed.

Blake added that detectives are working on the case daily. "We get many new leads, but most of them amount to nothing," he said.

The Evans murder has baffled police for a month and a half. Many suspects have been questioned and released. Blake said last week that police are interested in any information, no matter how unimportant it might seem.

If Barry Be With Us . . .

It's one thing when some idealistic academician or hopelessly liberal newspaper condemns the speaker ban law, but it's a pretty low blow to a "100 per cent American's" pride when Mr. Conservative himself cuts loose on the law.

Former Senator Barry Goldwater did just that in an exclusive Daily Tar Heel story last Saturday.

With a rationale that must surely bewilder those conservatives who hold the ban dear to their hearts, he said, "I don't believe anybody — including Communists — should be prevented from speaking on a state - supported campus."

Even more incredibly, he took the same stand that University administrators have asked for concerning "equal time" privileges.

"The University should require Communist speakers to answer questions, and anti-communists should be allowed to provide a rebuttal," Goldwater said.

Speaking Sept. 8 before the Speaker Ban Study Commission in Raleigh, UNC President William C. Friday said, "As a precaution and to assure free and open discussion as essential to the safeguarding of free institutions, each chancellor, when he considers it appropriate, will require any or all of the following:

"That a meeting be chaired by an officer of the University or by a ranking member of the faculty;

"That speakers at the meeting be subject to questions from the audience;

"That the opportunity be provided at the meeting or later to present speakers of different points of view."

Those who would rely solely on conservative philosophy for support of the ban would be hard pressed to do so now. Their spokesman has very neatly pulled the rug of moral support out from under them, and if they are ungrateful, we certainly are not.

For, if Barry be with us, who can be against us?

Keep 'Em Informed

The Campus Radio referendum is still almost two weeks away, but a number of students are already working hard to insure its passage.

We encourage early consideration of the issue so that all questions or doubts about it may be aired with sufficient detail.

Those plans were opposed by a few members of the Student Legislature who thought the proposals needed further study. Thorough preparation had been made to start the process of setting up the station last spring, and the delay was unjustified.

Much of the work must be redone now, but most of the students who have already put countless hours into the project have indicated their willingness to see it through to the end. We hope the students who vote on October 5 will also support the radio station, providing themselves with a real service by doing so.

Let's Get It This Time

Along about this stage of the semester, most folks are first subjected to pleas from home or other interested areas to "let us hear from you sometime."

Now a busy university student just doesn't have time to sit down and write a letter every week or two, so The Daily Tar Heel has decided to lend a hand with this touchy problem of keeping in touch.

For the small sum of $4.50 a semester, or even smaller sum of $8 a year, a subscription to this newspaper can be had.

When the home folks get a paper from the school six days a week, they feel as if they've had some contact with the university, and indirectly, you. Hopefully, the squawks for personal correspondence will diminish — but of course there is a risk you'll have to take.

You may be forced to write more letters than ever if they know everything that's going on here.

But keep this fact in mind — the DTH subscription staff needs the business.

UNC POW's Will Receive Careful Scrutiny In Future

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Columnist

The UNC Book Exchange — with its eagle-eyed employees and its tiny entrance — for all practical purposes resembles a P.O.W. camp.

Students forced to do business with the place must surrender nearly all their personal effects at the door. Check books are about the only ones allowed inside the cash register-lined obstacle course.

As long as they've gone this far, the establishment's security-minded operators might as well go ahead and make their elaborate precautions complete. In fact, that's what they are about to do.

The backgrounds of all Booketeria customers will be checked by the FBI, the Army and the CIA. Persons with criminal records, homosexuals, narcotic addicts and alcoholics won't even be allowed on the sidewalk in front of the Exchange. All incoming students will have to swear that they are loyal citizens of the United States and that they do not intend to overthrow the government.

Upon entering the Booketeria, the two sexes will be separated — so that the students can relieve themselves of their clothing as well as their books.

Next, they'll pass through showers, and from there into a delousing room.

After that, the customers will be given gym outfits borrowed from Woollen. They'll wear this attire during the remainder of their stay in the Booketeria.

Then, the students will receive their GI dog tags, and, for good measure, they'll also be tatooed, X-rayed, and fingerprinted. Mug shots, of course, will be taken of everybody.

Cunningly camouflaged machine guns will line the shelves and large dictionaries will conceal secret microphones.

There'll be anti-personnel radar lent by the Marines, rifles with sniper-scopes, hand grenades, bazookas, and — should book stealing prove too much of a problem — maybe a few Patton tanks.

Closed - circuit TV will be hidden under the counters, and buttons on cash registers will activate trap doors, which, when opened, will make suspicious - looking customers fall into secret pits.

Inside the pits, students will be flogged without mercy until they confess to their crimes — real or imagined. If the beatings won't work, the next step will be electric shocks, followed by finger screws and medieval torture racks.

All this time, Pinkerton detectives will have been watching the customers.

Should the situation really get out of hand, the Booketeria manager will be empowered to call in the National Guard, or, if necessary, Dean Long or Chief Beaumont.

Helicopters will circle overhead while their pilots scrutinize the ground near Steele as they look for unauthorized personnel, who when caught, will be prosecuted under the Anti - Espionage Act.

I am confident the Book Exchange will do its best to protect the national security, carefully withholding confidential data like the location of books students might buy before their next class. (The place is so secret, in fact, that DTH photographer Ernest Robl couldn't get into the place while carrying his camera equipment.) If this sensitive information somehow becomes available, Exchange employes responsible for the disclosure will be promptly exiled to the Intimate Book Shop.

Battle Heads Rebirth Of University In 1875

By OTELIA CONNOR

Reading the history of the University is like reading a Greek tragedy, with this difference: Whereas the Greek tragedy always ended in defeat of the hero, the survival of the University is a triumph of the human spirit. If the leading role in this drama after the opening of the University in 1795 was Dr. Joseph Caldwell, the leading role after the re-opening in 1875 was Dr. Kemp Plummer Battle.

Dr. Battle was supported by the alumni who never thought of the University as dead when it was closed after the Civil War, but as sleeping. They had eagerly watched for an opportunity to open its doors again. But for the influence of the alumni an Agricultural and Mechanical College would have taken the place of the University, and the old University would have died, leaving nothing but a memory of its past achievements.

Governor Swain had kept the University open during all the dark days of the war, but it was left in desperate circumstances. In 1868 the Republican governent fired the president and faculty and elected Republicans in their place. Solomon Pool was elected President in January, 1869. In January, 1870, there were reported to be nine University students, and 15 preparatory, with one irregular enrolled. As the Legislature made no appropriation for salaries or for maintenance, the University was formally closed in 1871.

President Pool stayed on until he was ejected by the court in 1874. He thereupon claimed his salary, with interest, for the years he had been inactive, which was paid by the Legislature.

The only hope of getting the University opened was by Constitutional amendment, having the people vote to take the election of the trustees out of the hands of the Board of Education who were opposed to the University, and giving it to the General Assembly. This was done in 1871.

The problem was now: First, how to finance the opening of the University; second, whom to select to head the University who would be capable of overcoming the intense hatred and distrust of everything pertaining to the University by the Legislature and the people.

The buildings at the University were in ruins. The $200,000 that the University received from the sale of land warrants in Tennessee had been invested in worthless state bonds, and the University was $110,000 in debt. The legislature that had spent money recklessly on everything else refused to spend a dollar on the University.

A compromise was reached on the debt with the bank. The bank agreed to accept $25,000 in gold or $35,000 in paper currency, plus a mortgage on all the University property. In 1874, Charles Dewey, assignee in bankruptcy, brought suit to have the property of the University sold under the mortgage. The Circuit Court, in June, 1874, decided that while the bank debt was valid that neither the creditor nor the trustees had the power to sell such propety as constituted the life of the University, as distinct from the endowment for its support.

Of the 700 or 800 acres adjoining the campus, the court gave the University as a homestead all the land, about 600 acres, from the Durham to the Pittsboro Road, except the Piney Prospect rectangle of 60 or 70 acres.

The debt and the mortgage being disposed of, the over-whelming problem of where to get the money to restore the buildings and pay the faculty had to be solved. This is where Dr. Kemp Plummer Battle's invaluable services entered the picture. He was appointed by the trustees to lobby at the Legislature for restoration of the interest on the Federal Land Grant Fund of $125,000 to the University. This interest amounted to $7,500. After much pleading and persuading, this bill was passed by a vote of 51 to 50. Thus the University was saved by one vote.

Dr. Battle was also appointed to solicit the alumni for $20,000 to be used for repairs. This he did by personal visits and by writing letters. He obtained this money and plans were made for the opening of the University in September, 1875.

At first it was thought that the University could get along without a president, and the trustees elected Professor Phillips presiding professor. But his health was bad and he had to give it up after a year.

In the search for a president some trustees advocated a prominent Confederate general. But that would have been fatal to the University since the Republicans in the Legislature opposed everything connected with the Confederacy. The problem was to find a scholar and a diplomat, and one who loved the University. He also had to have the confidence and respect of both political parties, for whatever his qualifications the candidate must have the backing of the Republicans to get elected.

The Democrats had approached Dr. Battle about accepting the Presidency, but he was not anxious to exchange a successful law practice in Raleigh for the grueling job of heading a poverty-stricken and struggling University. However, when his lifelong friend, Col. Rufus Lenoir Patterson, a Republican and a great-grandson of General William Lenoir of the Revolution, (for whom Lenoir Hall is named), who was a trustee of the University as were his father and great-grandfather, told Dr. Battle that he should accept the Presidency and that he would have the backing of the Republicans, Dr. Battle agreed to accept the office.

The trustees couldn't have found one who filled the bill better than Kemp P. Battle. His grandfather matriculated at the Uni- He was a resident of Chapel Hill from his 11th to his 24th year. He entered the University at the age of 13, and graduated in 1849, at 17. While a student he and two other students won the top grades at every examination in all studies. The Dialectic Literary Society honored him with every office in the gift of his fellow - members. "He felt, with the late Senator Vance, that most of what he was he owed to the University of North Carolina and to the Dialectic Literary Society."

Immediately after he graduated he acted as a tutor of Latin for one year. He was then chosen tutor of mathematics for four years.

While he was teaching at the University he earned his master's degree and completed the law course. He then resigned from the University in 1854 and went to Raleigh to practice law. In 1875 he was selected by the Board of Trustees to lead in reorganizing the University, and a year later was made its president.

Mr. Battle's family was one of the most distinguished in the State, noted for its integrity and strength of character. He inherited much from his family, but left his own mark on his times and more specifically on the University.

Dr. George T. Winston, who succeeded Dr. Battle as president of the University and knew him well, paid a well-deserved tribute to him at the Commencement in 1900. Dr. Winston said in part:

"Surely no institution ever survived a more precarious childhood. — The wonder is that it lived at all.

"The problem of the new University was solved through the efforts and during the administration of its first President, Kemp Plummer Battle. For twenty years he performed the duties of a dozen men and received the salary of one. As President of the University and executive officer managing the discipline and conducting the large correspondence without clerk, typewriter or stenographer; as Secretary and Treasurer of the Board of Trustees, negotiating loans on his own credit; as Professor of Political Economy and Constitutional History, as Professor of Law and Dean of the Law School without assistance in teaching or otherwise; as speaker and lecturer at school commencements, public gatherings and agricultural fairs; as canvasser for funds, endowment, and students; as assiduous and patient attendant upon every session of the State Legislature, as reconciler of the irreconcilables; as suppressor of fools within the University and without; calm, cheerful and hopeful amid difficulties and disasters; overwhelmed with calumnies, misrepresentations, and misunderstandings; nothing could have sustained him, during the years of his presidency, but a heart full of unselfish devotion to the great interests of this great University. He shall be known as "the Father of the new University," for he called it into life and solved the proglem of its existence."

After 15 years as president, Dr. Battle resigned his burden in 1891 to accept the Chair of History, which he held until 1907 when he retired on a Carnegie Foundation pension. During the last years of his life he wrote the monumental two-volume History of the University, for which historians and and the alumni will be forever grateful.

Resignation Ultimatum Is Scorned; 'Hound Dog' Picketing Is Praised

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The Daily Tar Heel's conclusion that Dickson "should have" resigned is utterly misguided. If this is The Daily Tar Heel's only comment, the DTH is not "printing the truth," but simply raking muck.

Dickson could not possibly resign. The DTH itself admitted that he could not have resigned under the pressures of the administration's "blackmail." Doesn't The Daily Tar Heel realize that the letter and its publication is also a form of blackmail? Do the eight "student leaders" and The Daily Tar Heel have some special powers in this case? Are these eight students and The Daily Tar Heel duly constituteed to remove the president of the student body? Should these eight students and The Daily Tar Heel decide whether Dickson has abrogated his trust to the student body?

If eight students and a newspaper can controvert the electoral decision of thousands of students, student government is meaningless. No one can rightfully present Dickson an ultimatum in the name of the student body. That, indeed, is a slander against our student government.

Only Dickson himself or a duly constituted body can rightfully take action. Dickson's illegally forced resignation would have been a total degradation of the student body presidency as well as of student government. Thus, if further action is to be taken, he must face a legally constituted body, for they cannot accost him with nefarious ultimatums; they must either remove or retain him.

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Although the article in Friday's DTH concerning SPU's picketing of the Hound Dog missile may have satisfied those whose minds can appreciate nothing more sophisticated than a football line score, it was amazingly free of any understanding about the nature and objectives of a non-violent demonstration. We did not intend to "compete" with the Air Force; nor was our booth for recruiting purposes. We were, instead, serving as a witness for peace and non-violence in the face of our international relations but in the minds and hearts of so many people today. In doing so we felt that we were embodying the concerns of millions of people in this country who are silent either from fear or lack of encouragement. This feeling was reenforced by the whispers of sympathy and support from many passers-by. We were speaking also for the hundreds of millions abroad, especially in underdeveloped counties, for whom an American missile would not symbolize vigilance for freedom and justice, but years of armed support for a tyrannical status quo and open encouragement for reactionary despots such as Ngo-Dihn Diem, Syngman Rhee, Batista, Jimenez and Trujillo. We remind the author of the DTH article that such a form of rebellion as a picket demonstration is, as Albert Camus wrote, far from being a negative action. Instead of a protest against the Air Force, we were protesting for that' in man which still aspires to love and human dignity for all, and which can still hear the cries of the helpless and innocent behind the loudness of missiles.

The concerns which Thursday's demonstrators embodied must be the concerns of us all, even if a majority have differnt means of attempting to resolve them. And it is from the standpoint of these concerns that response should be expressed for or against our position, and not from that of such irrelevant criteria as our numbers.

HOUSTON, Tex. (AP) — A son of a Rice University professor who refuses to change his "Prince Charles" hair style was quickly refused yesterday when he sought re-admission to the high school that expelled him last week.

The father announced he will appeal to the school board.

Stephen Mackey, 14, a blond youngster with braces on his teeth, was wearing sandals without socks, a sport shirt and corduroy trousers when he arrived at school accompanied by his father, Dr. Louis H. Mackey.

Dr. Mackey, a professor of philosophy, repeated his earlier statement that he believes Stephen's personal freedom is being violated because he is not allowed to attend Lamar High School, a part of the Houston School District.

"We have been rejected," Dr. Mackey said when he and Stephen returned from the 10-minute conference with the principal, Harold Costlow.

"I'm going back to bed," said Stephen. "I'm tired — awfully tired of all of this."

PROMPT TREATMENT

Prompt treatment of strep infections can radically reduce the danger of rheumatic fever and rheumatic heart disease, says the North Carolina Heart Association.

Foreign Student Insurance

Any foreign student who has not arranged the Health and Accident Insurance Policy required of all new foreign students at the University this year, is advised to come to the office of the Adviser to Foreign Students, 216 Murphey Hall, immediately and make the necessary arrangements.

Identification cards for policies already issued will be mailed directly from the office of the company and should be carried at all times, the office announced yesterday.

Students from previous years are also urged to investigate the advisability of taking out this policy.

All foreign students who have not yet filled out the Annual Census Cards for the Institute of International Education should do so as soon as possible. This Census is used widely by the Institute for purposes of tabulation and determination of the number, variety, and national origins of all foreign students in the United States.

All matters concerning regulations of the Immigration and Naturalization Services such as visa renewal, work permits, and change of status are now handled in the office of Dr. Julian Mason, the newly appointed Associate Adviser to Foreign Students, in the basement of Hanes Hall, west end.

SEE YOUR DOCTOR

If you're planning a vigorous exercise-and-diet program to do away with unsightly bulges, give your heart a chance by checking with your doctor first, says the North Carolina Heart Association.

Frosh Football Roster Includes First Canadians

By RON SHINN
DTH Sports Writer

For the first time in the history of UNC football, there is a Canadian wearing the Tar Heel uniform.

The old saying that "good things come in pairs" applies in this case too, because there is a pair of Canadians in the Carolina freshman backfield this season.

Halfback Dick Wesolowski and fullback Mark Mazza are the two imports who are helping to make the frosh footballers look good enough to equal last season's perfect 5-0 record.

"Both Mazza and Wesolowski have been impressive in the early workouts," said freshman Coach George Barclay. "We are pleased to have them both on the squad."

Wesolowski weighs in at 205 and stands 6-1. He will start Saturday night against N. C. State at left halfback. Mazza is 6-0, 210, and is listed in the program as a fullback. Coach Barclay has also tried him at linebacker.

Both are from Ontario and went to the same high school. Both were recruited by the same man — Coach Bob Thalman.

Thalman spotted Wesolowski while he still had one year of high school remaining. Dick was trying out at a Canadian Football League team's (Hamilton Cat Tigers) summer rookie camp.

Thalman advised Wesolowski to go back to high school and then come to Carolina.

It was a year later before the same Thalman discovered Mazza, who was also finishing high school. He had been at the same rookie camp with Wesolowski but had left before Thalman arrived. Coach Sazio of the Tiger Cats recommended Mazza to Thalman.

Both have pretty much the same background as American high schoolers. Their high school, Cathedral, is noted for producing football players for the Canadian Football League.

Their school's conference was organized much the same way that they are in North Carolina, with each team playing a ten game schedule. The only difference is that Canadian high schools last for five years.

When Mazza and Wesolowski were in their final year, Cathedral (900 students) won the league championship by beating teams from several high schools with over 3,000 students.

Both players visited the Carolina campus in February at the expense of the athletic department. One look was all it took for them to decide about their choice of schools.

"I had narrowed it down to either Iowa or UNC," said Mazza, "but one look decided it. The beautiful campus and the casual atmosphere drew me."

Wesolowski agreed. "This place is really beautiful. It's so much better than say, Duke, which looks too stately. Carolina is natural and beautiful, and the relaxed atmosphere is hard to match."

Most of the better Canadian football players come to the United States to play college ball. It is against the law for Canadian colleges to give scholarships and that combined with the fact that they only have three year programs, makes for a poor brand of collegiate football there.

These may be the first boys from Canada to play at UNC but they probably won't be the last. "I was up there again this summer and located several more boys that we are interested in now," said Thalman.

UNC Baseballers Start Practice

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

UNC's varsity baseball team fell far below its accustomed standards when it posted a 14-15 record last spring. Worse than that, the Heels went 6-8 in the ACC.

But as spring diamond drills rush into full swing this week, Coach Walter Rabb is making no bones about his feelings as to the 1966 championship season.

"We expect to have a good ball club next spring," declared Rabb, "and I want it known that we're not just thinking in terms of an improvement. We will be shooting for the top!"

Sharing the coach's views completely was pitcher and co-captain Mike McLaughlin, who presented the entire squad with a definite challenge Tuesday night.

"We had a real good season two years ago," the tall right-hander said, "but as Coach Rabb has said before, we were 'not too potent' last season. We've had fine freshman teams the past two years, and I think we should start right now thinking in terms of working together and getting a lot more wins next season."

The real good season McLaughlin referred to in 1964 saw Rabb's nine post the most wins of any UNC team in history. The overall record was 24-7, and Carolina swept through the ACC with a perfect 14-0 slate.

"That record is much closer to the type of seasons this University has grown to expect," says Coach Rabb, "and fall practice begins progress toward that end.

"Each fall," said the head man of Tar Heel baseball, "we try to move some of our returning boys around to fill the open positions, and this session will be no exception. We lost an excellent utility-man and a couple of boys who have played regularly with us for three years. There are also others who have graduated who contributed heavily, and their places must be filled."

Continuing on his optimistic note Rabb added. "I think we can fill these vacant positions adequately."

Another keynote of fall practice will be taking a close look at all frosh candidates.

"We don't want to overlook anybody who may help us," Coach Rabb added, "and we feel that this fall practice gives us every opportunity to uncover 'unknowns' and check on the progress of the boys we have called in."

Previewing, reviewing, and groundwork will be the main targets of conern as Coach Walter Rabb and his staff conduct their fall baseball workouts.

Football Practice

Punt coverage and rushing defense were big issues of the UNC practice session yesterday as Coach Jim Hickey primed his boys for Saturday's meeting with Big Ten Conference power Ohio State at Columbus.

Offensive preparation stressed both the passing and running games as the Heels ran through all formations. The Heels gained 199 yards in the air against Michigan last Saturday, but could gain only 91 yards rushing.

Defensive back Bill Darnell worked out in light equipment. The Arlington, Va., native has a cold but should be ready for Saturday's game.

Hickey also worked on rushing defense in expectation of the Buckeyes strong running game.

Notre Name No. 1 In Nation

Notre Dame, an impressive opening game winner over California, has been named the No. 1 college football team by the Associated Press.

The fighting Irish, trying to capture the crown that escaped them last year, crushed California 48-6 in their opener.

Nebraska, the preseason poll leader, also received solid support and finished second to Notre Dame. Texas caught the eye of many and is ranked third. Michigans' 31-24 win over North Carolina gave the Wolverines enough votes to hold fourth spot.

The top ten and their records:

1. Notre Dame 1-0
2. Nebraska 1-0
3. Texas 1-0
4. Michigan 1-0
5. Arkansas 1-0
6. Purdue 1-0
7. Louisiana State 1-0
8. Florida 1-0
9. Syracuse 1-0
10. Kentucky 1-0

Lyon Students Fascinated By American Habits

Five recently - graduated business administration majors from the University of Lyon (Lyon, France) arrived on the Carolina campus for a five-day visit Tuesday.

Their tour of the University is the next-to-last stop on an entire summer's journey around the eastern and southern United States.

Spokesman for the group, Andre Martin, 23, of Lyon, explained that the idea for the trip had come up shortly after the students had completed their second year in the three-year course of study offered by the Lyon institution.

"Our main purpose in coming here," Martin said, "was to see the American people, especially American students, in their own country, to see how they live and to learn more about the subjects for which we have been trained."

Martin mentioned that the students had a double obligation to fulfill while here. "Half our fare was paid jointly by the University of Lyon and the Lyon Chamber of Commerce," he said, "in return for which we are to investigate certain areas of American business relations, learn as much about those areas as we can, and prepare written reports for our home Chamber of Commerce.

"The other obligations, though, is to ourselves," he continued, "because we did pay half our own fares ourselves, so we're seeing everything we can while we're here."

Among the cities visited by the group are New York, Boston, Baltimore, Washington, Detroit, Chicago, Charleston, Miami, New Orleans, and Atlanta. "We've covered a lot of territory this summer, all of it by bus. As you can imagine, it's been pretty tiring, but the things we've seen have been worth every minute of it."

Asked which cities they preferred of those they'd seen, Martin unhesitatingly replied, "We all preferred the southern cities, especially New Orleans and Atlanta because we felt more at home, more welcome there. People there seemed to really try to show us a pleasant time."

Educational Aspects

The conversation then shifted to the educational aspects of the trip. At this time Martin indicated the four areas of study on which the group is supposed to make reports. They are:

— The American textile industry's production of Lames yarns (described by Martin as special gold or silver threads used in fashionable women's clothing and accessories),

— American distribution of industrial paints and varnishes,

— American labor efforts to get warrantees on annual wages in the automotive industry, and — American aid to underdeveloped countries: who is eligible, how it's distributed, and other technical aspects (concentration on this question has been centered on the U.S. Government's Agency for International Developments).

How was this group of Frenchmen impressed with the Americans they saw and met?

Friendly

"Generally speaking, everyone has been most friendly," Martin commented. "We've been shown real hospitality everywhere we've gone.

"Another thing that we consider really valuable about this trip has been the opportunity to see contemporary American problems — such as the Negro problem — firsthand," the group leader said.

Asked about their views of American policies as compared with those of General De Gaulle, the students expressed individual differences, some pro, some con.

Martin again spoke for the group, however, when he said that Americans were making a serious mistake if they "confused French foreign policy with French personal attitudes toward Americans."

In other remarks, the group laughed at the American males' practice of dating girls "just so they will be seen with a girl," and vice versa. "People over here seem to go out together just because it's the thing to do, not because they have any real interest in getting to know each other, enjoy the other's company, or intend to develop a meaningful relationship between them."

I.D. Cards

The group also found that America is different in demanding I. D. cards when beer or other alcoholic beverages are purchased, in all the talking that seems to go on at American parties ("French parties are for other things, like dancing," commented one of the group), and in that typical American institution— the drive-in movie.

Other members of the group were Jacques Arragon, 24; Bruno Bertrand, 21; Patrick Desplaces, 22; and Hanri Paraton, 22. Upon completion of their visit here Saturday, they will return to Washington, D. C., to end their tour. Shortly thereafter they will assume positions in the executive training departments of several U. S. firms for a six-month period before returning to France.

Dickson Receives Student Petition; Says Decision To Continue Is Final

YESTERDAY WAS THE FIRST DAY OF FALL — DTH Secretary Lynne Harvel celebrates the occasion by romping in the first few leaves that have fallen from the trees in McCorkle Place. There aren't many leaves yet, but in a few weeks, the campus maintenance crew will have to break out the rakes. Lynne is a freshman from Chapel Hill. — DTH Photo by Ernest Robl.

A petition with almost 1500 signatures calling for Paul Dickson's resignation as president of the Student Body was presented to him yesterday afternoon.

Dickson told the three students who organized the petition and presented it to him that "I will not leave office except through impeachment or recall."

He said that is what he meant in his statement last Tuesday and that it was his final decision.

"I'm deeply sorry about what has happened. It has weighed heavily on my mind for the past five weeks. However, I feel I have not violated the student's trust in me and I will remain in office," Dickson said.

He told Gordon Smith, senior from Raleigh, Jim Sturges, junior from Alabama, and Mickey Gamble, junior from Asheville, that he felt they were sincere in the effort and that he appreciated it.

Dickson said he felt he had a lot of support on the campus. "Of course, no matter what I do, some will disagree."

He read a letter from Robert Pace a member of the North Carolina Young Democrats which asked Dickson to remain in office. Pace also suggested that Dickson ask former University president Frank Porter Graham for advice on the matter.

The three who drew up the petition said they had "never been active in the day-to-day operations of Student Government, but we have been deeply concerned by the difficulties which have faced our University during the past months.

"The issue here is not the fact that Dickson illegally kept a girl at his fraternity house all night. It is the fact that his disregard for responsibility of his office undermines student self - government and invokes disrespect for the entire University."

"Dickson may have visions of himself as the University's champion of academic freedom, but this does not alter the fact that his continuance in office seriously jeopardizes any chance to reach a settlement of the speaker ban controversy," they said.

Gamble said that they started circulating the petition about 7 p.m. Wednesday and finished at 4 p.m. yesterday.

"The three of us started out alone, but along the way we met friends who sympathized with our opinion and offered to help. We weren't very well organized and we weren't trying to get as many names as possible. Dickson said it was up to the students and the three of us just wanted to show him how many students would sign," Gamble said.

Smith said many people didn't sign because they were unsure of the facts.

The petition was sent through men's and women's residence halls and fraternities. It was not sent to sororities because they are involved with fall rush.

The petition stated: "We, the undersigned students of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, feel we have the right to expect you to place both the integrity and the well being of our Student Government and this University above any personal pride or ambition. We, therefore, in the interest of harmony and progress call upon you to exemplify the courage which we know you have, and resign without further delay."

Sturges said he supported Dickson in last spring's election and worked in his campaign headquarters. "But Paul can no longer pretend that he is acting in anyone's interest, not even his own."

The controversy broke out Tuesday when a number of student leaders and the administration said they felt he was "unsuited to remain in office" after he was found guilty of a campus code violation this summer.

Dickson was found guilty of helping her enter the house and received an official reprimand.

Men's Attorney General John Ingram said in an official letter yesterday that rumors were being circulated on campus that Dickson intended to remove him and Women's Attorney General Grey Reeves from their positions.

"Let me state categorically that such is not the case. President Dickson has personally asked Grey Reeves and me to continue with our duties," Ingram said.

Student Party Chairman Frank Hodges said in a letter to The Daily Tar Heel yesterday, "I publicly state my support for President Dickson and urge him and other campus leaders to defend vigorously the integrity of Student Government by remaining in office."

His letter will appear in tomorrow's edition of the DTH.

The residents of Maverick House of Craige College voted at a meeting Tuesday to hold a referendum next Wednesday on the question of Dickson's resignation. On Tuesday night there will be a debate in Maverick House on the is-

Calls For Draft 'From The Streets'

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. officials said today that several tens of thousands of youths probably will have to be "recruited from the streets," above the number taken in recently increased draft calls, to complete the President Johnson last June.

By the phrase "recruiting from the streets" they said they meant encouraging more youths who volunteer for six month reserve service to go on active duty.

They said the blame for this additional dipping into civilian society should be attributed to congressional refusal to go along with Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara's plan to merge most reserves into the national guard rather than to any changed outlook or Communist reactions in Asia.

These points were made by officials, who would not permit attribution, in asnwering reporters' questions about the relation of current events in Asia to the 340,000 military manpower increase ordered by Johnson in June.

The officials said that the outlook in Viet Nam was "slightly better, if anything," than it was two months ago when McNamara publicly testified to his "cautious optimism" about the situation in Viet Nam.

The officials also said there had been no significant reaction by Communist China, in the way of troop movements, to the heavy buildup of U. S. forces in Viet Nam. They added there were probably no important Chinese Red military activities in connection with last week's threatened confrontation with India in the Sikkim region.

In the meeting with newsmen, the officials said the additional men they would have to draw from the civilian pool would, for the most part, be those who volunteered for six-month training in reserve components. They foresaw little difficulty in obtaining additional recruits by this method because, they said, the youths would rather take the chance of serving for the shorter period than waiting to be drafted for a longer term in the regular forces.

The officials said that more specific means to expedite the buildup through short term trainees and a better estimate for the numbers needed were involved in plans that may be completed within one week.

They emphasized that using a greater number of short term trainees would prove less efficient than the plan proposed by McNamara that ran into strong objections in the Armed Services Committees of both the House and Senate.

The McNamara proposal called for abolition of organized Army Reserve units and the merger of some individuals and most members of some units into selected National Guard units.

Specifically, McNamara proposed to increase the manpower strength, equipment and readiness of three guard divisions and six brigades plus an assorted number of lesser formations.

The officials recalled that McNamara told members of congress that unless the military services were permitted to transfer men from low priority reserve units to high priority National Guard units the Defense Department would have to dip more deeply into the pool of civilians without prior military training.

Accrediting Group Should Get Permit

Deputy Atty. Gen. Ralph Moody said Wednesday that the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools should be required to obtain certificate of authority from Secretary of State Thad Eure.

Moody said Eure, author of the controversial speaker ban law opposed by the Association, should exercise powers contained in the Non-Profit Corporation Act of 1955.

He believes this is necessary because the Association is "conducting affairs' within the meaning of (State laws)."

The Non - Profit Corporation Act itself reads:

"A foreign corporation shall procure a certificate of authority from the secretary of state before it shall conduct affairs in this State."

Moody says a key factor lies in interpretation of "conducting affairs" as contrasted with "doing business," a phrase in North Carolina's Business Corporation Act.

Moody criticized the Southern Association for considering the two terms the same.

According to the Association's interpretation of "conducting affairs," it is not required to conform to the incorporation law as specified in the 1955 Non-Profit Corporation Act.

Moody was answering questions asked last July by Eure, who authored the speaker ban law two years ago while serving in the State Legislature.

The Association has threatened to withdraw accreditation of State - supported colleges and universities unless the law is repealed or modified.

UNC Young Demos Go To Charlotte

Each has claimed the election is going his way.

This week, the UNC YDC endorsed Huffman and named as delegates to the convention: Tom Belch, Phil Baddour and Henry Babb.

6 It withheld endorsement of other officers pending two caucuses of the club to be held at 5:30 p.m. and 9 p.m. today at the convention.

Stephenson is apolitical ally of Dr. I. Beverly Lake, a conservative candidate is the last gubernatorial primary.

Stephenson has charged the present leadership refuses to cooperate with the senior party and is attempting to rig the convention against him.

Huffman says he has been endorsed by clubs from both large and small counties including Mecklenburg, Greensboro, East Carolina College, Orange and Union. And he says he has been promised support by other clubs which make no formal endorsements before conventions.

Stephenson has promised, if elected, to employ the senior party's youth coordinator, Yates Nagle, as executive director of the YDC.

Huffman says he has promised no jobs, and says he will cooperate with the senior party and try to promote harmony with all Democrats.

Friday night's banquet speakers will be State Sen. Voit Gilmore of Moore County, a former head of the U. S. Travel Agency, and Agriculture Commissioner James Graham.

Saturday night's banquet speaker will be Bill Moyers, President Johnson's news secretary. Moyers will be introduced by presidential assistant Henry Hall Wilson, a former YDC president from Monroe.

Most of the county clubs will caucus Friday night as maneuvering begins for Saturday's elections. Other contests include a race between Lonnie Carey of Alamance and Robert Bingham of Watauga for national committeeman.

Piano Concert Set For Tue.

On Tuesday at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall, the music department will present in recital new faculty member and pianist Clifton Matthews.

The date marks both the opening of the Tuesday Evening Concert Series' fall season and the local debut of Matthews, who joined the faculty in September. The Tuesday Evening Series is free and open to the public.

Matthews came to Chapel Hill from Saratoga Spring, N.Y., where he was instructor in music at Skidmore College from 1963-65. During the past year, he also taught on the faculty of the Julliard School of Music's Preparatory Division.

The summers of both 1963 and 1964 took the pianist to Bringham Young University as pianist-in-residence fo the annual music festival there. In Feb., 1964, at the age of 30, he made his New York debut in Carnegie Recital Hall.

Matthews' student days were no less busy nor distinguished than this more recently begun teaching career. Earning both B. S. and M. S. degrees from the Juillaiard School of Music, where he was a student of Irwin Freundlich and a teaching fellow in the Department of Literature and Materials of Music, Mr. Matthews received in 1958 a Fulbright Grant for further study in Munich, Germany.

Electronic 'Brain Will Tally Vote

When students vote for or against campus radio during the October 5 referendum, their votes will be tabulated by a revolutionary new data processing system.

Elections Board Chairman Alvin Tyndall said yesterday the new computer system of voting will enable the Elections Board to tabulate final voting results within one or one and a half hours after the polls close.

According to the new voting procedure, students will black out their chosen boxes with a special pencil provided by the poll tender, and all undamaged ballots will be taken to Durham for validation.

The actual election results will be tabulated in the computer center of Hanes Hall, which also serve as elections headquarters.

No ballots may be taken from one polling place and used at another. This would assure the accuracy of precinct results.

"The ballots cannot be duplicated anywhere," Tyndall said, "and we are assured that no phony ballots can be used without being rejected by the processing machine."

Tyndall said the Elections Board has ordered a total of 10,000 ballots for the Oct. 5 referendum.

ADA Meets

The newly formed Chapel Hill chapter of the Americans for Democratic Action held its first meeting of the academic year Wednesday and formed six temporary action committees.

The six committees will deal with University integration, Daily Tar Heel columns, the speaker ban law, Chapel Hill housing ordinances, ADA administrative affairs, and political endorsements.

The group of nearly 50 people heard UNC graduate student Clifford Brock describe the ideals, goals and operations of the national ADA organization.

OTIS REDDING, rhythm-and-blues artist who released such hits as 'Mr. Pitiful' and 'Respect' last year will appear in Memorial Hall under the sponsorship of the Men's Residence Council tonight.

Accompanying Redding in his first concert on the Tar Heel campus will be his band of 13 musicians and three singers. Tickets will cost $1.50 and will be available today in Y-Court from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.

SG Committees Called

Interviews for students interested in serving on Student Government executive committees will continue today from 3 to 5 p.m. in Graham Memorial.

Student Government officials have stressed the need for having members or supporters of both the Student and University Parties on these committees.

The committees to be filled are the Consolidated University Student Council Campus Committee, VIGAH (Volunteers In Giving A Hand), Student Credit Commission, the Student Audit Board, the Budget Committee, the Secretariat, Communications Commission, and the Campus Affairs Committee.

Also the Residence Hall Improvement Committee, the Orientation Commission, the Orientation Reform Commission, the Student Co-op Commission, and the Campus Radio Committee.

Also the Academic Affairs Committee, the Honors Committee, the Fine Arts Festival Committee, the Carolina Forum, the International Students Board, Toronto Exchange Commission, and the National Merit Scholarship Committee.

Also the State Affairs Committee, the Discounting Commission, the National Student Association Campus Committee, the Attorney General's Staff, the Honor System Commission, the Elections Board and the Special Legislative Services Committee.

Student Body President Paul Dickson said all positions must be filled by Tuesday of next week.

It is also the only state with a Deputy Attorney General in Charge of Rendering Prounouncements on the Speaker Ban.

It appears that Deputy Attorney General Ralph Moody is doing little else these days besides submit opinions supporting the ban.

His first contribution was a long, emotional defense of the law. Little more than a week ago he spoke up again, saying that the General Assembly could still control speakers on campuses — even if the law were repealed — by tightening the purse strings on school budgets. The Speaker Ban Study Commission had requested his views on the legal validity of a brief against the law which Duke law professor William W. Van Alstyne had presented. Instead, they got a personal attack on Van Alstyne and the "purse string" suggestion.

Now Ralph is at it again. In response to questions raised by Secretary of State Thad Eure (who wrote the speaker ban law), he has added the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools to his list of targets.

The Southern Association has indicated it might take accreditation away from our schools if the law is not changed or repealed, so that apparently makes it a fair target for the attorney general's office.

"We are of the opinion that the Southern Association is 'conducting affairs' within the meaning of (state laws) and should, therefore, be required to procure a certificate of authority from the secretary of state," Moody said.

It makes no difference to him that the 11 other states served by the Southern Association have made no requests for its incorporation.

He cites as his authority the 1955 Non-Profit Corshall procure a certificate of authority from the secretary of state before it shall conduct affairs in this state."
poration Act, which says, "A foreign corporation shall procure a certificate of authority from the secretary of state before it shall conduct affairs in this state."

Moody continued, "The exercise of the power to accredit or withdraw accreditation from educational institutions in this state is the result of affairs conducted in North Carolina and is set in motion by such conduct of affairs . . ."

So, he says, the Southern Association is "conducting affairs" and must get a certificate of authority.

Perhaps the Association is "conducting affairs." The legal definition is somewhat obscure. We will not be very surprised, in fact, to see the Association pay the $45 fee and get on to more important issues.

The fact that this problem ever arose at all only testifies to the smallness of some of our state officials who support the ban. They are clearly operating under the "if you make trouble for us, we'll make trouble for you" attitude, to the discredit of us all.

Those Nasty Girls

We've always pictured Englishwomen as very proper ladies, sweet and polite to a fault.

But now some girls from an English teachers' college have shattered that image. Although it was probably a false concept all along, it was still pretty nice to have.

These illusion-busting females have been banned from the pubs in a town near their school — because their language is so foul.

"Their language would make your hair curl," said the owner of one of the inns. "The girls are as bad, or worse, than their boy friends . . . They swear as much as the boys and they join in the dirty songs. They know all the words," said the other pub keeper.

The account gave no specifics of what the girls have been doing, but it did say that the drinking establishments are patronized primarily by miners and steelworkers. Apparently we are supposed to draw our own conclusions about the degree of grossness they have displayed to bring on this ban.

Our faith in the femininity of Britannia's females is restored somewhat, however, by the hope that these rowdy girls probably represent only a small minority of women students.

Winston Struggled To Defend Carolina From 'Godly' Enemies

By OTELIA CONNOR

When I first started writing the sketches of the University presidents I thought I would pass over Winston, Alderman, and Edward Kidder Graham, because each served only a short period. Later I realized to do so would be to neglect one of the most important and vital periods in the long struggle for survival in the history of the University.

President George T. Winston was particularly significant because of the masterly way in which he routed the forces which had been trying to destroy the University since its beginning.

The fight came to a climax in President Winston's administration when President Kilgore of Trinity College, President C. E. Taylor of Wake Forest and Josiah William Bailey, editor of the Biblical Re-corder, bent their efforts, through the pulpit and sectarian press, to defeat the principle of state aid to higher education. They contended that it wasn't the state's business to educate the masses beyond grade school, that only a few people could benefit by an education beyond elementary school and that the church schools could best educate men for Christian leadership, that Godly people should not be taxed to support and supply Godless education.

President Winston had an excellent mind He wasn't afraid of a fight, and he was a skilled legislative lobbyist. He lined up many prominent men and the secular press to fight for freedom of the state from clerical control. To the cry that "Godly people should not be taxed to support Godless education," he replied that Wake Forest, through its endowment fund, was a sycophant of the Standard Oil trust, and that Trinity was on its knees to the American Tobacco Company trust of the Dukes, that half of the people in the state did not belong to any church and that they should have the privilege of choosing a denominational or non-denominational school.

In 1893 the attack on the University was renewed in the legislature by the Rev. Dr. Shearer, president of Davidson College, who introduced a bill which would prohibit the University from teaching undergraduate courses and make it exclusively a graduate school. He charged that the University was in competition with other colleges. Since the University had only five postgraduates, this law would have spelled its death.

To help him win his case, President Winston had a statement distributed to members of the 1893 legislature. The main points set forth in his paper were as follows:

In obedience to the mandate of the constitution, the University is a state institution and state property, and like other state institutions, it should be guarded, supported and properly managed. Relying upon the promise of the state to maintain and guard the University, various citizens have from time to time given lands, buildings, money, and apparatus, in trust to be used forever for the purpose of a University. It can be used for no other purpose. The state has accepted the trust, and is bound in honor to fill it.

The University is the best investment the state owns, said Winston. Aid to the University in 1892 cost the state thirty thousand dollars (twenty thousand regular and ten thousand dollars special), being an expense to each regular taxpayer of less than four cents a year for the regular appropriation.

Has the University a right to be religious? And if not should it be allowed to exist?

The University has a right to be religious and it is religious, Winston said, It is distinctly Christian, but not denominational.

If all the money now given to the University were given to the public schools, as some people advocate, Winston said, the University, which is the head of the public school system, would be destroyed and the public term lengthened by only a day and a half.

By 1897 the battle was won.

President Winston, after five strenuous years as president of UNC, was called to the presidency of Texas University at double the salary he was getting at Chapel Hill. His administration at Texas was not notably successful. The very quality — zeal to correct any situation he didn't like — that helped him win his fight for the University of North Carolina was not well received in Texas. At the end of three years he accepted the presidency of State College in Raleigh. He retired in 1908 at the age of fifty-six on a Carnegie pension. For years he divided his time between New York and London and the mountains of North Carolina. He came back to spend his last years in Chapel Hill where he died in 1932.

State-Wide News Of Dickson Case Claimed Unfair

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

On Tuesday morning, the same day that the DTH broke the story of the Dickson controversy, the Charlotte Observer carried a similar story using quotations from a statement given to the DTH and to the administration demanding Dickson's resignation. Those quotes could have appeared simultaneously only with the active help of the DTH, the administration, or one of Dickson's attackers. The timing of the appearance of these quotes is substantial evidence that the statement was released by someone to the state press before it was printed in The Dailey(sic) Tar Heel.

Following the lead of the Charlotte Observer, almost every other major state newspaper has printed the story. The story has also been circulated on radio and television and in the wire reports of the Associated Press. It is abundantly clear from all of these sources that the event which is being reported is not that a student officer has committed a rule infraction, but that his removal from office is being demanded.

In addressing an audience not directly responsible in the matter by actively seeking to get the story printed in the state press, some of Dickson's attackers have now clearly revealed a purpose which goes far beyond merely securing his resignation.

I would personally like to know the names of the persons responsible for the joint blow indiscriminately administered to Paul Dickson and to this University by deliberate efforts to create state-wide publicity.

Letters To The Editor

Dickson Attacked

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

"To resign or not to resign: that is the question." Whether President Paul Dickson should step down is a difficult problem.

Evidently Dickson clearly violated the campus honor code or he would not have been convicted, yet some of the circumstances surrounding the trial are somewhat unclear.

It enters the minds of most students here on campus that if they had been caught instead of Dickson, what would have been the decision of the honor council? Also, it seems a little unjust that Dickson's accomplice was suspended from school while Dickson himself received only an official reprimand. Whatever office he may hold, Paul Dickson should have, and for same consideration given to any student in this university.

Supposing he did receive the same consideration that anyone else would have received, never again should a student at Carolina be suspended for taking a co-ed off-limits, whether it be dormitory or a fraternity house.

When Paul Dickson accepted the presidency of the student body, along with the duties of office he accepted the responsibility to represent the student body in his every action. He has gotten off to a very poor start.

Either through naivete or some more vain reason he has refused to resign. Even after being confronted with a letter written by a number of student leaders which asked him politely to submit his resignation, he has refused. His decision can lead only to scandal and more embarrassment. Paul Dickson owes it to the student body to resign.

William C. Rogers

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I believe it was Job who said, "Man that is born of woman is of few days and full of trouble."

The University, like man, seems born for trouble. In studying the history of the University, I have been struck with how often, through no fault of its own, it has been hit by tragedy, by something that set the blood-hounds throughout the state on its trail.

People ask me what I think of the Paul Dickson affair. It is hard to say. Ordinarily, I am for the individual — he learns through suffering. Give him another chance.

But more than an individual is involved, more than Paul Dickson has been hurt this time, because Paul Dickson represents an institution, he is at the pinacle of Student Government. In the eyes of the world, he is the University.

For the good of the University, for the good of the Honor System and Student Government, I believe Paul Dickson should resign as president of Student Government. He has lost his influence, not as an individual, because this mistake could be the making of Paul Dickson's success in life, but he has ruined himself as leader of Student Government. Therefore, in the best interest of all concerned, I believe he should resign his office as president.

As for the University, it has survived tragedy before. It will survive this time It has always been a beacon-light in the state, standing like a stone wall. Let's keep it that way.

...And Defended

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The amount of righteous indignation one feels toward Paul Dickson these days seems to depend on whether one belongs to the University Party or to the Student Party. If this is the case, then the moral argument advanced in this letter will probably have no impact on events; it will, however, serve the purpose of getting it off the writer's chest.

The gravity of Paul's original misdemeanor, most of our righteous indignants feel, is due primarily to the fact that he holds a high office. Although the argument varies from man to man, it seems to be that an immoral act by the elected head of the college community undermines popular support and respect for whatever he tries to do in student government, thereby rendering him unfit for office.

Paul should leave office, people say, because others have lost confidence in him. If you say this often enough, sure enough, everyone will be going around saying how everyone else is losing confidence in the president. No one — certainly not the politically ambitious — has stopped to ask himself the right question, except perhaps Paul himself. (I should say before I continue that I have no affiliation with either of the parties on campus.)

We did not elect God to the office of student body president. We elected not only a fellow human but a fellow student, someone therefore both more inclined to look after students' interests and also more prone to students' impetuosities. Did that infamous deed last summer in itself suddenly impair Paul's ability to act as studen tbody president?

Yes — if we, on whom he depends for support, think it did. The position taken here is that the only reason the deed might inherently cripple Paul's ability to perform his duties in government is because everyone said it did. And the crux of the issue is that Paul's action and subsequent conviction fall well within the bounds of moral susceptibility we can expect from a student, leader or non-leader. It would be difficult to maintain logically that a hitherto unknown facet of Paul's character has been revealed, justifying his expulsion from office. This argument, however, is fairly easily maintained in collectively righteous talk about consensus and a leader's immoral action.

Paul may have been a damned fool last August. Throwing garbage at him publicly in September is far more seriously immoral, since it is in effect expecting moral perfection on the part of a fellow human.

Lucian W. Pye, a political scientist at MIT and (to give him a place on the political spectrum) a supporter of President Johnson's policy in Viet Nam, has studied traditional political systems carefully; one of the characteristics he attributes to them is the inability to separate the political from the spheres of social and personal relations. Prestige, charisma and influence are far more important than policy questions in a pre-modern polity. If the shoe fits, put it on.

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

It is gratifying to know that those who are in the position to express the opinions, as well as the deep concerns of the UNC students, take advantage of their position. However, as a student at UNC I do not personally feel that the general opinion of other students concerning the Paul Dickson case has been justifiably presented by the editorial staff of the DTH.

In view of the editorial on page two of Tuesday's edition of the DTH, I fail to see where our student government has made such a "tragic plunge" into disrespect or discredit. Even if Dickson were wrong in making the decision to retain his office, he made this decision "honestly and with sincere regard for Student Government and the University." Who is to say that an entire student government with as respectable and prestigeous foundation as that of UNC can be destroyed by the decision of one individual? Who is to condemn Dickson for making the decision he thought was right? The DTH did both — EVEN after stating that it wanted to avoid comment until Dickson reached his own decision (so as to avoid "conflict and confusion of a public debate involving him").

Paul Dickson was tried for his Campus Code offense just as an "average offender" yet upon his conviction and sentence he is suffering much more gravely than the so-called "average offender." Is this democratic? Does the governor lose his license for a mere parking violation? Of course, I'm not condoning his act, but has he really failed to be a "frequent practioner of the 'right thing' "? It is true that Dickson is a public figure, but is he actually any more so that any student at UNC as far as representing our school is concerned? After all, if he is expected to represent the students, why is he any more exempt from making a violation than we are?

Before the article in Tuesday's DTH came out, I dare say, this matter was but vaguely known to the general public. Why then, if the harder decision were to resign his office, did Dickson risk his name, reputation, and honorable standing at UNC to maintain the integrity of the student government?

The students agree that the decision should be left up to them. After all, that is the purpose of our student government — to govern ourselves. No select group of students should be given the say-so over this particular matter concerning the entire student body. If further action is to be taken, let the students do it.

(Note: I challenge the editorial staff to publish this letter.)

University Day Events Scheduled For Carmichael

New Carmichael Auditorium will house its first official University event October 12, when UNC celebrates annual University Day.

The official anniversary of the founding of the University will be celebrated under the domed roof with a speech by Chancellor Paul Sharp, pageantry, drama, fireworks, a barbecue, bands playing, glee clubs and choral clubs and a cap-and-gown academic procession by the faculty.

Afternoon and evening classes on that day have been canceled for the event.

Sharp Speaks

Sharp will himself deliver the only speech of the occasion. Dr. Joseph C. Sloane, Distinguished Alumni Professor of Art, is chairman of University Day activities honoring the Chancellor.

Invited to attend are the students in the University, the members of the faculty and their wives, townspeople of Chapel Hill and vicinity, other employes of the University, alumni, trustees, legislators. Presidents of all other colleges and universities in North Carolina are being invited.

The men's and women's residence halls and the fraternities and sororities will hold "open house" for faculty and visitors from 4:30 to 6 p.m.

Barbecue

A barbecue supper will be held at Emerson Field beginning at 6 p.m. Griffin's Barbecue Co. of Goldsboro is catering. Tickets sold at $1.50 each, w. William Little, chairman of the Chemistry Department, in charge.

A fireworks display will be held also on Emerson Field at 8 p.m.

The day begins with an academic procession of the faculty at 1:30 p.m., with faculty assembling at the Morehead-Patterson Bell Tower and marching to the convocation in the Carmichael auditorium.

The decision to honor Chancellor Sharp was made by the Faculty Council of the University last May, with autumn set as the time of the celebration. Distinguished Alumni Professor Corydon P. Spruill will preside at the convocation; he is Chairman of the Faculty Council.

Among other distinguished guests invited are Governor Dan K. Moore, members of the Council of State, the President of the Alumni Association, members of the N. C. Board of Higher Education, City and County officials in Chapel Hill and Orange County, retired members of the faculty and widows of former faculty members.

Music will be under the direction of Joel Carter, director of Glee Clubs; Wayne Barr director of the University Choral Club; Major John Yesulaitis, director of bands. There will also be trumpeteers and combos for the barbecue and other events.

Quentin Ludgin, who started a recall petition earlier this week, said yesterday that he has made no progress. He said he posted the petition on a bulletin board in Caldwell Hall and only a limited number have signed it.

In another statement issued yesterday, Di-Phi Society president - elect John Harrison attacked the University administration and "partisan politicians" for their "undue interference" in the Dickson case.

"The great degree of useless activity about Paul Dickson is hindering the work of Student Government," the statement read in part:

Harrison, along with outgoing Di-Phi President Baxter Linney, called for an end to "partisan mud-slinging."

"We support Paul Dickson's stand and applaud his sincere interest in making Student Government function in an hour of crisis."

Air Force Captain Named New Commandant Of Cadets

Capt. Bennette E. Whisenaut, a '57 business administration graduate from Morganton and a former cadet of the 590th, officially assumed his new position on Aug. 2 for a two year tour of duty.

He will teach Aerospace Studies I and II and will supervise the operations of the cadet corps. He succeeds Capt. Lawrence D. Garrison who was recalled to the cockpit after three years here.

Whisenaut first went on active duty in April 1958 when he began navigator training at Harbingen AFB, Texas. In Feb. 1959, he took up radar observer training at James Connelly AFB, in Waco, Texas.

CAPT. B. WHISENAUT

His first duty assignment was at Davis - Monthan AFB, Arizona, where he serve as a radar observer. From there he went to RAF Sculthorpe in England for three years.

Whisenaut was an Aerospace Studies instructor at North Carolina State for the last academic year but came to Carolina when the dropping of the mandatory ROTC program at State reduced the need for officers.

"I enjoy being back here at Carolina," he said. "There's something about Carolina that grows on you. I like my work very much. With the caliber of cadets at Carolina, we can have an excellent corps."

Whisenaut is married and has one son. He is presently residing at 306 Plum Lane in Chapel Hill.

Small Crisis

A. C. Howell, adviser to foreign students, writes that he has encountered "a small problem in international relations," recently.

Last week a group of Japanese students visiting Raleigh made a tour of the campus. A Japanese gentleman, Mr. Kazuhiro Makino, in the course of the tour offered to carry the books of a young lady who was escorting the visitors. Inadvertently, when he returned her books, one of his own was in the pile.

Now he wants it back. Would the young lady please return it to 216 Murphey Hall?

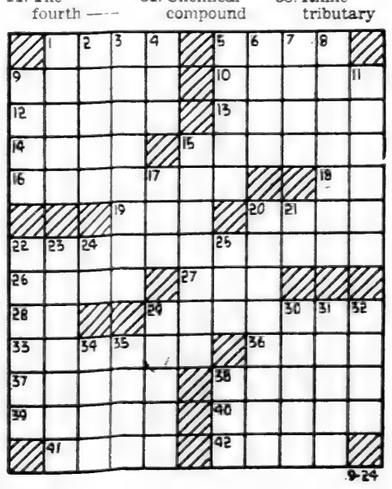
Yesterday's Answer



Pat Stith

DTH Sports Editor

North Carolina football players will board a chartered plane at Raleigh-Durham airport this afternoon and fly into another world.

It's a relatively short trip — they'll be there in an hour an a half — but this other world could just as well be a million miles away. It's where they play football for keeps.

The plane is bound for Columbus, Ohio, and the players — they're bound for a big time appointment with a big time power, Ohio State University.

Ohio Stadium, where North Carolina and Ohio State will play a football game, could be called an arena. Teams who have been fed to the lions there agree on that terminology.

It's a thing, 10 acres in size and one third of a mile around, and on football days it's packed with people whose appetite for combat is not totally unlike those who use to elbow their way into Roman arenas a couple a thousand years back.

They say there will be 84,000 there, give or take a few hundred, when the North Carolina dressing room door is thrown open tomorrow and the Tar Heels come out to do battle.

They really don't have to say it. That areana hasn't dipped below an 80,000 average turnout for more than a decade, since about the same time that Woody Hayes became chief trainer of gladiators there.

They say his teams aren't very exciting. The Buckeyes don't pass very well, they don't try fancy running plays — they just win.

Don't misunderstand. Ohio State can be had. Somebody beats them every year — or almost every year.

Let's see now, Penn State manhandled them last year and Michigan whipped them 10-0 for the Big Ten title. In the three seasons before that they lost a total of six ball games. Yes, they can be had, but not by just anybody.

And the men who pick 'em are saying that North Carolina is an anybody. An Associated press writer said it's to be 20-0, Ohio State. He said it really wouldn't be a game, that the Buckeyes would just be sharpening up for the Big Ten battles ahead.

Another outfit, applying a scientific formula to a human situation, said it's be Ohio State by 9.6 points. Thev didn't say where the Buckeyes would come up with six-tenths of a point.

The Tar Heels have made the trip into the valley of the shadow before, and that time they got killed. It was the second game of the season back in 1962 and the score was 41-7, which is the worse a Carolina team has been beaten since 1957.

Of course, tomorrow may be different. This Tar Heel team, beaten 31-24 by Michigan in its first trial by combat, proved that it is not a quitter. It demonstrated before some 40,000 friends what its coach correctly labeled courage.

But it also showed that it is prone to err. And when you're playing in that massive other world called Ohio Stadium, mistakes will destroy you.

LARRY BROWN
By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

Larry Brown stretched across his desk in the basketball office in Woollen Gym and handed this reporter the 16-game 1965-66 UNC freshman cage schedule.

"Here's sixteen-and-oh!" the young man exlaimed, and that comment served to can an interview which had been chock full ot optimism.

Brown's optimism is many-sided.

"I'm really pleased to have the opportunity to return to Carolina," began the former Tar Heel playmaker (1960-63). "I know of no university anywhere which has the all-round atmosphere that you feel here.

"And then too," he went on, "I'm new to this coaching bit, and just tickled to have the chance to work with these boys who are beginning their college careers."

But the crux of Coach Brown's optimism, is the array of promising young basketball talent that UNC has been able to round up for this season's freshman team.

There are four boys who have been granted full scholarships, and two other outstanding individuals who are enrolled at the University by virtue of Morehead Scholarships.

"It's great to have six boys who show so much promise," said Brown. "It looks as if the squad is going to have good depth. We're hoping the tryouts will produce a number of boys who will strengthen the team and add more balance."

One of the Morehead scholars is a young man from Fayetteville who was a first team selection on every all-state poll conducted in North Carolina last winter.

His name is Rusty Clark, and at 6-11, he's the tallest guy ever to play at UNC. Rusty was the number one cog in the Fayetteville Bulldog machine which rolled to the State 4-A Championship and his 24-point average could have been higher had the Bulldog offense been less deliberate.

The other Morehead man comes to Carolina from Westminster Prep School in Atlanta. He's a prospective guard, Jim Bistick and at 6-3, he must make the transition from the frontcourt to guard.

Playing on full athletic scholarships will be two more of North Carolina's leading high school cagers: Bill Bunting (6-8) from new Bern, and Joe Brown (6-5) from Valdese.

Also on four-year scholarships are Dick Grubar (6-3) from Schenectady, N. Y., And Gerald Tuttle (5-11) of London, Ky.

True Courage

SANDY TREADWELL
DTH Sports Writer

I was first introduced to the game of football at the age of 12. The headmaster of a small New England school came over to me and placed an old and shaking hand across my shoulder.

"My boy," he said, "the pigskin has a wonderful ability of replacing the apron strings. Play football, and let it make a man out of you. It will teach you courage, son, courage."

I thanked him in a high-pitched and terrified voice and trotted out to my first practice. Within minutes I became exposed to the horrors of the tackle and the cross-body block.

I never learned courage from playing football. I learned only fear. By the time I was 17 it became obvious that my career in the game was fading, and I thankfully hung up my cleats.

From that moment on I became a man.

True courage comes not from playing the game, but rather from being a spectator during those all afternoons.

At my old school about 40 people appeared for the varsity games. They sat on hard wooden slabs that the school called stands and endured the rain. Some were new boys who didn't know any better. Some were the parents of the poor devils on the field.

A few, like myself, came to root on friends and help carry their crushed bodies to the infirmary.

Of all the spectators, the Italian exchange student was the most faithful. He explained his presence as something which ran in his blood. He was fascinated in seeing modern society's version of the Christians being ceremoniously fed to the lions.

Our school won about four games in as many years. It established a reputation as the Mets of the prep school league.

I learned courage there. It was the courage of yelling on a team that was almost certain of losing.

At Chapel Hill there are more than 40 spectators — more like 40,000. They sit in a beautiful new stadium and watch their team come as close as you can to upsetting high ranking Michigan.

I remember watching Ken Willard plow over the goal line against Wake Forest last year. A big character sitting next to me jumped up and pounded his huge hand against my back while drooling all over my last clean shirt.

The courage of going to football games in Chapel Hill is different. It is the kind of courage displayed by a white hunter.

As you approach the jungle that is Kenan Stadium you can't see the terrifying animals which lurk inside, but you know they are behind those walls and waiting for you.

But you go anyway and that's what builds true courage.

UNC Coach Jim Hickey sent his Tar Heels through final workouts Thursday in preparation for their Saturday meeting with Big Ten foe Ohio State at Columbus.

Trainer John Lacey reports that wingback Bud Phillips will not make the trip north. Phillips suffered a shoulder separation during preseason workouts but was expected to be ready for the Buckeyes. He will probably see action against Virginia next week.

Quarterback Danny Talbott had an especially good day as Hickey concentrated on the passing game. Charlie Carr and Talbott were handling the field goal duties during the session.

A slight cold will not keep defensive back Bill Darnall from making the Columbus trip.

Tar Heel Swimmers

By BILL HASS
DTH Sports Writer

The 1965-66 edition of the UNC swimming team will be good, but not as outstanding as some Carolina teams of the past.

At least that is the opinion of Coach Pat Earey.

"We're going to have a very full schedule," he said, "and we will have to be in rare form to cope with it. Our toughest competition will be with Army, Florida University, Florida State, North Carolina State and Maryland.

"In the ACC, State should be the toughest of the lot. They have had two or three outstanding freshman teams in a row and this looks like their year. We always expect a tight meet with Maryland. I predict a one, two, three finish for State, Maryland and Carolina in the ACC."

Last year's squad finished 12-2 in dual meets, came in second to Maryland in the championship meet and captured third in the Eastern Intercollegiates. Gone from that team are three time All America freestyler Harrison Merrill, Davis Roberts, Chip Smith, diver Dave Moody and backstroker Scott Smiley.

"We're about in the same boat as last year," Coach Earey continued. "We'll be fairly good in the dual meets but will lack freestyle strength Merrill will be missed tremendously because he filled in everywhere for us. It looks like not enough is coming up from last year's freshman team to offset our graduation losses."

Keep Off Grass

The new baseball field between Avery and Ehringhaus is off limits to all students.

"We're re-seeding the field," said baseball coach Walter Rabb, "and we would appreciate all students refraining from playing tag football or any other activity there.

"If the turf is to be ready for next fall, we will have to have their cooperation."

Police Check Coed's Clue To Murder

Chapel Hill Police are checking out a letter from a coed, who attended summer school here, in connection with the murder of Suellen Evans.

Chief W. D. Blake said he didn't think the letter would lead anywhere.

"We haven't received anymore letters in reply to the 2,500 we sent to coeds who attended summer school during the time Miss Evans was killed," Blake said.

The letters asked for any information that would aid police in finding the "dark-skinned man" who stabbed Miss Evans of Mooresville in Coker Arboretum July 30.

The form letter promises that names of informants will not be released.

The letter ends by saying "your information could possibly prevent the commission of another brutal murder."

Blake said a Lee County Negro convicted of assaulting a woman has been removed from the list of suspects.

At the present the list of suspects includes four men. One is a Fort Bragg soldier, Robert Lee Thornton 25, who has been absent without leave from Bragg since early June.

A Chapel Hill merchant heading up the Suellen Evans Reward Fund campaign said early this week that contributions now total more than $1,400.

Paul Robertson, 74, who is giving his time and clerical expenses to the fund, said the money will be paid to the person or persons contibuting information which aids in the arrest and conviction of the murderer.

An agreement with the North Carolina National Bank will prevent anyone from drawing on the reward fund account without permission of a bank officer.

The bank will return all contributions to fund donors if no one has been arrested and charged with the murder or manslaughter in the killing on or before Sept. 1, 1969.

A similar fund has been established in Miss Evan's hometown of Mooresville.

AFTER A WEEK OF OVEN-LIKE HEAT, the weather turned wet yesterday afternoon and Chapel Hill received the first rainfall in several days. These students in front of the Y Building are safe and dry under umbrellas. Others, who did not have enough foresight to carry bumbershoots, found themselves a bit wet. The weatherman says a little more falling weather is on the program for today. — DTH Photo by Ernest Robl.

Referendum Is October 5

Carrier Current Radio Would Put Its Voice In Every Corner Of UNC

By ANDY MYERS
DTH Staff Writer

Campus radio will be presented to the Student body a week from Tuesday in a referendum deciding life or death for the proposed facility.

Introduced to the student legislature last sprng, the bill for a carrier current system on campus met with vigorous opposition, especially in the finance committee of SL.

Although the referendum is not binding on the student legislators, it is expected that campus opinion will in effect decide the fate of the bill.

John Stupak, head of the campus radio committee, has been trying to get the $23,200 bill through the SL since early last year. Additional annual operating costs would boost the first year's appropriation to almost $34,828.

Carrier current radio, now in use at N. C. State and Duke University, is becoming popular on the American college campus. Basically, it consists of transmitting a short-range AM signal through dormitory wiring so that any AM radio might pick it up.

How It Works

Stupak said the system would work like this:

"From studios on campus, we would send a signal by wire or telephone lines over to an FM transmitter in Swain Hall. The 10-watt FM signal would then be broadcast over a five-mile radius from the transmitter, through the air.

"Thus, anyone with an FM radio living within five miles of Swain Hall could receive the signal," he said. At this point the "carrier current" set-up would come in.

"This FM signal would be picked up by special FM receivers around campus, as well as conventional FM receivers. These special receivers would then change the FM signal into AM so that it could be fed into the carrier current transmitters in the dorms.

"The carrier current radio signal would be fed into the existing power lines, which would act as low-power transmitting antennas. This signal would be AM, and any conventional radio, including transistors, could pick up the signal."

Stupak said that the carrier current signal could be transmitted via the existing power lines because the power is so low and the frequency is so high that the signal would not be disturbed by the current already in the power lines.

Low-Range Signal

The range of the carrier current signal would be only 50 feet from the dormitory the signal is being fed into. However, if the signal were any stronger we would have to apply to the Federal Communications Commission to put the system into effect.

"The result," Stupak said, "is that both FM receivers and AM receivers in the dorms will be able to listen to campus radio." The signal would be "somewhere at the lower end" of the radio dial, Stupak said.

Programming for the station will be done by UNC students, of the "highest professional nature we can find on this campus."

There would be regular news and weather broadcasts, and "intense" local srpots coverage, he said.

No Commercials

"We will concentrate on intramurals, freshman sports and sports wrap-ups as well as the normal sports coverage." There would be no commercials.

The annual operating cost of $11.628 will include rental for a UPI news wire, records, secretarial staff salaries, program director and station manager salareies and maintenance.

Programming will be orientated to the student. "Oldie-Goldie" radio shows, classical, jazz, and Top 40 rock and roll will be included.

Every dorm will be provided with carrier current setups, and most of the fraternities and sororities have indicated they will also participate. Stupak said any other group is welcome to use the set-up, and should contact him for details.

Although the campus radio bill was held up last spring by the finance committee, action on the bill is still pending when the Student Legislature meets for the first time this year Thursday.

Stupak said, "We are confident that the legislature will abide by the results of the referendum." If defeated. the bill will most likely die in the finance committee,' where it has been during the summer months.

Radio History

Since its conception, campus radio has led a hard life. Stupak and his committee proposed a campus radio a year and a half ago, and they set out to study its feasibility.

Last January campus radio was sanctioned by the administration. Both Chancellor Paul F. Sharp and Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey signed a proposal which would make them ultimately responsible to the FCC for the radio's operation.

Student Legislature called a special session in February to consider the bill but coming elections caused the issue to be temporarily placed under the rug.

Several attempts were made to introduce legislation before elections, but Don Carson, one of the bill's strongest supporters and vice president of the student body last year, held off until after elections.

It was not until late in the spring that campus radio again saw the light of day. Political turmoil concerning the radio board membership caused a series of postponed special sessions for the bill.

The bill bounced from one legislative committee to another, initiated no less than three special sessions of the SL, including one which might have been illegal since it was held within days of final examinations, and finally stalled in the finance committee, where it remains today.

Opponents of the campus radio feared such things as loss of control of the station to the administration, excessive costs, poor wording in the bill itself and the fact that not every UNC student would have access to the facility.

Its merits, the bill's supporters contend, far outweigh any of the minor problems encountered with the radio setup. The question will now be put to the student body as to whether UNC will have campus radio.

Ohio Buckeyes Favored Over Underdog Tar Heels

COLUMBUS — Ohio State is a two touchdown favorite to defeat North Carolina here this afternoon in Ohio Stadium before a full house of some 84,000. This is the opening game of the season for the Buckeyes, the second for Carolina.

The Tar Heels were beaten 31-24 last week at Chapel Hill by Big Ten defending champion Michigan.

Except for wingback Bud Phillips, who suffered a separated shoulder in pre-season practice, North Carolina is in top physical shape.

Co-captain Hank Barden is fully recovered from a partial shoulder separation but he has lost his starting position to Isophomore Tom Lampman.

UNC Coach Jim Hickey has said that he will start essentially the same offensive and defensive lineups that he used against Michigan.

Ohio State won seven of nine ball games last season, finishing second to Michigan for the Big Ten championship.

Buckeye coach Woody Hayes has claimed that this year's club presents more problems and uncertainties than any of his other teams over the past 14 seasons.

But Hayes has failed to finish in the first division of the seasons. And with the bulk of last season's squad returning, Hayes' pessimism may not be too well founded.

Seven offensive regulars reing backfield. Unverferth, the mainstay of the offense at quarterback, is back and provides the Buckeyes with plenty of offensive potential.

But Hayes claims, for instance, that his losses by graduation were heavy. Ohio State lost a total of 16 lettermen, nine off the defensive team and seven off the offensive unit.

The defensive situation is a little more serious, but even it is not as bad as Hayes would like to claim. Five regulars and three first-line replacements return.

But the Buckeyes have constructed a new defense around Ike Kelley, a unanimous All America pick last year at Center. And middle guard Tom Bugel, six foot, 208 pounder, who is a two year starter. Hayes claims they are the finest pair of linebackers in college football.

Keep your eyes on these two. Bugel will wear No. 66, and Keeley, No. 53.

Another key link in the Ohio defensive chain will be Bill Ridder, who like Kelley and Bugel, is a senior and a two year veteran. The Buckeyes are saying that he has given them its finest middle guard play in years.

Carolina may indeed be successful in moving the ball against Ohio State but it is a safe bet that little of that yardage will come on up the middle.

Dickson Outlines Plan For Student Government

Heading the list is Dickson's plan for a complete reorganization of the executive branch of student government. Outstanding feature of the proposal is the provision for the creation of a special executive department to handle the affairs of four new committees, proposed by Dickson.

Dickson's executive branch presently consists of five major departments which encompass the 27 executive committees of student government.

Topics to be handled by the four new committees are:

— student mental health.

— opportunities for outstanding UNC students.

— the rapid growth of the University and its effect on student life, and — the place of speaking and cultural programs among student groups.

Dickson also outlined a legislative program which he will place before the legislature in its next session. Included in the program are:

— a $5,000. appropriation bill to finance an overseas tour by the University Glee Club

— a $1,200 fund to establish a rotating professorship in honor of an outstanding undergraduate instructor.

— a $3,300 appropriation bill to finance a series of weekly radio shows for state-wide broadcast which will deal with student activities in Chapel Hill.

— a bill to establish a special legislative committee to study the needs and long-range goals of the Daily Tar Heel.

— a bill to establish a special executive committee to compose and edit the Course Evaluation Booklet.

— all appropriation and organization bills for the establishment of a campus carrier current radio system. Passage of these will be sought if students vote "yes" during the Oct. 5 referendum on this issue.

— legislation for the reform of the campus judiciary. Bills seeking a limitation on the jurisdiction of the campus and honor codes will be given particular emphasis.

— the "omnibus" bill for the complete revision of the Student Government codifications Former Student Party Legislative Floor Leader Arthur Hays, the newly appointed head of Dickson's special Legislation Committee, has been composing this bill for several years.

Eure Checks Legality Of Association

RALEIGH — (AP) — Secretary of State Thad Eure has said that he was not looking beyond the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools in his inquiry into the corporate status of "foreign non-profit corporations" operating in North Carolina.

Eure was asked if he planned similar action against other accrediting groups, including those that accredited such disciplines as law and medicine.

"I have no information on any others," he said. "So far as I'm concerned, this is the only one in the whole wide world."

Eure also said he had no misgivings about numerous other nonprofit groups, such as the Rotary, Kiwanis, the Red Cross and Elks. "For the most part, these are just units or chapters of outside corporations, and some of them are actually incorporated in North Carolina." he said.

Eure wrote the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools advising them of an opinion from the N. C. Attorney General's Office.

The opinion, written by Deputy Attorney General Ralph Moody said the association was "conducting affairs" in North Carolina and should be required to obtain a certificate of authority from Eure.

Eure's letter concluded: "I hope that in view of the conclusion reached in the opinion referred to, you will proceed without delay to meet the requirements of our law as now interpreted."

Eure said the attorney general's office would take up the matter in case the Southern Association refused to comply.

"If they ignore my letter, I'll accord them the usual courtesy accorded in all proceedings of this nature," Eure said. "I'll send them a follow-up letter. If I fail to get a reply to that after a reasonable time, I'd make that explanation to the attorney general's office.

Davidson Proves

Computer Love Has Some Faults

Davidson College has a computer, and it works for Cupid. Sometimes it hits and sometimes it misses.

UNC will test a similar system — "Project Match" — later this fall. It is expected to be more successful than the Davidson computer because of its having more participants. This will mean a wider range of closely matched choices.

Davidson added the new wrinkle this month to arrangements for its two social weekends of freshman orientation week.

The 278 freshmen filled out personality questionnaires. They also were filled out by coeds in Queens College at Charlotte and Converse College in Spartanburg, S. C.

They had answers to questions such as: "How much do you enjoy dancing?" and "How do you rate your own personality?"

Answers were fed into the computer, wheels whirred, and out came match-ups for couples.

Well, how did it work?

"Great!" said Cader Howard of New Bern. "My date was a real Southern belle from Charleston, S. C. But we found she was a Southern conservative while I'm a liberal. After that we avoided politics and got along fine."

"Ugh," commented another freshman topped with a red beanie. "Obviously my date lied about her looks. If that's my type of girl, I'll stay single."

John Napier of Bennettsville, S.C.: "My computer date from Converse was very quiet. She was a very—er, uh—nice girl. My date from Queens was a nice girl, too. The only problem was she was wearing an engagement ring. But we had a good time, anyway."

Garee Thomas of Jacksonville, Fla.: "The first computer date was such a letdown, I didn't trust it for the second weekend. I didn't go."

And from a chap who insisted on anonymity: "Some of us were so dismayed by the computer pairings we drove to Salem College in Winston - Salem to find dates. We were afraid to rely on the computer any more.

Cobb Jobs

Interviews to fill Student Legislature vacancies for Cobb residence hall will be conducted by the University Party Executive Committee Sunday at 7:30 p.m. in the Grail Room of Graham Memorial.

Free Flick

Tonight's Free Flick at 7 and 9:30 in Carroll Hall is "All The King's Men" based on the novel by Robert Penn Warren. The flick stars Broderick Crawford and Mercedes McCambridge. It's an exciting drama of the rise and fall of a political demagog based on the career of Huey Long of Louisiana.

'What The)?:%! Is This?'

Two thousand "Parking Tickets" caused a light panic in Chapel Hill Thursday.

The "tickets," a promotional device for a Graham Memorial presentation, said: "Parking Ticket . . . This ticket entitles the bearer to park himself in Hill Hall Wednesday, Sept. 29 at 8 p.m. for a concert by the University of Toronto Mixed Chorus."

The reactions of "ticketed" motorists ranged from humor to panic.

"Oh my gosh — not another one," screamed one victim. He had already collected two of the maximum three tickets.

"Hold it, I was just gonna move it," pleaded a motor scooterist.

"What in !%¾&!! is this?" demanded an irate coed.

"Oh, my gosh, what corn." That was the usual reaction.

GMAB Publicity Chairman David Knesel was responsible for the whole fiasco, and says he has more special ad promotions planned for future GM attractions.

Black Eye On The Tube

From The Greensboro Daily News

Gov. Dan Moore's "I see no view in it" statement about the Ku Klux Klan preceded by a few hours a national television show which left the strong impression that North Carolina has the liveliest Klan revival in the nation.

Coincidence or not, the Governor's remark is a fitting commentary. With its lurid paraphernalia of hoods and flaming crosses (and its sordid history) the Klan is a subject that draws millions to their television sets.

What those millions saw, Tuesday evening, was enough negative advertising for North Carolina to offset dozens of full-page ads by the Department of Conservation and Development.

Justly or not, North Carolina emerged before the CBS cameras as a place where the brews of racial and religious bigotry are brimming over.

If — as we suspect — the program overblew the strength of the K.K.K. in North Carolina, that may be because the CBS reporter who narrated this excellent documentary, Charles Kuralt, is a North Carolinian who remains keenly interested in his home state. But such a supposition is dangerously complacent. In the course of investigating the Klan resurgence throughout the South, Mr. Kuralt has told friends that he found its "nastiest" growth right here.

Why is that? What is making North Carolina ripe for this revival? And what can be done about it?

In the 1964 gubernatorial primaries, when cross-burnings first brought the renewed K.K.K. to public attention, Gov. Terry Sanford made clear his own distaste for the Klan and his determination to keep it within the law. Governor Moore, then a candidate, equivocated. But he has had more than one occasion since then to regret not having staked himself out as firmly as his predecessor. Now he has begun to do so. We hope he will continue to speak vigorously.

But organizations like the Klan feed on more than faltering leadership. They feed on the racial, social and economic insecurities of those who feel they have no spokesman amidst the threatening tides of change.

Certainly deliberate lawbreaking by civil rights demonstrators has set an unsavory example: Extreme begets extreme.

The Klan hierarchy and the klaverns are filled with those whose thwarted ambition to cut a figure finds an outlet in mystique and rant. They must be brought to understand that there is room enough for everyone to enjoy a good job and self-respect in this state — and that those who seek to enhance their own dignity by striking at the dignity of others are on the wrong track.

Perhaps the greatest irony of Tuesday evening's unfortunate publicity is that it reduces the appeal of North Carolina among those who have jobs and hope to dispense.

The Northern or Midwestern company with a plant to build in Eastern North Farolina is hardly enticed to do so by organized tub-thumping against racial and religious minorities. Those who hood themselves and prance to hymn music around flaming crosses are really their own worst enemies. For they make the adjustment to new times and new ideas all the more difficult.

Of course the habits — the "image," if you please — of the new - model K.K.K. have changed since "Catfish" Cole, the last of the old grand dragons, had his fire snuffed out by the Lumbee Indians and the courts. The Klan now claims to be law - abiding and respectful of order. It likes publicity.

But has the reality changed, really? It is hardly conducive to law and order to preach racial and religious hatred. The nation has watched, with mounting horror, what the Klan can do to a town like Bogalusa, La.; and "it can't happen here" hardly seems a realistic thought.

There are stringent laws on the books in North Carolina, first written in 1868 and often revised, to counter those who incite others to hatred and fear of their neighbor. They should be used. The Governor can and should speak out against this pitfall of wasted energies. The state can go on striving for the economic security that will offer these disoriented people a suitably high opinion of themselves and keep them at home.

But these are steps for the long run. For the moment, let us hope that solicitors throughout North Carolina are dusting off their statute books and are vigilant for infranctions of the law.

North Carolinians do not want a Bogalusa here.

Administration's 'Meddling' Shows 'Personal Malice'

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

As impressed as I once was with Chancellor Paul Sharp, I must say that I feel that his administration's recently attempted intervention in student government is virtually inexcuseable, inept, and showed too much personal malice. If the administration wishes to meddle in student politics, they should do so at election time; like all the other interest groups on campus. We could then desolve our present political parties and form two new ones, the Administration Party and the Anti-Administration Party. The Administration Party could run several candidates for each position, on a slate, and allow (if by some chance it were to win an election) the administration to select the candidate to fill the office. On the other hand, all this won't be necessary if the present intervention is successful (even if it be concealed behind a facade of "student leaders"). The administration's present position seems to me to involved several contradictions and, perhaps, a little duplicity. They have said that the question of the student body presidency should be "left to the students." But then they have also been careful to furnish those misguided individuals scurrying around gathering signatures for peitions and otherwise trying to demolish the autonomy of student government, with all the ammunition in their arsenal.

I hope this administration has misjudged the temper of the student body, and I think they have. We at Carolina have traditionally recognized the importance of having a strong student government, one which we elect ourselves. The administration should not have intervened; they won't get my vote or my signature, no matter how successful they are in using "student leaders" to achieve what they want.

Letters To The Editor

Dickson And The Ban

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Amidst the fury of petitions, ult matum, and generally righteous editorials, I, as a friend of Paul Dickson and a strong advocate and participant in Student Government feel the need to reveal to the campus the fact that many student government leaders are in support of Dickson's remaining as president of the student body. Dickson has suffered and is still entertaining many callous-ed and vindictive dicta from persons whom I shall assume have the best interests of Student Government at heart. I personally feel that resignation is now impossible. No mat ter how many statements the administration may issue reminding us that they are no longer pressuring Dickson and no matter how moralistic certain campus leaders may become, the fact exists and shall continue to exist that the right of Student Government and the student body to determine its own president has been infringed upon. Any action promoted by faculty intervention would be a grievous error.

Dickson's administrative personnel have been appointed and one of the most ambitious programs ever ventured in Student Government has been prepared. Are we now to stop in the middle of the stream, hesitate on such programs as judicial reform, creation of a faculty chair supplement, educational programs to the state, campus radio, and vigorous opposition to the speaker ban simply because the president of the student body received an official reprimand? Are we not rather to note with appreciation the fact that our honor system knows no personalities and to admire the personal courage of Paul Dickson?

As a former Honor Council member and as a person still active in our court system as well as being chairman of the party of Mr. Dickson, I publicly state my support for President Dickson and urge him and other campus leaders to defend vigorously the integrity of Student Government by remaining in office.

Frank Hodges
Chairman Student Party
Third Floor, Davie Hall

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

We, the people of America, pride ourselve in self government or government by representatives chosen by the voting population. We like to think we are able to channel into office those leaders who are both politically able and morally acceptable to the majority of the country. This, in theory, sounds pleasing to the ear, let let's look at the record; let's be a little pragmatic about the type of leaders we have had in the past who have suffered scandal, but have proven to be able and steadfast leaders of the republic.

There was old Andrew Jackson who was supposed to have committed adultry (sic) prior to his marriage and election to the praesidency. If one has ever had the opportunity to see the outdoor drama Unto These Hills, he could not help coming away feeling less charitable toward "Old Hickory" due to his treatment of his former allies, the Cherokees.

Wasn't it Grover Cleveland who was rumored to have fathered an illegitimate son?

Harry Truman was supposed to have been backed by the Missouri KKK in his first campaign for congressman from the "show me" state.

And then old LBJ. Yes, the 1960 answer to FDR came away from the fray of last November with quite a few bruises to his moral character. With Bobby Baker and Walter Jenkins as political skeletons hanging in his closet he went on to chalk up a record landslide against the Arizona cowboy.

Now, I am not justifying thse great men for their mistakes or indiscretions, but I'll leave their condemnation to those "without sin." History has proven that in spite of their "shortcoming" or (as the purtians would say) "sins" they were great leaders and fairly respected Americans in the world of politics. They made contributions to our society and set examples of determination and personal stamina which have been building blocks of our nation.

I didn't vote for Paul Dickson. However, I do respect his political and leadership ability. He beat my candidate "fair and square." The majority of the student body felt he was the best candidate — that's democracy. I do not think that if the office of the President of the United States can do no better "morally" with its holders, that we as a small, though important, southern university should not be expected to become the moral messiah of the nation.

In the eyes of some, Paul made a mistake, a human mistake, but I feel that the majority of the students on campus are mature enough to judge his worth as a leader as far exceeding the damage he might have done this summer.

Hang in Paul, I'm for you.

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The Britt Commission, investigating the speaker ban law, will no doubt clip William Otis' letter from the DTH and use it to counter-balance Mr. Goldwater's recent bombshell. On the scales, at least, it will carry more weight and should bolster their confidence a bit.

Some of the arguments that are advanced by Otis, however, seem to be either illogical or ungermane even in defending a law that may well be described by the same adjectives.

He proclaims that the "law is a regulation governing the use of the facilities of state-supported colleges . . . not a proscription of the liberty of any individual," and that forbidding the use of state-owned facilities to Communists does not forbid them freedom of speech. It may be argued with as much validity that the barring of a certain racial group from state-supported schools does not prohibit that group from seeking an education . . . as long as it is elsewhere.

Otis blandly goes on to say that it does not matter whether "the law fosters or hinders the unimpeded pursuit of knowledge," that the General Assembly has simply chosen to revoke a priviledge.

But it does matter — and that is the whole point that Otis misses.

Legally the General Assembly has the authority, that is already evident in that the law is on the books. The heart of the University's protest, however, is not directed at the legislature's authority, but at the nature of the law itself.

Near the end of his article, Otis is "heartened" that not a single professor has resigned because of the law. Perhaps, this is so. But, in recruiting new professors, the University is certainly at a disadvantage when it must admit that among the nation's great universities it alone bears the stigma of such a ban.

Otis' conclusion is especially confusing and weak. On one hand, he would welcome an amendment to the law (provided it did not offend the citizens of North Carolina) and on the other, he castigates the University for not being able to live with the not-so-bad law.

The fact is that the University can exist with the ban, just as a man can exist in blindness. It can exist under restrictions, and marked by stigma and perhaps, even without accreditation. What really matters though, is that the University does more than exist.

What really matters is that the University is a creative place; a place of intellectual turmoil. The ban is a step toward stifling this. That's what the protest is all about.

Right v. Right

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Columnist

William F. Buckley, editor of the ultra-conservative National Review, recently denounced the John Birch Society, and for his efforts got quite a bruising.

It all started when Buckley finally conceded that the Society's leaders had made a few unforgiveable boo-boos — like calling Dwight Eisenhower an instrument of the Communists.

Poor Billy! His only reward was a stack of nasty letters. William Patten of St. Louis, Mo., even tagged him a member of the Establishment, which inevitably seems liberal to the rightists and conservative to left wingers.

Mrs. Lenore McDonald of Los Angeles commented: "What Robert Welch wrote in The Politician (imputing pro-communism to President Eisenhower) is mild."

James Oviatt of Los Angeles and Beverly Hills wondered "what Zionist Jew wrote (the column denouncing the Birchers). Could it have been Lippmann, Goldberg, or even Abe (Fortas) — Johnson's attorney? . . . I have known Bob Welch for over 15 years; I think he told the truth about Eisenhower."

William Gehrke of Denver, Colo., said Buckley was using the "same old smear method employed by the liberals . . . to condemn (Welch) and what he stands for."

These tactics, Gehrke added, "don't refute (Welch's) facts." The "facts" are that the United States is 60-80 per cent dominated by the communists.

Mrs. W. D. Porter of Lexington, Ky., asked the National Review editor why he had to "do it. Couldn't you have left it to the Overstreets, Gus Hall, and perhaps Chet Huntley?"

I wish Mr. Buckley best of luck in his new career as an arch enemy of the far right. Who knows — maybe the next target of his exposes will be the National Review.

Buckley was especially critical of the Birchist magazine, which hopefully isn't what its ironic title says it is: American Opinion.

The publication accuses defense secretary Robert S. McNamara of sabotaging our armed forces . . . and installing probable subversives among our officers.

". . . It is entirely possible that Mr McNamara has already reduced us to a position of military inferiority to the Soviet, which is reported now to have several weapons designed and developed in the United States but, by McNamara's edict, never produced for the use of our armed forces.

"Strange things have come to pass, haven't they?"

According to American Opinion, President De Gaulle of France is "beyond any reasonable doubt, the Communist's chief Trojan Horse in Europe."

But don't think American Opinion objects to De Gaulle's proposals to weaken NATO — which Welch likewise considers communist.

Secretary of State Dean Rusk and Attorney General Nicholas Katzenback are also targets of Birchist diatribes, and naturally, American Opinion in effect would cease publication if it did not blast Chief Justice Earl Warren.

In fact, the magazine has even protected freedom by exposing Warren as an enemy agent. "The theory that the Warren court is working for a domestic, as distinct from foreign, dictatorship becomes less tenable every day," the Birchers calmly inform us.

Nazi Causes Disturbance On 'Rule'

WASHINGTON (AP) — A man shouted "down with home rule" and hurled a Nazi flag into the House chamber today from the visitors' gallery. He was seized by ushers and dragged out.

The man leaped to his feet during debate on a health bill and started denouncing the pending bill to grant home rule to the District of Columbia.

"Down with home rule! Kill the home rule bill! Home rule is not good for the white people of America!" he shouted repeatedly.

While ushers and guards struggled with him, he kept shouting and threw a sheaf of leaflets into the chamber, then followed them with a folded Nazi flag which he pulled from under his coat.

As he was taken from the gallery, upside down in the clutches of a half-dozen ushers, he was still yelling.

Capitol police identified the man as Robert Felton Bruce, 20, Arlington, Va., and said he declared he was a member of George Lincoln Rockwell's American Nazi party.

An officer said Bruce had handcuffed himself to the gallery railing before starting his demonstration. One of the cuffs was still dangling from the railing after he was taken out.

Police said Bruce would be charged with disorderly conduct.

The leaflets he tossed into the House contained violently anti-Negro statements.

UNC-G Coeds Give Various Reasons For Coming Where The Boys Are

By HAROLENE ATWOOD
UNC-G Carolinian

For the first time in UNC's history, freshmen women have been allowed to enter the University. Even so, the annual deluge of sophomore women transfer students from area colleges has not ceased.

In a girl-on-the-street interview at UNC at Greensboro this summer, several coed transfer students were queried about their migration. "Why are your transfering to Carolina this year?" they were asked by the Carolinian, the UNC-G student newspaper.

Julia Napolitano: The main reason I'm transferring to Carolina is because I plan to major in special education. UNC-G does not offer it. I would like a change. Going to an all girls' school has its advantages and disadvantages.

Susan Mitchell: No reason in particular. I just don't like this place and so I'll go over there.

Broadening

Linda Goldstein: I think the experience of attending a girls' school is good; however, I need a broader experience which is to be found in a large coed university. At a school such as this, I have been exposed to certain situations and people of various socio-economic, religious and regional groups unlike my own. This has helped to mold my personality, but there is more to college than this.

Billie James: The main reason I'm leaving is because there aren't any activities here where you can come together. There isn't a feeling of belonging. You can get to know the people better at a coed school.

Cheryl Matthews: I am going to UNC-CH because I would like to attend a large coed school for two years and Carolina has more to offer in my major field — Antropology.

Dana Bonkemeyer: This school is too large. Because of its size, exceptions are not often made. Individual needs are sacrificed to the education of an average college student. Also, the intellectual atmosphere does not challenge the inquisitive mind.

Joan Archer: I'm an army brat and have always moved around all my life. I'd like to get a different view of life. Also, my father teaches at Carolina.

Gayle Sawyer: "If you were five feet, eleven inches, wouldn't you want to go where the boys are?"

Linda Coven: I can't get my major here without it being a double major.

Jane Caulkins: I feel like I'm missing out on real college life. There's too much study here. Even though I may be in class from eight to five everyday at Carolina, I'd rather be there than here where it's like a girls' boarding school.

Pat Carter: East Carolina is at home. I had planned to transfer after two years.

Sheltered

Betsy Finison: Carolina is a lot less shelterd in the respect that UNC-G is not a real life situation. I need some transition to meet life and the world. At Carolina, I think I could learn to cope with more of a variety of situations and problems.

Margie Erickson: I can get my major there on the undergraduate level. I have never really loved it here, anyway, and think I'll like it better at Carolina.

Nellie Dekok: Everyone here is wrapped up in their weekend world; the students don't seem to get involved in news, etc. I'd like to go where there is a more extensive program.

Terry George: Since social matters will be more convenient, I have nothing to lose by transferring and I possibly have something to gain.

Don't stake your life on Angels' wings,
Just place your bets on these sure things.

Don't worry, football fans, I will never be soft-hearted again. But I simply can't stand to see a grown man cry.

You see, I don't really predict games, I control them. Over the years, coaches have begun to realize this and they become just a little disturbed if I say their team will lose.

Anyway, I wrote my column for the Tar Heel last Saturday and you wouldn't believe the number of phone calls I received.

Coaches were calling from coast to coast asking me to "please reconsider and let their teams win."

Well, I just couldn't stand it any longer. I switched a few controls and turned a few dials and some teams won that, in my article, I said would lose.

So there. That's the reason for Duke beating Virginia, Wake Forest losing to Virginia Tech, and Georgia defeating Alabama.

But the honeymoon is over, fans. I have switched my phone number and I formally declare that I will listen to no more frantic pleas.

So, just as the little poem says, place your bets on these sure things:

UPSET SPECIAL: Lenoir Hall over My deadbody.

VIRGINIA OVER CLEMSON: The tigers get rolling by beating State, but the Cavaliers want revenge for the DOOK loss.

DUKE OVER SOUTH CAROLINA: The Blue Devils should be a little stronger than the Citadel, the Gamecocks' opponent last Saturday.

N. C. STATE OVER WAKE FOREST: The Wolfpack likes Deacs better than Tigers. Pick the Wolfpack.

MARYLAND OVER OHIO UNIVERSITY: There will be nothing slow about these Terps. Maryland should breeze by two touchdowns.

Frosh Hit State

Freshman Coach George Barclay sends an untried but determined band of Tar Babies into action tonight in the opener of the 1965 season.

Both squads are sprinkled liberally with outstanding high school stars. Starting at quarterback for the Tar Babies will be Gayle Bomar, from Peru, Ind. He made All-Conference two of his three years in high school.

Billy Dobson and Dick Wesolowski are scheduled to start at the halfback spots. Dobson comes from Alexandria, Va., and Wesolowski is a Canadian import.

Tommy Dempsey 5-11,215, will start at fullback. Dempsey played at Fayetteville under ex-UNC lineman Pete Carr. He also made an appearance in the Boys Home Bowl.

Chip Bradley, 6-0,210, will start at center. Bradley played at Lee Edwards High in Asheville and earned a Shrine Bowl bid.

Don Hartig 6-1,230 from Greensboro will start at left tackle, Co-captain Mike Richey, a big 6-5, 240 pounder will start at right tackle.

Starting at left end will be Peter Davis, from Clarksville, Va. Billy Warren, from Rocky Mount, will start at the other end. Warren was All - State and honorable mention All-America.

The defensive line averages 224 pounds end to end. Tackle Tommy Gardner is the biggest at 262. The big lineman is from Plymouth. The other tackle is Tom Renedo, 6-0,230 from Coral Gables, Fla.

Doug Thomas 6-1,230 from Asheboro will start at guard. Thomas was an All - Stater and a Shrine Bowler. Battle Wall from Wadesboro will start at the other guard position.

Dave Ringwalt, 6-1, 206 is one of the smaller defensive starters. He signed into camp as a fullback but will start at defensive center.

Tom Buskey and Niel Rogers will be at the ends. Rogers is 6-3, 220 and has played both tackle and end.

Landy Blank, Clint Frank, Ronnie Lowry, and co - captain John Harris are the linebackers. Frank is the smallest starter at 172 and is playing without a scholarship.

Two starters have been side lined with injuries for the first game. Frank Coble was scheduled to start at the left guard but injured his knee. Wayne Busick was to start at a defensive tackle position but is out for the opener with an elbow injury.

Tar Baby co - captains John Harris and Mike Richey are both optomistic about tonight's game. "It should be a good hard game. We'll win, because I think we are in better shape," says Harris.

Scribe Learns Hard Way

By BILL HASS
DTH Sports Writer

You may have seen this guy around campus. He has a peculiar walk — wobbly, stiff and very, very slow.

It's me and it's the result of running the 4.3 mile cross country course. It was the sports editor's brilliant idea and he is gifted with a silver tongue because he talked me into it.

Cross country Coach Joe Hilton team was acceptable to the idea and I was decked out in track equipment, including a brand-new jersey. I came on to the track looking rather snazzy, if I do say so myself.

The uniform, if nothing else, gave me confidence. Where was Peter Snell, anyway?

My guide was Drummond Bell, a cross country letterman who has a slipped disc and will not run this year. After a few encouraging words by the silver - tongued sports editor, I was ready to roll.

Bear in mind that yours truly had no previous track experience of any kind. Absolutely none. So I had no idea what I was in for.

We started on the regular track and took almost one lap around. Shucks, I wasn't even breathing hard after 440 yards Then we turned into Navy Field where the football team was practicing and jogged around there.

Breathing became a little more difficult about half-way around. We ran up a dirt road, went down by Ehringhaus and passed between Parker and Avery.

I was ready to walk by then, but Drummond insisted on going a little further. So we followed a path into the woods towards Kenan Stadium. Right near Morrison College there is a hill that leads to the stadium and here we began to walk.

By this time I was beginning to think that the sports editor speaks with a forked tongue.

I staggered up the hill and we began to jog again around one side and down the big hill past the gate where students enter. We walked, naturally, up the other side picking our way nimbly over the steps that tried to break my toes.

The journey continued as we finished looping Kenan and came out by Avery again.

"Are we about through?" I asked between gulps of air.

"We've been about a mile and a half," my guide answered.

Almost three miles to go. What the hell was I doing here, anyway?

We charged through a field of weeds, which didn't surprise me at this point, and scrambled up a slope which threatened to give way beneath our feet.

While walking (yes, again) past Ehringhaus I asked Drummond what to do about the stitch in my right side.

"You'll run it out," he assured me.

I thought about feigning appendicitis. I thought about a nice comfortable hospital bed with a gorgeous nurse holding my hand.

We ran on.

We were jogging (I was stumbling, actually) by the road which leads to the Institute of Government and my head felt ready to depart from my body. I wondered about hitching a ride, but decided it probably wouldn't be fair.

Taking a left at the stoplight, we trotted a few hundred yards to where a path entered the woods. This, naturally, was part of the fool course.

I asked Drummond what a runner thinks about while running and he said they just concentrate on catching someone. My own thoughts centered aroud ice water, cold beer and wings on my feet.

We turned suddenly onto a narrow path that a surveyor would have difficulty finding. We crossed a bridge and jogged by a creek. Sort of "Over the river and through the woods to grandmother's house to go."

The only reason I kept on was that I feared passing out and disappearing beneath the leaves — never to be found again.

A couple more bridges were crossed and went under a sewage pipe. Man, we were really out in the boondocks — similar to place where fraternity men drop new members and let them find their way out.

We came upon Dead Man's Hill, which threatened to add my name to its obituary list. We paused momentarily to let some members of the team thunder by. I leaned on a tree for support. I became very attached to that tree, and left it reluctantly.

After what seemed like an hour of climbing Dead Man's Hill, we burst into the open and went by some tennis courts. Then back across the road, down a trail and we were back at Navy Field.

Some how I kept going. With the end in sight I didn't want to stop now, I told myself. The heck I didn't.

We went around Navy Field again, came back out onto the track and sprinted home. I had enough gas left to do the last 100 yards in about 120 seconds with a blinding burst of speed.

My new jersey was plastered to my back and my legs felt like a Mack truck had run over them. I glanced over at Drummond and he wasn't even sweating. The ultimate insult!

My friend, the shower never felt so good. Not to mention the bed that night.

Next day I awoke, sprang out of bed, and collapsed in a heap on the floor. The muscles from my thighs to my ankles sort of locked into position and refused to move. Finally, they did, but they got even by protesting every time I took a step.

The next day was not as bad. It was worse. My movements were so slow I must have resembled the Old Man of the Sea.

You'll see me, no doubt, with that peculiar walk on campus. One thing I'll say for sure. It takes guts and stamina to run that course which winds through Pohick County. Or it takes a sports editor with a silver tongue and a gullible sports writer.

Today's Round-Up Of College Games

By JACK HAND
Associated Press
Sports Writer

Notre Dame risks its No. 1 rating in the national against sixth - ranked Purdue today in one of the big games on a college football program that will see all of the top 10 teams in action.

The Ivy League schools, idle last week, will join the fun and the Big Ten even has a league game on schedule with Northwestern at Indiana.

Navy visits Stanford, Army, shocked by Tennessee in its road opener, expects softer pickings in Virginia Military and the Air Force Academy heads into rough weather at home against Nebraska, No. 2 in the Associated Press poll and No. 1 in the pre-season.

The clash of Notre Dame and Purdue before 61,000 fans at Lafayette, Ind., is the only meeting of teams in the top ratings. The Irish are coming off a resounding 48-6 victory at California where Bill Floch proved Ara Parseghian still has a quarterback to guide backs Nick Eddy and Bill Wolski. Purdue, impressive in a 38-0 romp over Miami of Ohio, banks heavily on the pass-catch combination of Bob Hadrick in their dreams of a Big Ten title.

Nebraska's powerful legions are not expected to have too much trouble with the Air Force, riddled by the cheating scandal last spring, and beaten by Wyoming in its opener.

Texas, the No. 3 club, is a two-touchdown favorite over Texas Tech in a Saturday night game at Austin but Darrell Royal's boys won't take it lightly with Donny Anderson on the premises.

California, battered by Notre Dame, faces the uninviting task of playing at Michigan against the fourth-ranked Wolverines who beat North Carolina 31-24.

"We're in again up to our necks," said California Coach Ray Willsey.

Arkansas will be at home to Tulsa, a team it shaded last year 31-22. Coach Frank Broyles found himself a quarterback in Jon Brittemun in last week's 28-14 victory over Oklahoma State but must contend with Tulsa's pro - type passing game run by Bill Anderson.

Louisiana State continues on a Saturday night program, risking a No. 7 ranking against Rice at Baton Rouge. LSU barely squeezed past Rice last year 3-0.

Florida's dreams of a Southeastern Conference title will be on the line in a toughie with Mississippi State at Gainesville, Fla.

Syracuse, No. 9 in the AP poll after an opening win over Navy, hopes to get halfback Floyd Little rolling against a pass-mined Miami team led by quarterback Bob Biletnikoff.

Kentucky, moved into the No. 10 spot by upsetting Missouri last week, now must face the threat of Mississippi in a Saturday night game at Lexington.

Woody Hayes' Ohio State Buckeyes open a week late against North Carolina at Columbus. Alabama, upset by Georgia, hopes to make Tulane pay Saturday night at Mobile. Southern California, dropped out of the top ten after a 20-20 tie with Minnesota, takes on another Big Ten foe in Wisconsin at Madison, Wis.

Illinois is at home to Southern Methodist. Minnesota hosts Washington State, Michigan State invades Penn State, Oklahoma visits Pittsburgh and Iowa plays a Saturday night game against Oregon State at Portland, Ore., in important intersectional tests. Washington will be at Baylor for another Saturday night game.

'Cross Country Blues'

Time trials will be held for the team on Monday and the freshman will run with the varsity over a three - mile course. Coach Joe Hilton says he is singing the blues and doesn't know if the freshman will be ready to run.

Injuries have already struck the squad. Drummond Bell, a letterman last year, has a slipped disc and is out for the cross country season. Bell was among the top five runners last fall.

Tom Greer, the number one freshman runner, has an injury to the calf of his leg and may not be ready to run by Monday's trials.

Academic averages on the squad are remarkably high. Jim Meade carries a 3.8 and is a Phi Beta Kappa. Charlie Lefler hands around a 3.6, Trip MacPherson around 3.5, and Fred McCall, 3.4. Several other members have averages of 3.0 or better.

Practice differs each day for the team. Coach Hilton works on endurance one day and speed the next. A good drill is to run a 440, walk for two and a half minutes, then run another. This is done for 16 to 10 laps.

Assistant coach Boyd Newman is schedule to hear wedding bells next summer. Coach Hilton says he has tried to get him married for years.

SPORTS

Jeff, 'Kid' Meet

Billy Cunningham and Jeff Mullins renew their basketball rivalry after a one-year layoff when the St. Louis Hawks and the Philadelphia '76's tangle October 6-7 in Reynolds Coliseum, Raleigh.

Mullins, a former Duke University All American, is in his second year with the Hawks while Cunningham is playing his first season with the '76's.

These two clubs join the World Champion Boston Celtics and the Baltimore Bullets in the two night, four-game tournament.

UNC Hits 10,000

The 24 points scored by the Tar Heels against Michigan Saturday placed them in the 10,000 point club — a feat few teams can match.

Going into Saturday's game, the Tar Heels had scored 9,976 points in a football history which dated back to 1888.

The Michigan output hit the 10,000 mark on the nose. Max Chapman scored the final touchdown to tie the mark.

University of Toronto Chorus

Graham Memorial and the Department of Music will present the University of Toronto Mixed Chorus on Wednesday, September 29, at 8:00 p.m. in Hill Hall. The concert will be free to UNC students and the general public.

The University of Toronto Chorus will represent Canada at the International Choral Festival at Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts this fall.

The University of Toronto Chorus first appeared on the campus 1947 as the 'All-Varsity Mixed Chorus,' an adjunct to the University's symphony orchestra. Like the orchestra, it was formed at the request of students to provide an opportunity for members of all faculties to share their musical interests and abilities with fellow enthusiasts, and, in concerts with the entire campus.

In 1963, under the present conductor, Walter Barnes, the Chorus made its first tour of Southern Ontario. It has everywhere been acclaimed for the outstanding quality of its musicianship, in which it has steadily matured, until now it is considered by Toronto's leading critics to be one of the finest musical organizations in the city and province.

Especially noted for its precision and sensitivity in the interpretation of sixteenth century a capella works, the group has distinguished itself in every type of choral music from large concert masses of the 19th century to contemporary Canadian literature.

Why should a traditional Shetland tie have a medallion on the back?

Because it looks better from the front.

The edges never roll, the point stays centered, always neat. Our Bradford Shetlands are Scotch as a burr, and woven of the softest woolens by Hebrides weavers. Subtle in blend and exquisitely soft textured, for the most discerning traditionalist. Resilio Ties at knowledgeable retailers. Daily Tar Heel WORLD NEWS BRIEFS

From The Associated Press

Monroe Attorney New YDC President

Robert Huffman, a personable, cigar - smoking Monroe attorney, took over as president of the North Carolina Young Democrats Saturday, pledging to heal any party splits.

"But I don't believe there is this split they talk about — except in the minds of a few," Huffman said. "After all, we are a party of factions."

Huffman was elected by acclamation after thw withdrawal of A. J. Stephenson Jr., a Lillington insurance agent and the more conservative of the two candidates.

"The Democrats won today, just the Democrats — no prefixes," Huffman told convention delegates. "I will work fiercely for the party."

County delegations caucused Friday night and Stephenson admitted, "It became apparent we wouldn't win."

Before calling for the election of Huffman by acclamation, Stephenson again charged that 20 clubs committed to him were deprived of voting rights by the convention credentials committee. A committee spokesman said only five of the 20 tried to get credentials.

"I have withdrawn and this decision was not easily made," Stephenson said slowly. "Needless to say, I'm disappointed."

U. S. Plans World's Largest Plane

WASHINGTON — The Defense Department probably will set in motion next week the development of the World's biggest transport plane — an aircraft that eventually could bring drastic changes in U. S. troop disposition overseas.

After months of studies, the Pentagon is expected to award a contract for development and later production of the C5A, a monster jet - powered plane which could carry up to 600 soldiers or tanks and other heavy military gear more than 6,000 miles at about 550 miles per hour.

The C5A will outstrip anything now in being.

Its ability to carry a load of up to 250,000 pounds compares with Russia's huge Antonov transport which is reported to have a cargo capacity of about 100,000 pounds.

The biggest U.S. transport currently is the C141 Starlifter jet which can carry 154 troops or 90,000 pounds of cargo.

Herald Tribune Breaks N. Y. Strike

NEW YORK — The New York Herald Tribune bolted the city's Newspaper Publishers Association yesterday — the 10th day of a strike shutdown — and prepared to return to publication Monday morning.

Both sides said the development would not affect the deadlocked negotiations between the New York Times and the AFL-CIO New York Newspaper Guild.

The other affected newspapers withheld action.

The Guild's strike of the Times Sept. 16 stilled the presses of seven of New York's eight major dailies, idled 17,000 employes and stopped circulation of 4.4 million daily and 6 million Sunday papers.

Only the New York Post, an afternoon tabloid not a member of the Publishers Association of New York City, remained on newsstands.

In a letter of resignation from the Association, announcing the Herald Tribune's plan to resume publishing with the Monday morning edition, Walter N. Thayer, the newspaper's president, said:

"Economic and other considerations make it impossible for us to continue inside the association."

Saying he had no idea what effect the Herald Tribune's action might have on the stalemate, Special Mediator Theodore W. Kheel pointed out "issues are still unresolved and have to be resolved."

Solid-Fuel Rocket Scores Success

HOMESTEAD, Fla. — The World's largest known solid-fuel rocket motor scored a spectacular success on its first test firing yesterday, shooting a towering pillar of white-hot flame more than 1,000 feet into the sky.

The success was a major milestone in a space agency program to determine whether large solid-propellant rockets can be effectively used as boosters for giant space payloads.

The rocket, 80 feet tall and 22 feet in diameter, was strapped down firmly in a 160-foot deep pit, its 20-foot exhaust nozzle pointed skyward.

The nose-down position enabled the rocket to vent its flame upward, eliminating the need for costly ground equipment that would have been destroyed if the rocket were in a nose-up position.

At precisely 11 a.m. (EST), after a perfect two-hour countdown, a radio signal was sent to an ignition system and the huge motor with its 840 tons of rubber-like fuel flashed to life.

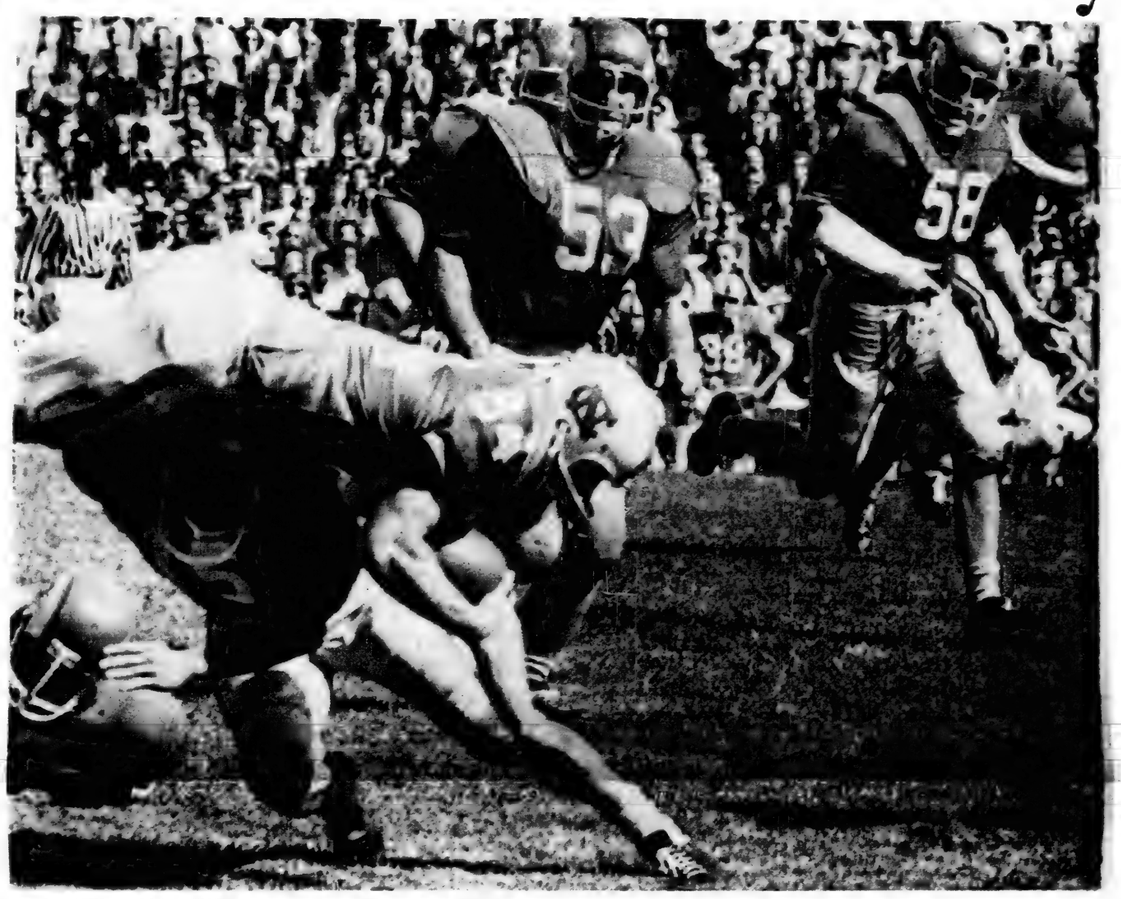
For 140 seconds, the tower of flame spewed upward as the motor generated thrust of more than 3,000,000 pounds and sent a great thunderclap rolling across the swamps of the nearby Everglades.

A huge mushroom-shaped cloud of black smoke rose from the flame and hovered for several minutes over the site.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration announced later that the firing was completely successful.

The rocket, a test vehicle, as yet has no name.

Tar Heels Cool The Valley Of Thunder



OHIO STATE'S John Fill stops Max Chapman while All America Mike Kelley (53) comes up to help. Chapman was the game's leading rusher, gaining 127 yards on 13 carries including a 48 yard touchdown run in the closing minute of yesterday's game in Columbus. The mighty Tar Heels simply would not be defeated even though odds-makers put their money on the Buckeyes with as many as 20 points. COLUMBUS, Ohio—If North Carolina teams continue to play football for 1,000 years, still they may say that yesterday was their finest hour.

The Tar Heels defeated Ohio State 14-3 before a near capacity crowd of 80,182 who stood quietly in stunned disbelief after Max Chapman's 48-yard touchdown coup de grace with a minute to go in the game.

They call Mammoth Ohio Stadium the Valley of Thunder, where Ohioans, who take their football like other people take life and death, come to see their Buckeyes devour people.

Yesterday they were not only dissapointed, they were shocked by these Tar Heels, who were billed as warm-up material for upcoming Big Ten battles.

Max Chapman, who ran through and around Ohio State all afternoon, started that drive with a 13 yard gain on North Carolina's first play. A play later he went eight yards to the Ohio State 28 and then on the next play, swept around UNC's right side on a 23 yard run to the five.

Max was the leading rusher of the game, carrying 13 times for 127 yards and one touchdown. He almost doubled Ohio State's entire rushing effort (66 yards on 47 plays).

Except for Talbott's touchdown, Max's brilliant up-the-middle 48 yard backbreaker with 56 seconds left on the clock and Ohio State's 26-yard field goal early in the second period, there were no other scores.

But there was a whale of a battle.

It featured the Buckeyes famed three - yards - and - a cloud - of - dust attack against a North Carolina defense that put up a fight for every foot.

The Tar Heels cured Ohio State from going outside on the first series of downs and finally forced the Buckeyes to give up their ground attack altogether.

A jubilant Ronnie Kaplan, North Carolina's defensive quarterback, said after the game that UNC's victory had hinged on just one factor: Desire.

"We wanted them, we wanted them much more than they wanted us," he said. "How were we able to stop them," he said, "we just stuck it in there. When somebody tried to come right up the middle, like they did, you don't stop them with finesse — you just stick it at 'em. You don't let them move you, you move them."

And that's exactly what North Carolina did all afternoon.

Old time Ohio sports writers, who time and again have watched Coach Woody Hayes' machine-like offense grind opponents into so many pulverized pieces, could not say enough for the Tar Heels.

Moody's Last Dictum

Ralph Moody has issued the latest dictum in a barrage of new rulings concerning the State's public schools: Beatle haircuts must go.

The "hair-razing" rule gives local boards of education the power to eliminate either shaggy - headed students or their hair, depending on the student's acceptance of the mandate.

In the past week the deputy attorney general has taken the stand for private enterprise, ruling that "pink soda pop" cannot be sold at athletic events if the sales are in competition with local business.

The advisory opinion, issued Friday, also gives boards the power to ban Bermuda shorts and bluejeans as school attire.

Early last week Moody ruled that the Southern Association of Schools and Colleges can't conduct any more "business" in the State without a permit. None of the other 11 states in the association's domain have any such ruling.

Deputy Atty. Gen. Moody released his opinion in response to a letter from the principal of the Joe P. Moore School in Lumberton, Haywood Davis.

He had asked Moody if a principal has the authority to require his students to "dress properly," referring to several male students "who definitely need haircuts."

Moody's reply stated: "We think that the board of education can pass a regulation that male students must have a proper haircut which conforms with the normal and accepted practices and fashion in such matters.

"They can pass a regulation excluding wearing long hair like the Beatles, duck-tail haircuts and Indian-head haircuts."

On public schools, Moody said, a school "is not a bistro, a joint or a pad where beatniks gather, drink espresso coffee and substitute odd behavior and bizzare dress in lieu of brains."

Moody based his opinion several years ago by former assistant attorney general Claude Love, who said:

"If pupils should persist in coming to school dressed in such extreme fashions as to become a menace to the school, the board of education would have the authority to adopt reasonable rules and regulations to prohibit such practice."

Moody's statement did not make it clear whether he considers Beatle haircuts a "menace," or whether they should be classified as such before a school board can pass a ruling.

New Course Puts Speed In Reading

How well do you read?

About this time each year, many UNC students discover that they are going to be faced with a ghastly amount of reading and a ghostly amount of time.

To help students improve their reading and studying skills, the University reading program offers a 30-hour class during each semester.

According to the Reading Program staff, this is the way the course is set up:

Since the program is set up on an individualized basis, class hours are schedule so that a student may register for any combination of class hours during the week.

A minimum of three hours per week for ten weeks is suggested for most students.

However, in cases where class schedules will not permit a student to spend this much time each week, other arrangements can be made.

Because of their heavy academic load, some students attend only two hours per week. Others attend as many as four, five or six sessions per week.

Regular classes may be scheduled between the hours of 8 a.m. and 4 p.m., Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays; between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays; and between 9 a.m. and noon Saturdays.

No course credit is given for the program, and schedules are set up independent of regular University registration.

In a survey taken of 123 students who participated in the program one semester, the average reading rate was 225 w.p.m. and comprehension was 86.1 per cent before the course.

After taking the 30 lessons, the group's average reading rate had more than doubled — 464 w.p.m. — while comprehension had fallen less than three per cent — 83.4.

In a re-test given five months later, the student were reading 447 w.p.m., and comprehension had climbed back to 85.3 per cent — a net gain of 222 words per minute with a drop in comprehension of only .8 per cent.

Students interested in participating in the program this semester may register at 106 Peabody.

A $2 supply fee, to cover the cost of materials, is payable at time of registration.

Michigan Almost; Ohio All The Way

By ED FREAKLEY
DTH Staff Writer

Amazing! Terrific! I can't believe it. Wonderful! Great!

But what it really was, was guts. It was football at its best. And the Tar Heels were better than the best.

The sports writers were surprised at Michigan's narrow victory last week. Bump Elliot, Michigan coach, said it was the heat. Some said the Wolverines just let up. But now they know.

The sports writers were shocked yesterday. Ohio State, ranked by some as high as third and a 13 point favorite over Carolina, fell before a fired-up Tar Heel Team, 14-3.

The Blue and White proved they were a football team last week. This week they proved they are more than that.

Carolina is a good football team. Before this season ends they may prove to be a great team.

They have made more than their share of mistakes in their first two games. However, they have proved two very important points.

They aren't quitters. They came back last week after being down 21 points to give Michigan a good scare. They might have won, nobody actually said it, but looking back, especially after yesterday, you know its true.

And the second thing the Tar Heels proved is that they come through in the clutch. Numerous times yesterday Ohio State started a drive only to meet a continually stiffening defense. The closer the Buckeyes would move to paydirt, the harder the going would get. They managed a field goal in the second quarter, and that was all the getting they got.

The offense . . . well it was an offense. They ran, passed and did jut everything. They moved the ball, and they scored. That is the only way to describe it.

To name the outstanding players would require the names of every man that played. All we can say is, thanks.

Many fans came to school skeptical over the coming season. The squad was the brunt of jokes. But they held themselves together an displayed their confidence. They have now given their fans that confidence.

This story is an example of confidence. It was over before the game was.

Consolidated U. Queen Will Be Selected

Applicants for the Miss Consolidated University Day contest should submit their names to the Consoidated University Student Council in GM before Oct. 1.

Judging by elimination will be as follows: Any UNC organization may enter the contest by submitting the name of the contestant along with a $1 entry fee and a photograph.

Entries must be submitted to Faryl Sims, CUSC Chairman by noon Oct. 1. The committee will then review these entries and final judging will be held for the 20 finalists Oct. 4 in the Morehead Planetarium.

CU Day coincides with the UNC-N. C. State game this year, Oct. 9. Carolina will send two girls to Raleigh after the judging here.

The winner, to be announced during the half-time of the game, will represent the Consolidated University, which now consists of UNC, State, UNG-G and UNC-C.

Some New Bans

It's no wonder that Deputy Attorney General Ralph Moody has been overtaken by a virus—he's bound to be exhausted from turning out such a steady stream of recent legal opinions which may thoroughly shake up the state's educational system.

Wednesday he said the Southern Association of Schools and Colleges is "conducting affairs" in the state and is subject to incorporation laws. One of the Association's "affairs" is the possible withdrawal of accreditation from our colleges if the speaker ban law is not changed or repealed. It was his third ruling which either directly or indirectly supported the speaker ban.

Thursday he threw public school officials all over the state into a sweat when he said school systems can no longer operate concession stands at athletic events or sell magazine subscriptions, photographs or student insurance.

Moody

Moody said it is unlawful for "any subdivision or any department or agency of the state or any employe to engage directly or indirectly in the sale of goods, wares or merchandise in competition with citizens of the state."

The only exceptions he allowed were cafeteria food and school supplies such as pencils, paper and notebooks.

Friday he outlawed long haircuts for male students. Not content merely to render a legal opinion on whether or not school officials may require haircuts "which conform with the normal and accepted practices and fashions," he got in an extra two-cents' worth by attacking long-hair types in general.

"A public school is a place for educational and instructional purposes; it is not a bistro, a joint or a pad where beatniks gather to drink expresso coffee and substitute odd behavior and bizarre dress in lieu of brains," he said. The obvious implication is that a fellow only grows long hair to cover up an empty head. That may be true in some cases, but it is hardly the issue to be debated.

"I am not aware that a public school is a place to display the latest rock and roll and Beatle techniques," Moody said.

Who said it was?

It is apparently implied in Moody's statements that his remarks are directed to public schools — especially high schools.

We see nothing, however, except the grace of God and the goodness of attorney general's office to prevent the applications of these restrictions to the state's colleges and the University.

UNC does about $20,000 worth of concession business during its five home football games. Most of the profit goes to the Educational Foundation for scholarships. About $10,000 is spent on concessions at N. C. State's Riddick Stadium and almost three times that amount comes in annually from concessions in Reynolds Coliseum.

Friday, Moody said he "does not think" his opinions will affect institutions of higher education, but that is hardly reassuring.

If the concession ban is applied to colleges, the University's postition would be the same as that of W. C. Self, associate superintendent of schools in Charlotte, who said, "The opinion . . . means we will have to find another source of income or eliminate some activities. That other source of income will have to be increased taxes."

Under most circumstances we are staunch defenders of private enterprise and short haircuts, but Moody's decisions represent to us some rather irrelevant hair-splitting.

It is bad enough that our elementary and secondary schools are being subjected to Raleigh-created problems, but if an attempt is made to apply these new bans to the University, we expect to see some fur fly — and it won't all be off the heads of beatniks.

Nightmare Features 1995 Walking Permits

By MIKE JENNINGS

Last night I ate in Lenoir Hall. I didn't feel too well when I went to bed.

When I awoke, I was standing in front of Wilson Library. I blinked in amazement as I stared over the campus toward South Building. There was no grass in sight; the campus was covered with brick.

I could hardly see the brick, however, for the crowd of students. There were thousands of them.

Beginning to swoon from the crush of students about me, I turned toward the library. Before passing out I saw a campus cop roughly grab a student by the arm and begin hauling him up the steps. As I fell forward I imagined all the students had strange black marks on their foreheads.

When I came to I was lying beside one of the library pillars. The cop was giving me smelling salts. Several students were leaning over me. To my horror, I saw black marks on all their foreheads.

I sat up and began to moan. The cop took me by the shoulders and gently pushed me back down. "I'm okay," I said, "but tell me why these kids have black marks on their heads."

"You're not a student, then," he said.
"I was in 1965."

"Oh," he said, not at all surprised. "Well, this is 1995. Those marks are walking permits."

"Oh," I said weakly.

"Due to limited space, we can only let students with a 2.5 or better average walk on campus."

"They have to make their own arrangements. I just nabbed a student who refused to make the necessary adjustments.

"What about the other students? How do they get to class?" I was sitting up again.

"What adjustments could he make?", I asked as I stood up, but the cop didn't seem to hear.

"You okay now? You'd better come with me; have to get you authorized for a temporary visit."

As we struggled toward South Building, I heard the sound of a motor overhead. I looked up to see a midget helicopter headed across the campus.

Suddenly, two jet fighters with UNC STUDENT GOVERNMENT printed on the sides streaked over South Building from the east with all guns blazing. The helicopter exploded in a burst of flames.

I turned toward the cop, who was serenely gazing upward with is right hand shading his eyes.

"Wha-wha-what—," I managed to stammer.

"What? Oh, yes. It was about time they got that bird. He's been going to class in that helicopter for weeks now — with only a 2.8 average. Have to have a 3.4 to use a helicopter — Honor Code violation."

My head was reeling when we finally made it to South Buildng. The cop led me down the stairs.

When we got to the bottom, I saw a figure in the shadows slowly moving along the opposite wall. The cop saw him, too, and yelled, "hey-you!"

The figure gave a start, then ran toward the stairs. The cop caught him and hauled him into the light. He was a student: he had a black mark on his forehead.

The boy began to sob uncontrollably. "You haven't got a blue mark, son," the cop said gently. "You know you can't go in there without a 3.2 average. I'll let you turn yourself in."

The boy got control of himself, nodded, and shuffled slowly up the stairs.

"What did he do?", I asked.

"He was trying to get in there," said the cop, pointing to a door.

I began to swoon again as I saw the lettering on the door.

BATHROOM.

I fell off the bed and began rolling on the floor and whimpering. My roommate pinned me down until I woke up.

'It's Past Time For A Change'

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

In Randall's letter expressing alarm over the state-wide coverage of the Dickson case (Sept. 24), the author, perhaps inadvertantly, expresses a view that many Tar Heels share. He feels that the news of the whole affair has been sent out far too broad and much too wide; he wishes that the facts were not dispersed throughout the state, that it be kept a rather closely - guarded secret within the confines of the DTH; in short, he is ashamed that a situation of this nature has occurred and does not want any more people to know of it than necessary.

The students of this University should never have to feel ashamed of what is going on on campus. Indeed, we should be able to feel proud of what occurs here at Carolina and should want the whole world to know about it. By no means should we have the desire to repress the news of our actions or the actions of our elected student government representatives most especially those of our student body president. When this takes place, when we wish for nobody to know what's happening at UNC, when we are so ashamed of our president that we cringe at the thoughts of his actions being displayed to the world — it's past time for a change.

Venable Convinced People That UNC Deserved Money

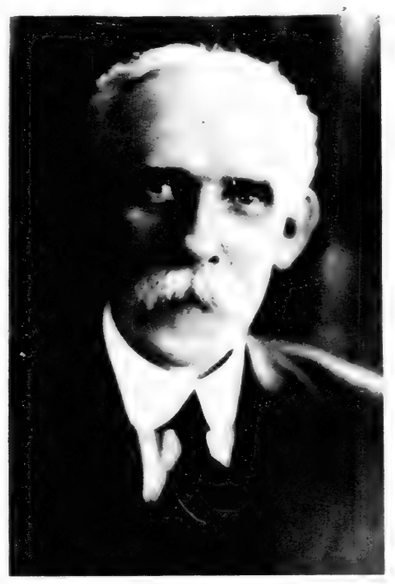
By OTELIA CONNOR

When President Francis Preston Venable was elected head of the University in 1900 he decided the time had come to end the hand-to-mouth existence that had been the lot of the University since the close of the Civil War. It was asking too much of any president to beg the alumni and philanthropic foundations for money to build every new building and to buy equipment. So he set about to convince the people of the state and the legislature that the University was created by the state for its advancement and that the state must assume the responsibility for its upkeep and maintenance.



Dr. F. P. Venable

President Venable was not the gifted platform speaker that his immediate predecessor, President Edwin A. Alderman, was "He lacked the shrewd political - mindedness of President George T. Winston in dealing with legislatures," and he was not the diplomat that Dr. K. P. Battle was. He was a scholar, an eminent chemist, a man of high character, and he succeeded in waking up the state to its obligation to the University by "his stern presentation of stark realities."

Starting from scratch, the state appropriated during President Venable's administration $45,000 in 1905; $50,000 in 1907, and $200,000 in 1911.

Buildings constructed under President Venable: Howell Hall, 1905, built for a chemistry hall; Abernethy Hall infirmary, built in 1907. The spacious president's house on Franklin and Raleigh Streets, was built in 1907, at a cost of $15,000. Davie Hall, biology and botany, named for the University's founder, built in 1908. Caldwell Hall, medical building, named for the first president of the University, built in 1912. Vance-Battle-Pettigrew dormitory finished in 1912. Swain dining hall was built in 1914. In 1891 Mary Ann Smith, a resident of Raleigh, bequeathed $37,000 to the University. Smith dormitory, built in 1901, was financed by this fund. Carr dormitory, built in 1900, cost $18,000, was named for General Julian S. Carr of Durham who contributed $8,328 towards its construction. The Carnegie Library, now Hill Music Hall, built in 1907 through a gift of $55,000 from Andrew Carnegie. The alumni and friends set up a number of endowments to match this gift for the library's up-keep and future expansion. Both the Carnegie Library and the YMCA were dedicated at the 1907 commencement. In all sixteen new buildings were added to the University plant, bringing the total number on the campus in 1914 to 28. The University's physical plant was valued at $1,008,400 in 1914.

President Venable developed in 1886 the Bunsen burner in its present form. He sold the right of its manufacture and sale for six burners.

President Venable's most important work was the training of expert chemists and imparting to them his zeal for scientific investigation. Two students who came under his influence and who have become distinguished men in their field were William Rand Kenan Jr. and John Motley Morehead.

In 1893, Dr. Venable and William Rand Kenan Jr. devised the commercial method for making calcium carbide. He and Mr Kenan developed a process for utilizing the waste product, calcium carbide, in making acetylene gas, but he received no financial benefit from the patent which covered the process. In 1926 Mr. Kenan gave $275,000 for the construction of Kenan Stadium as a memorial to his parents. Mr Morehead gave the Morehead Planetarium, contributed to the Morehead-Patterson Bell Tower, and established the Morehead scholarships.

In 1914 the Board of Trustees accepted President Venable's resination and established the Francis Preston Venable chair of chemistry and elected him to fill it. In this position he served with distinction until he retired in 1930.

Dickson Decision Was Courageous

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

You stated in your editorial of Tuesday's Daily Tar Heel that the most courageous thing that Paul Dixon could have done was to have resigned.

That must have been very difficult for you to say as you set (sic) in the security of the editor's office.

The fact of the matter is that the easiest thing that Dixon could have done would be to have resigned. He has chosen instead to allow his name to be smeared in the columns of the state and campus press and the inevitable campus gossip which is being encouraged by at least some of those who are trying to force him out of office.

And all for what? Because he believes that the administration has no right to determine who sits in the office of president of the student body. Apparently this is of minor concern to you or else you sugar-coat the issue as you did in Wednesday's paper.

The man has courage and it leads me to question yours when you belittle it!

Chase Cafeteria Needs Improving

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

As we sit around, holding our aching stomachs and drinking our Alka-Seltzers, we have decided to share with all the campus our experiences in eating at Chase Cafeteria. Two of us have just had, for the first time in our lives, a lumpy, yes lumpy hamburger.

The building is very impressive, especially at night, with its large lounges on each side of the front entrance. Perhaps these largely unused lounges are part of the biggest mystery about Chase: how can such a tremendous cafeteria have only two food lines?

The iced tea is instant; no complaints there. But to cool down what comes out of the tap, ice is necessary. Can you go by a bin of ice and fill your glass quickly? Of course not. The slowest bottleneck in the line comes when we try to coax ice out of an ice machine which spits it out, condescendingly, a flake at a time.

To sum up our opinions, we would like to say barf.

A Daily Tar Heel Review

Memories Of Persecution Plague The 'Pawnbroker'

By PETER RANGE
DTH Reviewer

Combining social commentary and great art is a trick at which few film directors succeed. Most artistically great movies can at best make some comments on the problems of an individual in a particular setting under specific circumstances. Truffaut and Godard do this par excellence; their attempts to speak to a social problem, as in Truffaut's recent "The Soft Skin," failed miserably in the hands of a director essentially oriented towards individual human beings and unique situations.

Sidney Lumer has executed a powerfully successful wedding of beautiful cinematics and social documentary in "The Pawnbroker." His story concentrates ostensibly more on a single individual than do French New Wave movies, but the breadth of his social criticism reaches much further into history and more deeply into the present than do the art works of most great directors today.

The Pawnbroker is Sol Nazerman, a German Jew who lost his beautiful wife and two children in Nazi concentration camps. Nazerman survived the camps ("I lost all I loved, but I did not die.") and immigrated to New York. His pawnshop at Park Avenue and 116th St. takes in the tawdry wares of grostesque and desperate human beings in the teeming, festering core of Spanish Harlem, Manhattan's biggest Puerto Rican Ghetto.

Nazerman supports his sister - in - law and her family along with his mistress and her dying father. The woman is the widow of a good friend he saw dragged to his death by the dogs in the concentration camp. Their relationship is much like that of a middle-aged marriage; punctuated alternately by passion and card games, underlain with grudging criticism.

He seems from the beginning a beaten and hardened man, this former professor at the University of Leipzig. He has isolated himself from feeling and compassion, from the people who come to him in poverty or intense loneliness, even from those with whom he lives at home. He has mastered his cruel fate and thus mastered the present. He neither needs nor wants sympathy and fights off the warm understanding of Marilyn Birchfield, a middle - aged widow who tries to offer sympathy and friendship. Indeed the most powerful theme of the film may be that of loneliness ("They were taken from me and I could not do a thing to help them.") Man cannot reach outside himself; the extended hand falls back again, empty.

But the twenty-fifth anniversary of the loss of his family produces a flood of horrifying memories and scenes in Nazerman's otherwise closed mind. In a series of slow-motion visits to the past or almost subliminal cut-ins of a few frames at a time, we see the Nazermans picnicking when the Nazis arrived, the death of Reuben in the camp, the prostitution of Nazerman's wife by Nazi officers, and the trampling underfoot of his son in a cattlecar packed tight with Jewish prisoners.

The comparison drawn between the Nazi horror and the exploiters of the poor and prostituted in New York today strikes an alarmingly true ring. Rodriques is the pitch-black robber-baron Negro with the all-white apartment and platinum-blond white lover boy — from him Nazerman receives his money until he awakens to the fact that Rodriquex owns the maimed bodies and souls of the crawling "scum" of the ghetto, a fact which his isolation and untouchability over the years hid from him.

Jesus Ortiz is a borderline criminal, a Puerto Rican Negro, who works in the pawnshop. He becomes the final victim of Nazerman's inner inhumanity and isolation when he is killed by fellow-robbers while trying to save his boss, the old Jew. When Ortiz dies in front of the store, Nazerman's guilt drives him to skewer his own hand on the pawn ticket spindle on his desk in one of the several almost strictly "facial scenes" performed superbly by Rod Steiger. The futility of the Christ-like martyrdom bores through sickeningly; it seems as heavy-handed and melodramatic in the movie as in the Nazerman role.

Practically every scene was shot on location on Park Avenue where the elevated roars by every three minutes. The characters and places are incomparably real and true-to-life. A multiplicity of themes is skillfully interwoven: man's obligation to involve himself in other human beings emotionally and concern himself with the ills of his society; man's essential aloneness and isolation from other men; the plight of the ageless, wandering Jew with never a place to rest or stay who can find meaning only in making money; and the atrocities of big city slumlords and extortionists, no less heinous than those of the German executioners twenty-five years ago.

Greek Rush Ends On Note Of Laughter And Sorrow

There were cries of exultation and tears of sorrow in the girls dorms Friday night. Formal sorority rush was over and the bids had been received. The long round of parties had ended, and the girls were tired.

In 1923, the first sororities were established on the UNC campus. Rush has been a part of the campus since. In 1962, rush became deferred, and freshmen could no longer take part.

This year's formal rush consisted of rounds of parties divided into a gradual preview of all the sororities. The first two nights, all the rushees visited every house. Invitations were extended to the selected rushees from each house for a second round of parties. Each girl was allowed to choose six sororities. In the third round of parties the number of houses to visit was limited to four. For the final round of parties, the rushees were limited to three houses. Immediately after these parties, they went to Gerrard Hall to fill out preference cards.

Great Day

Friday was the great day of decision. The Dean of Women's office matched rushees bids to the sororities preference. Sorority members were informed of the results in the afternoon. The rushees received their bids that night. As soon as the bids were received the new pledges went to their houses to be received.

Ledbetter Pickard

Our AVERAGE Student Reads 4.7 Times Faster Than His Starting Speed

WITH EQUAL OR BETTER COMPREHENSION

The internationally famous EVELYN WOOD Reading Dynamics Institute

INVITES YOU TO ATTEND A FREE DEMONSTRATION OF THIS UNIQUE METHOD

At The Durham High School on Duke St., Wed., Sept. 29 at 8 p.m.

Where you will:
- See an amazing documented film about Reading Dynamics.
- Learn how Reading Dynamics can help you to faster reading, improved comprehension, greater retention.
- See a live demonstration by a Duke student.

HOW DID IT START?

Eighteen years ago Mrs. Wood made a startling discovery that led to the founding of Reading Dynamics. While working toward her masters degree, she handed a term paper to a professor and watched him read the 80 pages at 6,000 words per minute—with outstanding recall and comprehension.

Determined to find the secret behind such rapid reading, she spent the next two years tracking down 50 people who could read from 1,500 to 6,000 words per minute. She studied their techniques, taught herself to read at these faster rates. Now, after years of testing, you can benefit from this great discovery.

IS IT SIMPLY A PROMOTION STUNT?

Results have been reported in TIME, NEWSWEEK, BUSINESS WEEK, and ESQUIRE. Demonstrators have appeared on television with Jack Paar, Garry Moore and Art Linkletter. Over 100,000 people have taken the Reading Dynamics course, both in the U. S. and abroad. Some of their comments are reprinted here:

Senator William Proxmire, Wisconsin—"I must say that this was one of the most useful educational experiences I've ever had. It certainly compares favorably with the experiences I've had at Yale and Harvard."

GARY HEMRIC, BURLINGTON, N. C.—"Evelyn Wood Reading Dynamics is the most valuable single asset I have received in education. With it, I have increased my reading speed from 350 to an average of over 2,000 words per minute, and have read at over 5,000 W.P.M. Moreover, with this speed increase, my comprehension has not suffered at all. My total impression of a book is much clearer, and recall of details is as easy if I had read it word for word.

"Through Reading Dynamics, new worlds in books have been opened to me, and I have been relieved of the drudgery that I experienced with normal reading. Evelyn Wood Reading Dynamics is a revolutionary concept in educational progress and I am grateful for having been able to experience this dramatic innovation."

SENATOR HERMAN TALMADGE, GEORGIA—"It is my opinion that if these techniques were instituted in the public and private schools of our country, it would be the greatest single step we could take in educational progress."

BEN E. JORDAN, JR., VICE-PRES., SELLERS MFG. CO., SAXAPAHAW, N.C.—"I am very pleased with the fact that my reading increased about five times, but I am even more pleased that my comprehension improved from 63% to 92% at the faster rate."

SENATOR STUART SYMINGTON, MISSOURI—"I can now read most materials at speeds above 3,000 words per minute and technical material in the 2,000 word per minute range."

VIRGINIA HARRIS MILLER, LIBRARIAN, CHARLOTTE AND GREENSBORO, N.C.—"It is well worth the time and money of anyone who reads for business or pleasure. I only wish it had been available when I was in school."

JIM KAIGHIN, DURHAM, N.C.—I feel the Reading Dynamics course gets right to the heart of the problem of reading. Not only does it increase speed and comprehension, but gives an appreciation of the finer books and material.

ALAN W. ECKERT, DURHAM, N.C.—A reading speed of over 2,000 words per minute is enabling me finally to read the vast quantity of material I feel I should read. I am going to try these techniques on cases in Law School, and of course in all my other reading.

HOW IS IT DIFFERENT FROM OTHER COURSES?

No machines are used. You learn, instead, to use your hand as a pacer—a tool you always have with you.

Conventional rapid reading courses aspire to 450-600 words per minute. Most Reading Dynamics graduates can read between 1,000 and 3,000 words per minute, and many go even higher.

GUARANTEE

We will guarantee to increase the reading efficiency of each student by AT LEAST 3 times with equal or better comprehension. We will refund the entire tuition of any student who does not obtain at least the tripling of his reading efficiency as measured by the beginning and ending tests. This refund is conditioned upon the student's having attended all of the required classes or having made up missed sessions with the teacher. He also must have practiced the required number of hours, following the assignments as outlined by the teacher. The average student may expect 5 times increase in reading speed, and an improvement in comprehension and recall.

Any student who must withdraw from the course for any reason may re-enter any subsequent courses at any future time, at no additional cost.

A 10-WEEKS READING DYNAMICS COURSE WILL BE HELD AT THE DURHAM HIGH SCHOOL ON DUKE ST. THERE WILL BE ONE 2-HOUR SESSION EACH WEDNESDAY FOR 10-WEEKS BEGINNING WEDNESDAY OCT. 6 AND ENDING DEC. 8.

Class Time: 7:30-9:30 p.m.
Registration Begins at 7 p.m.

Prince, Pauper Meet

By GENE RECTOR
DAILY TAR HEEL
ASST. SPORTS EDITOR

The "Prince and the Pauper" of Major League Baseball may meet in the 1965 World Series.

The Prince: San Francisco Giants.

The Pauper: Minnesota Twins.

A generation has come and gone since the Minnesota Twins, the transplanted Washington Senators, last won an American League Pennant.

The "also-ran" wilderness has held them 32 years. Their last escape was in 1933.

The success that season is only one of three in the 64 years of Washington-Minnesota baseball existence.

And to continue that tradition, the then Washington Senators lost two of those World Series.

The first and only victory came over the New York Giants in 1924. But credit for that success must be shared equally with the Washington ground crew and Mother Nature.

A seventh - game, 3-3 deadlock was broken in the last of the 12th inning by the now celebrated "pebble ball" incident.

A Senator batter hit a routine grounder which struck a pebble and bounced over the head of Giant third baseman Fred Lindstrom — driving in the winning run.

That break in tradition did not last long, however. Washington got back in the goove in 1925 by losing to the Pittsburgh Pirates in the October classic four games to three.

The script was the same in the final World Series taste in 1933. The Giants of Bill Terry revenged the loss of 1924 by blasting the Senators four games to one.

Since 1933, the Senators - Twins have stuck with their "Pauper" role. Three second place finishes and one third are the best of the lot. Also during that span, the "Paupers" finished fourth two times, fifth five times, sixth six times, seventh eight times, and eighth six times.

In all fairness, the shift to Minnesota improved matters somewhat. Although not yet a land of "Milk and Honey," the Twins in Minnesota have finished seventh in '61, second in '62, third in '63, sixth in '64, and are leading the pack in '65.

The Giants, on the other hand, offer quite a contrast. They have won the National League pennant 16 times since 1901 — more than any other club in the National League.

Their last pennant came in 1962 — the first in 1904. In 64 years of existence, the Giants have failed to play .500 ball only 12 times.

But there is a ray of hope for the Twins. The Giants have won only five of 15 World Series. (There was no World Series in 1904).

Ah, but this is a new generation of the Twins-Senators. Only one Minnesota Twin, veteran pitcher Johnny Klippstein, was alive when the organization last won the pennant in 1933.

Perhaps now they have found theirs was out of the "Wilderness."

Tar Heels Enjoy Their Finest Hour

olina's defense as "absorbing."

It was a well chosen word. His own team had run and thrown at Carolina all afternoon, 82 plays in all — 35 passes, 47 rushes — without much success. UNC, on the other hand, had the ball a mere 51 times, yet the Tar Heels outgained Ohio State 308 yards to 244.

You would have had to see this "absorbing" North Carolina defense to have fully appreciated it.

The longest run it gave up was only 11 yards and other than that no Buckeye took more than seven yards in one try. While it did allow four straight Ohio State completions by quarterback Don Unverferth late in the second period, it intercepted two passes and never gave the Buckeyes the Big Play.

That was the factor that had Hayes shaking his head after the game.

"Never once," he said, "did we get the big play offensively, never once. We keep the ball for 82 plays and we wind up with three points. I suppose you might say that that proved that control ball doesn't win games.

"We hadn't planned to pass as much as we did, but what choice did we have? They played us tight and stopped our inside game — we couldn't run outside — so what choice did we have?"

Ohio State had the ball a total of 11 times. Seven of those times the Buckeyes drove into UNC territory, penetrating once to the nine yard line. That was in the second quarter when Bob Funk kicked a 26 yard field goal.

Three of the other four deepest drives were stopped when a UNC player broke through to throw Unverferth for a long loss.

Bill Spain did it in the second quarter when they had reached the 27; Joe Churchill halted the first drive of the second half when it reached the UNC 39 and Jim Masino stalled Ohio State's last threat of the game on the UNC 26 yard line.

Bill Edwards had ended the Buckeyes final attempt in the first half when he intercepted an Unverferth pass on the UNC seven. That drive had reached the 27 yard line.

North Carolina coach Jim Hickey could not praise his boys enough. He would not single out individual players, calling the win "a great team effort."

Bill Edwards duplicated the fine punting job he did against Michigan last week, averaging 40 yards on four kicks.

Talbott was brilliant. Almost always throwing on the run he hit seven of eight receivers in the first half and 11 of 16 during the afternoon for 127 yards.

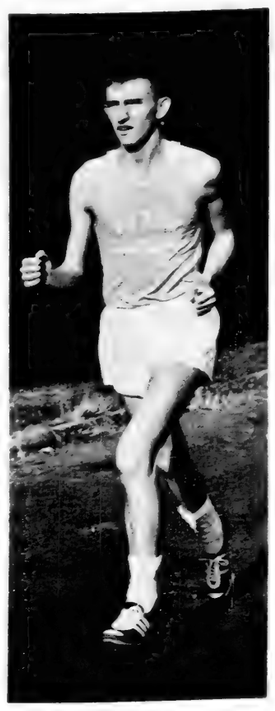
His primary targets were John Atherton who caught five for 75 yards and Chapman, who caught four for 24.

STUDENT PARTY

The history of the Student Party on the UNC campus for the past 27 years will be the principal subject of discussion at an SP meeting tonight at 8 in Gerrard Hall.

A new party treasurer will be elected and legislative vacancies for Men's District I, Women's District I, Women's District VI and Men's District IX will be filled.

Freshmen are urged to attend.



Captain Jim Meade is the shot in the arm for the UNC Cross-Country team.

Frosh Beat State

North Carolina's Tar Babies made Saturday a perfect day for Carolina football fans by scoring a 9-0 win over N. C. State's freshmen. It was the opening game for both clubs.

Carolina scored late in the first period on a 36 yard field goal by wingback Billy Dodson. The final score came on a one yard plunge by quarterback Gayle Boman in the second quarter.

NFL Contenders Vie For Crown

The "Old Account" might be settled today in the National Football League when the Green Bay Packers host the Baltimore Colts and the Cleveland Browns entertain the St. Louis Cardinals.

Both the Packers and the Colts opened with impressive victories last Sunday. The Colts stomped the strong Minnesota Vikings while the Packers crushed the Pittsburgh Steelers. The game pits the air-minded Colts, led by All - Pro quarterback John Unitas, against the balanced attack of the Packers.

The World Champion Cleveland Browns hope to continue their winning ways against the Cardinals. The Browns impressively defeated a supposedly strong Washington Redskin team last weekend, and with a defeat of the highly-rated Cards, the Browns could make it tough for eastern division clubs.

In other NFL games, the Minnesota Vikings play the Detroit Lions. Dallas plays Washington in Dallas. The Chicago Bears play the Los Angeles Rams; the Philadelphia Eagles play the New York Giants and the San Francisco '49ers play Pittsburgh.

Harriers Get Big Test

Carolina's varsity and freshman cross - country runners will put each other to the test tomorrow with a three mile race over the freshman course.

The race should give coaches Joe Hilton and Boyd Newnam a closer look at how the Tar Heel distance runners will do when ACC competition starts on Oct. 4 at home against South Carolina. The USC meet will feature a head on clash between defending ACC cross-country champion Bob Crombie and Carolina's captain, Jim Meade. Meade finished second to Crombie in the championship meet last fall.

Coach Hilton seemed pleased with the team's progress in practice. In a recent two mile run over part of the cross-country course. Meade paced the varsity with a time of 10:02. Hilton said that top positions on the squad were far from set and the three-mile race Monday could settle matters.

The freshman distance runners will be making their first appearance in Carclina blue against the varsity. Truett Goodwin of Durham has been one of the top runners for the frosh.

Also looking impressive for the freshman have been Joe Lasich of Hagerstown, Md., and Jim Hotelling.

Hilton announced that anyone interested in going out for cross - country or track should contact him as soon as possible.

Half-Price Tickets

Half - price tickets for the UNC-N. C. State game October 9 in Raleigh will go on sale Monday morning at the Woollen Gym ticket office.

The limited number of tickets will be sold to students and staff with athletic cards.

Cake Race Slated

Six home-made cakes will be the prizes in Thursday's Intramural Department Sponsored Cake Race.

Approximately 30 entries had been received by noon Saturday. To enter, a participant must run the course twice, any time between the hours of 3:30 and 5:30 p.m. any day prior to the race.

In the Open Division, which all candidates for the freshman track team must enter, cross country shoes are permitted. For the Novice Division only tennis shoes will be acceptable. Track lettermen are not eligible to run.

The first Cake Race was held on Saturday, November 3, 1923 and had 125 entries. The race was discontinued in 1938 and revived in 1958.

The course is slightly over a mile and starts on the track at Fetzer Field, winds down past Avery Hall, by the Rams Head parking lot, circles Kenan Stadium and comes back to the track.

About 35 to 40 ran the race last year and the same number is expected this year.

Winners of last year's cakes were Bill Horn, Darius Hinnant and Neil Nance in the Novice Division and Mike Williams, Fred McCall and Oliver Todd in the Open.

Soviets Will Get Profits

MOSCOW, (AP) — Premier Alexei Kosygin today called for sweeping reforms of Soviet industry, informed sources reported from a closed session of the Communist party central committee.

Further adoption of profit incentives was believed to be the key to the reforms.

The sources mentioned two in particular:

—Giving factory government credits for goods sold.

—Abolishment of regional Economic councils, with their functions consolidated and taken over by new ministries.

Previously factories have received bonuses for goods produced, whether they could be sold or not. Under the new plan unsold goods would mean no credits.

The aim is to increase both quantity and quality of goods. Communist Party chief Leonid I. Brezhnev is to address the committee Wednesday and announce the date for the 23rd Congress of the Soviet Communist Party, expected in March.

The listing of Kosygin and Brezhnev as the main speakers appeared to substantiate reports from Communist party sources that there would be no major leadership changes at this meeting.

U. N. Calls Urgent Session

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. — The U. N. Security Council was summoned into urgent session last night to consider an appeal to Pakistan and India to observe the U. N. cease-fire.

The call went out for a 6 p.m. meeting after a series of private consultations on how to keep the shaky India-Pakistan truce from collapsing.

Informed sources said the Council would be asked to approve an appeal from the council president, U.S. Ambassador Arthur J. Goldberg, who took a leading part in the private consultations.

Secretary-General U Thant participated also in the private talks at the invitation of Goldberg. Thant has been directed by the council to enforce its demand for a cease-fire and withdrawal of troops to positions they occupied before Aug. 5.

India and Pakistan were blaming each other for violations of the cease-fire.

U. S. Denounces Viet Cong Murders

SAIGON, South Viet Nam — The United States yesterday denounced as wanton murder the execution by the Viet Cong of two more U. S. soliders. A Communist broadcast, however, warned of even heavier punishment for Americans if the South Vietnamese government continues to execute Communist agents.

The Saigon government declared earlier that such reprisals against Americans will not stop its executions.

A U. S. spokesman, in denouncing the excutions, said, the United States has no present plans to press the Vietnamese government regarding the Vietnamese executions.

The Communist warning, broadcast by Hanoi radio, said the Viet Cong cannot give the U. S. aggressors and their henchmen the liberty to murder our patriotic compatriots without being punished.

Word of the executions came as U. S. and Vietnamese forces made scattered contact with the Viet Cong on the ground and American and Vietnamese warplanes continued to pound Communist targets.

Radio Hanoi identified the executed Americans as Capt. Humbert R. Versace of Baltimore, Md., and Sgt. 1. C. Kenneth M. Roraback, whose wife lives in Fayetteville, N. C. The broadcast said they were shot Sunday morning by a Viet Cong firing squad in repirsal for last week's execution by South Vietnamese of three Viet Cong sympathizers.

Clara Bow, 'It' Girl, Dies

HOLLYWOOD — "It" girl Clara Bow, the toast of Hollywood as the flapper queen of the silent screen, died today at 60 —a shut-in who couldn't face the world she conquered.

Death ended 35 years of chronic sleeplessness and pain for the legendary beauty who was the sex symbol of the roaring twenties.

As has been her custom for years, the red-haired actress was watching a late, late movie on television when hit by an apparent heart attack.

A nurse—she had been under constant medical supervision since 1930—was with her when the end came in the West Los Angeles home she bought after spending many years in sanitariums.

The go-go pace of her eight flamboyant years in movies made her an invalid while still young. But in recent years her health had improved and death was unexpected.

She had only made one public appearance since going into seclusion, for the funeral of her estranged husband, Rex Bell. That was in July of 1962 when the onetime cowboy actor who rose to lieutenant-governor of Nevada died while campaigning for the governorship.

At the funeral, she smiled and waved to old friends like Richard Arlen and Jack Oakie. But she went home and saw no one except her family and occasionally Arlen.

He's Tried Both Sides of Law

ASHEVILLE — Two state highway patrolmen testified in General County Court Monday that Buncombe Superior Court Solicitor Robert S. Swain was intoxicated when arrested Sept. 13.

At the start of the trial this morning, Swain pleaded innocent to a charge of driving while intoxicated.

Patrolman G. W. Church and Sgt. J. D. Cabe spent two hours testifying before the state rested its case shortly after noon. The defense was to present its evidence this afternoon.

Church testified he followed Swain's car several blocks before stopping the solicitor. He said Swain's car reached a speed of 68 miles an hour at one time.

The patrolman said Swain's car ran a stop sign and failed to stop at a traffic light. He also testified the sirens and flashing red light on his cruiser were in operation that night.

HURRY UP AND WAIT! This was the order of the day yesterday as UNC students braved the lines in uncomfortably-warm coats and ties to have their Yack pictures taken. Pictures will be taken through Oct. 22.

"T" Sticker Drivers To Get $2.50 Refund

A $2.50 refund is headed your way if you are among the 1,300 students who paid the $5 car registration fee and got a T sticker.

Dean of Men William G. Long said yesterday that checks are being prepared and the refunds will be mailed "within the next two weeks." No refunds can be made in person at the traffic office. The decision to change the registration fee was made by the Traffic and Safety Committee.

T stickers have been issued to non-commuting town students who live within twenty minutes walking distance of the campus. Cars with T stickers may not be parked any place on campus between 7 a.m. and 6 p.m., Monday through Friday, and 7 a.m. and 1 p.m. on Saturday.

Five Types

Five other types of stickers, K. H. J. G and C, have been issued to students, according to their place of residence.

Parking lots have been disignated for each type of sticker and only cars bearing the proper permit may park in the lots.

"We decided to make the refund," Long said, "because the T sticker is such an unusual classification. It is the only one which is a pure registration. All the other classifications at least give the privilege of hunting for parking space. In effect, we just won't be charging the hunting license fee for T sticker holders.

"We've received several legitimate complaints about this and we became convinced they had a point and something should be done about the situation," Long said.

"Our whole system is subject to scrutiny," he said, "and we always welcome suggestions for improvements. Our job is not to harass, but to reduce harassment."

Robert F. Kepner, assistant to the Dean of Men, said last night that about 1,300 T sticker owners will be getting refunds.

4,500 Automobiles

"All together, we have about 4,500 cars registered now," he said. There are 1,500 parking spaces available for about 1,800 on-campus students with cars. There are 600 spaces available for the 2,200 registered communter and no spaces for the 1,300 T sticker owners.

Long said the cost of registration for T stickers was cut to $2.50 more than a week ago, so any students who registered since then will not be due a refund.

Toronto Exchange Interviews Underway

This year, as in the past, 26 Carolina students will soon be selected as members of the 1965 Toronto Exchange group to (1) host the visit of 26 students from the University of Toronto (Canada) on a visit to Chapel Hill and (2) to spend six days at the University during semester break.

The primary purpose of the visits is to provide a means of communication between UNC students and their counterparts at the Canadian institution," explained Sylvia Wall and Hubert Wooten, co-chairmen of the Exchange program.

"Our reasons for scheduling the trip are to exchange views and ideas, to analyze differences, and to participate in social activities with the Canadians."

"One of the early responsibilities of the 1965 Exchange will be to help in hosting the 26 Canadians during their four-day visit to UNC in November," the chairmen said.

The program, available to all students of the University, both undergraduate and graduate, has been in existence at UNC for the past three years.

The interviews will be conducted today and Wednesday by a committee made up of last year's Exchange members. The committee will choose 26 exchange students and six alternates to replace any of the members who is unable to make the trip.

Place for the interviews will be Roland Parker Lounge in GM.

Morehead Program Expanded

Trustees of the Morehead Foundation at the University have announced expansion of the Morehead program in North Carolina high schools and preparatory schools.

Three new districts have been added. Previously, the state was divided into seven districts. The state is now divided into ten districts. This expansion program will send 60 award nominees to the Central Committee in Chapel Hill instead of 42.

John Motley Morehead, founder of the Morehead Foundation, made this expansion possible when he left the major part of his estate to the foundation.

Chairmen of the Ten Morehead Selection Committees are: District I, Thomas J. Pearsall, Rocky Mount; District II, W. Frank Taylor, Goldsboro; District III, Peter B. Ruffin, Wilmington; District IV, Thomas Willis Alexander Jr., Raleigh District V, James Webb, Greensboro; District VI, Archie K. Davis, Winston ; Salem; District VII, Hearne Swink, Kannapolis; District VIII, John R. Purser, Charlotte; District IX, R. O. Huffman, Morganton; and District X, Frank Parker, Asheville.

Serving with Alexander in District IV, are the following selection committee members: Graham Poyner, Raleigh; John W. Labouisse, Durham; William Haywood Ruffin, Durham; Malcolm B. Seawell, Chapel Hill; John Church, Henderson.

The counties with their chairmen comprising District IV are: Caswell Clarence L. Pemberton, Yanceyville; Durham, Egbert L. Haywood, Durham; Franklin Chares H. Yarborough Jr., Louisburg; Granville, William M. Hicks, Oxford; Orange, L. J. Phipps, Chapel Hill; Person, F. Kent Burns, Roxboro; Robert G. S. Davis, Henderson; Wake, John V. Hunter III, Raleigh; Warren, Dixon H. Ward, Warrenton.

Nominations for Morehead Awards are to be made to the county committees by the individual schools by Oct. 15. District interviews will be held in January and the final awards made on March 1, 1966.

Di-Phi Senate Supports Dickson

Paul Dickson's decision to continue as student body president received the unanimous support of the Di-Phi Senate during a closed executive session Sunday night.

The Senate passed a resolution which supports Dickson's decision, condemns the University administration's interference in the Dickson matter, and urges student leaders to work with Dickson during the coming year.

Dickson was urged to resign from his office last week by student and University officials and nearly 1500 members of the student body after it was learned he had received an official reprimand for a campus code violation this summer.

The resolution, introduced by Di-Phi Senate president-elect John Harrison, notes that Student Government was created on campus by the Dialectic and Philanthropic Societies in a spirit of cooperation between faculty, administration, and the student body.

"We urgently request the administration," it reads in part, "to cease and refrain from any further interference in this particular question and to work with President Dickson in the fullest spirit of cooperation during the coming year."

The resolution calls on student officials and organizations to "unite in their efforts and begin work now to realize the full potential awaiting the University this year."

Copies of the resolution were sent to Dickson, student and administration officials, and those Student Government leaders who signed the original letter calling for Dickson's resignation.

Harrison's speech in introduction, which was released yesterday, denounced Dickson's partisan critics.

"The smear campaign being waged by various groups and individuals on this campus are only serving to reenforce President Dickson's position and make their own position less tenable.

"There are not, nor should there be, any special rules or extraordinary punishments for the campus code offenses of a student while president," he said.

"The trial was held, the verdict was heard, and the matter is ended."

Meeting Tonight

The Di-Phi Senate will hold its inaugural ceremonies tonight at 7:30 on the top floor of New West.

Campus Radio will be debated, and Student Government Campus Radio Committee Chairman John Stupak will represent the pro-radio forces.

All interested persons are invited to attend and join in debate.

Refreshments will be served.

SP Approves Resolution

The Student Party Sunday night gave a standing ovation in approval of a unanimously enacted Di-Phi Senate resolution supporting Student Body President Paul Dickson's decision to stay in office.

The SP's copy of the resolution was delivered to SP Legislative Floor Leader Don Wilson, who read it to the group.

The Di-Phi resolution called on the University administration and student officials to support Dickson and Student Government during the coming year

The party heard Chairman Frank Hodges outline the Student Party's history on campus and SP members appointed students to fill vacancies in Student Legislature and on party committees.

Appointments to SL were: Bart O'Neil to Men's District I; Alexa Smith to Women's District I; Gail Feik to Women's District VI.

Frank Longest was appointed head of the newly created Student Welfare Committee, and Carl Johnson was chosen to head the Publicity Committee.

The new SP secretariat includes Elaine Carlson, Chairman, Judy Wittacre, and Susan Cannon.

Elections Board

Newly appointed members of the Elections Board of Student Government will meet today at 3 p.m. in Student Government offices.

New appointees include: Irene Allen; John Winborne; William Robertson; Dillon Robertson; Brooks Carey; Winburne King; Glen Nye; Morris McDonald; William Whitaker; and Barbara Wilkins.

Also Bob Newlin; Charles Thompson; Jerry Wagner; Jan Wuehrmann; and Alexa Smith.

Voting Bill For All N.C.

GREENSBORO (AP) — The North Carolina elections board chairman stressed Monday that the 1965 Voting Rights Act applies throughout the state, not merely to the 26 eastern counties specifically affected when the law was implemented.

"The only difference is that the law doesn't apply to you immediately," Chairman Malcolm Seawell told the officials from 35 central counties.

He addressed about 80 persons at this second of three seminars on the new voting law. The first was held Sept. 13 in Wilson. The third will be held next Monday in Asheville.

Seawell said he considers the law unconstitutional, but added: "And act is constitutional until it's declared unconstitutional."

He added: "It's imperative to the State of North Carolina that you obey the new law. We didn't ask for it, but we have to live with it."

To illustrate that the law affects all counties, Seawell cited the section which says no procedures may be used which deny anyone the right to vote.

He noted that if 20 or more residents of a county file bona fide complaints with the U. S. attorney's general office, a hearing on the complaint can be held. And, if necessary, he said, the attorney's general office can file suit to bring the county under the Voting Rights Law.

Payton Resigns As MRC Veep

Robert M. Payton resigned Friday as vice president of the Men's Resident Council because, he said, he has been accused of having conflicting interests and his views differ with other people in the MRC.

Payton turned his resignation in to MRC President Sonny Pepper.

He said he had done his best over the past three years to provide a decent social life for residence hall men.

Payton said he didn't think the MRC's name should be connected with political dealings.

"I find it difficult to carry on my duties as a result of a combination of the foregoing factors," he said.

Electronic Cheating Ring Broken In Greece

ATHENS, Greece, (AP) — The technology of the transistor radio and the old schoolboy art of cribbing have caught up with each other. And a citywide dragnet was spread today to catch operators feeding the answers to university entrance exam questions.

Athens security police said one student was being interrogated after he was caught in an examination classroom with a hidden pocketsize radio receiver. The bigger fish, however, were the transmitters. Police said they have located two and turned full details over to the Ministry of Education.

On the basis of investigations so far, police said the arrangement has been working this way:

A student furnished with a two-way radio sends the questions on the spot to the transmitting station, where experts on various subjects in the annual extrance exams — physics, algebra, history, chemistry and mathematics—are standing by with text books.

The answers to questions are dictated back slowly to the student taking the exam, including how to spell difficult words.

Police did not say what kind of free the student pays for the service, but it was believed to be substantial because success means admission to the university during these days of intense competition for places.

One transmitter was traced after the niece of a Greek politician and polytechnic professor picked up a pirate radio station by chance while turning the dial on her uncle's powerful radio.

Recognizing that the broadcast has to do with university examinations, she called her uncle. He tape-recorded several hours of the broadcast and went to police.

Half a dozen special police vehicles roamed the city eqipped with high power tracking equipment to ferret out the illegal transmitters.

A Weighty Problem

A London fashion expert has challenged the world's scientists to solve a problem even more pressing than how to get to the moon.

"Just take one scientist off the space race," said Judy Innes in the London Daily Mail, "and let him concentrate on the strapless bra."

An Associated Press story says the problem has become urgent because of "the return of the couturiers of Paris to the strapless dress and the current rage for the shake and other more violent dances."

Miss Innes says, "Men on the moon can wait. We need the perfect strapless now."

By asking only scientists to "concentrate on the strapless bra," however, she is obviously overlooking a source of considerable interest in and dedication to the solving of the problem.

The source, naturally, is the college male. We know any number of Carolina men who would gladly pledge their time and talents to "concentrating on the strapless bra" until the solution is in hand.

It Restoreth Our Faith

Our faith in the efficacy of the protest has been restored.

Particularly that normally futile kind of protest — to the Dean of Men's office.

The decision to refund half the $5 car registration fee to the hapless and footsore souls who have been afflicted with T stickers is as surprising as it is welcome.

How refreshing it is to hear Dean of Men William G. Long say, "We've received several legitimate complaints about this and we became convinced they had a point and something should be done about the situation."

"The situation" is that 1,300 students paid $5 to register their cars. However, they happen to live within an arbitrary circle which represents to the good Dean's office a 20-minute walk to campus.

Since there are almost four times as many commuters (those who live more than a 20-minute walk away) as there are parking spaces for them, these semi-commuters were relegated to the ranks of pedestrians.

However, they were paying just as much for the "privilege" of leaving their car at home as the on-campus car owners and commuting students were paying for the chance to play Pot Luck in the Parking Lot.

Other parking permits are just "hunting licenses," as Long calls them, because there are 4,500 cars registered and only 2,100 parking places.

The fact that changes had to be made in the middle of the stream merely emphasizes the desperation and transience of the present set of traffic regulations.

As Long said, "Our whole system is subject to scrutiny and we always welcome suggestions for improvements. Our job is not to harass, but to reduce harassment."

These are problems which hit close to home — personal inconvenience and aching feet. Steps have to be taken now if even worse problems are to be avoided in the future — the near future. True, the ownership of a car at school is a privilege, but it is a luxury which borders on necessity.

Perhaps the most amazing thing in this whole mess is the decision of Long and the Traffic and Safety Committee to heed the cries of "unfair" from the T stickerites.

The cries were justified, but not all just complaints always receive due consideration. Since we seldom overlook the bad news from the Dean of Men's office, we feel obligated to give them a pat on the back now. It might be a long time until the next one.

This refund does not relieve the basic problems of parking, but it makes the system considerably less inequitable. And to those who would like a full refund for T stickers, we say, half a loaf is better than none.

Uncertain University Issues Bring Winter Of Discontent

By ERNEST ROBL
DTH Staff Writer

If this is the autumn of anticipation—a time of uncertainty for a number of issues concerning the University—then this, as one professor recently phrased it, will soon give way to "the winter of our discontent" for this institution.

Throughout the years this University has existed, there has never been a lack of issues, from the major to the trivial, but never before have so many been dissatisfied with so much, so much of the time.

The issues, almost in spite of themselves, are pushing the University to a position of prominence it has always hoped for, but unfortunately for reasons it would rather forget.

This week, a representative of one of the nation's three top news magazines paid a visit to this campus. His itinerary called for a tour of 22 campuses across the country — 22 out of the countless hundreds of college and university campuses that dot the map.

But then, what kind of news has been coming from this campus? Unfortunately, the bad news always travels the fastest and furthest.

Even within a span of only four months, the University has twice made national headlines: one story was that of a brutal murder; the other and perhaps more vague issue continues to be a question of whether or not the University is capable of administering itself.

This week the University again came into the limelight with another story—a question of the integrity of the University, or rather of one of its parts, the Student Government.

Since there are never simple answers to complex questions, the University has, against its will, joined the ranks of the misunderstood. And where understanding is lacking there is disagreement — and where there is disagreement there is discontent.

Where there are issues, there are always speeches and statements. Though these speeches are often eloquent and rousing, they fail to offer that brief revelation — that flash of insight — where a whole unwieldy issue is documented in a few transient words of ordinary conversation.

These words are always there, always audible, but seldom appreciated. Along with all the trivia, they are discarded because no one recognizes their disguised value.

The two elderly ladies had listened quietly as charge after charge was hurled at the University during a recent session of hearings before the Speaker Ban Study Commission. As they walked out of the auditorium later, one remarked to the other, "I didn't know such things really went on over there (at the University)!"

While the leaves are still on the trees, for those both within and without the University, "the winter of discontent" has already begun. And for this kind of winter, the spring that follows is still very, very far behind. It is yet only a hope.

A View From The Hill

By ARMISTEAD MAUPIN, JR.

There is no denying it.

Dean William G. Long singlehandedly performed the snow job of the century when he captivated 2,000 orienting freshman with the gutsiest, earthiest, straightshootingest speech that has rocked Memorial Hall since Hugh Hefner swaggered onto the campus last spring.

And the similarity between the Editor and the Dean of Men does not end there.

As a matter of fact, the no-holds-barred speech proved to be so overwhlemingly effective that the Administration promptly established a special study group to investigate the feasibility of publishing a monthly magazine that would appeal to the sophisticated tastes of the average student. The findings of this study group were so promising that the Chancellor authorized the UNC Press to temporarily suspend publication of the Record and the Carolina Handbook and begin work immediately on Playschool—Entertainment for Men.

Due to the diligence and dedication of Editor Long, the first edition of Playschool will be available at Jeff's within a matter of days. Let's take a brief look at what the magazine has to offer:

—An unabashed examination of the scenes that the censors cut from the Campus Security film of the Great Panty Raid of 1953.

—A dazzling, avant-garde, foreign pictorial on "The Girls of West Cobb."

—A spectacular centerfold featuring a local lass whose proclivities are towards umbrellas, history books, and men with manners—Otelia Connor.

—A hearty masculine guide to the culinary delights of Lenoir Hall, accenting such succulent delicacies as stewed okra, watered eggs, and potatoes with hair.

—A provocative installment of "The Playschool Philosophy" by Editor Long, delving into the Constitutional, sociological, religious, and Freudian justifications for the Durham County Fair.

—A rollicking color cartoon strip featuring "Little Annie Queenie" and the exploits of the YM-YWCA.

—A revealing portrait of "She"—the incomparable Kitty Carmichael.

—A candid interview with Officer Beaumont.

—And a frank session with "The Playschool Adviser," in which Dr. Frank Graham solves intimate problems for prominent campus personalities.

Part I

The New Fraternity

Mr. Powledge, a graduate of the University here, is a reporter for The New York Times.

By FRED POWLEDGE
DTH Editor, 1957-58
From ESQUIRE

Jim Stalarow is twenty-one years old, would be a Junior this fall at the University of Texas if he'd stayed there, has ambitions about being a folk singer, and is disgusted with the way the world is running. Last winter he packed up three changes of clothing and his guitar and hitchhiked the 1,852 miles from Austin to New York.

He got food and clothing everywhere he went because the people he saw were fellow members of the New Student Left, except in one case. That was in Joplin, Missouri, where the cops saw him first. They noticed his curly brown hair, boyish face, guitar, fruitboots and Equality Button, and they incarcerated him on the spot.

The incarceration lasted but a short time, and Jim soon made it to New York, where he walked into an office for a job. There he operated the mimeograph machine, a staple gun, a stencil lettering set, and at times a picket line as a full - time paid activist of the New Student Left, drawing $30 a week. That wasn't much money, but you don't need much when you're an unmarried folk singer with three changes of clothing. When the S.D.S. moved its headquarters to Chicago, he went along, is now a volunteer worker, and expects that he will do organizing on a campus this fall.

Although Jim is not enrolled at the University of Texas anymore, he still thinks of himself as a student. "I don't consider the fact that I'm not in school a reason that I'm not a student," he said during his first days in New York. "I'm a student of life now. It's a lot more serious now, and so am I." He glanced around the S.D.S. office, where male and female activists were scurrying about, getting things in shape for a March on Washington To End the War in Viet Nam. Reams of miemograph paper were being sucked into well-oiled machines.

"I used to be a member of a fraternity," he said, "but I depledged about six weeks later. You get in a fraternity and a fellow says, Look, I'm your brother, lend me a dollar. Here you don't have to say I'm your brother. You might call it a new fraternity."

Brother Stalarow, along with an undetermined but significant number of his fellow students and ex-students, is indeed a member of a new fraternity. The membership is sometimes called the New Student Left, sometimes the New Student Radicals, sometimes (by people who don't quite understand them) Commies or Beatniks or Queers, or all three. The new fraternity has everything the old fraternity had, including:

a) A fraternity house, usually an apartment in a nearby ghetto, where the members can sleep and eat communally.

b) An initiation ceremony, usually held in a public place and attended by large numbers of people and highlighted by large-scale arrests.

c) A set of distinctive pins that may be worn proudly on the sweater and that may be spotted easily by members from other chapters.

d) A "housemother" who is not at all square, Miss Joan Baez.

e) Old grads, who sometimes return to the campus looking paunchy and really fuzzy - headed, and who may be ridiculed behind their backs, but who nevertheless are good for a touch every once in a while, since their consciences bother them.

f) Even motion pictures of the type fraternity men like! There was a flap not long ago at the University of New Mexico when some of the New Student Left decided to show Scorpio Rising and Flaming Creatures. In other campuses, the big drawing card has been a film prepared by the National Liberation Front of Viet Nam, followed by a raiding party of Federal agents.

g) More than anything else, there is a Creed. It is all about democracy, powerlessness, civil rights, peace, automation, the Bomb, and the generally lousy way the country is being run. The creed is the one thing that holds all the elements of the New Fraternity together. Although the New Fraternity in the North is predominantly white and the New Fraternity in the South is predominantly Negro, there is no trouble over chapters having discriminatory clauses. In short, the New Fraternity has none of the disadvantages of the old fraternity and a lot more advantages, including female members.

Like almost everything else that has happened in this country in the past five years, the Student Left owes its existence to the Negro sit-ins. Out of the Greensboro demonstration of February 1, 1960, grew the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, the five-year-old granddaddy of the New Fraternity and the target for most of the current outside criticism. All over the nation, new student groups were formed to serve as affiliates, associates, or fund raisers for S.N.C.C. The activists therein recruited would work from September until June on the campus, "organizing," as they love to call it, around such issues as civil rights and conscription (a hot one at land-grant campuses), and all summer they would repair to places like Albany, Georgia, and McComb, Mississippi, for the on-the-job training. The inevitable happened. Some of the students who had vowed to stay away from the books for one semester stayed away two, four, then forever.

It didn't take long for the students and ex-students from the North to discover that conditions were pretty bad in their own backyards, and to integrate the war on poverty with the civil - rights movement. Then came Berkeley, in the Fall of 1964. It was almost too much. Here was the nation's coolest campus, run by a liberal and unimpeachable credentials, treating its students like IBM cards. The students used what they had learned down South and rebelled; the administrators reacted with slightly more savvy than the sheriff of Dallas County, Alabama, and the revolution became bona fide.

J. Edgar Hoover criticized the revolt in his usual American Legion language; H.U.A.C. investigated it with its usual heavyhanded flatulence; Roy Wilkins worried about it; Whitney Young pooh - poohed it; editorial writers viewed it with alarm; the liberals of another generation (now businessmen and comfortable academicians) shook their heads over it, and the social scientists of another generation started studying it. What more could a college generation ask, especially a college generation whose most familiar reference point was the Silent Generation of the Fifties? It was receiving attention, it was hated by the right people, and it was certain that it was on the right side.

Out of all this ferment grew several student organizations (all of them called student although few of them actually were run by people in school), which currently were trying to peacefully overthrow the country and take it out of the hands of those they called the corrupt politicians, the venal landlords, the military - industrial profiteers, and the cowardly school administrators. Some of these organizations are campus - based; others are community - based. All of them return to the campus from time to time to search for their major nutriment, youth. Says C. Clark Kissinger, the twenty - four - year - old former national secretary of Students for a Democratic Society:

"Most of the activists come out of a student background. We sort of advocate that people get out of school, as a matter of fact. It's not an accident that the word 'student' appears in the names of all our organizations. We're trying to build a movement that's founded on intellectual capabilities . . . built on analysis, and not just slogans, that understands history and can articulate ideas. So the word 'student' crops up, naturally."

New Band Tactics

There's something new on tap with the UNC Marching Tar Heels this Saturday.

The band has expanded into a double company front entrance, due to the increase in size of this year's group.

This larger drill unit will employ a procession drill routine with progression movements.

According to a band representative, the Marching Tar Heels have been toiling in hopes of giving N. C. State's "Thundering Herd" "some tough competition" Saturday.

'Now We Believe..'

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

The college football "experts" didn't expect much from these Carolina Tar Heels.

"Upstarts," they had scoffed when brawny Michigan squeaked past these East-coasters by the margin of a couple of errors on the season's first date.

"Too hot," they had explained, "the heat would've killed any team." But they conveniently neglected to mention that the heat was uniform on both sides of the field.

They didn't even mention UNC-OSU among the big games of the week. They just said scornful things like "Buckeyes scrimmage for Big Ten grind . . .Don't expect too much from the Tar Heels . . . No contest."

One forecaster picked OSU by 14-9, and we silently thanked him for his respect. Others said 21-8, 28-13 . . . and then there was the star-gazer who went 'way out on the limb at 27-0. It was 41-7 three years ago, but the guy should have known better.

Nobody — but nobody — picked Carolina to win. Las Vegas didn't. New York didn't. The wire services didn't. Neither did the local swamis.

At first you sat by your radio in a state of something bordering on disbelief as Kaplan, Malobicky & Co. reversed Ohio State's offense for third-and-16. Next you sprang about three feet into the air, over the coffee table, and almost through the picture window when Chapman thundered down to the five. Then Talbott turned the left corner and you duplicated the feat while your Dad emitted sounds like "son of a gun! . . . how about that!"

What happened after that was just icing. Rich, creamy, smooth icing, and you devoured every particle of it.

Still, the Buckeyes made it close, and there was always the haunting fear of the tide-turning bomb. But that defense — to use OSU Coach Woody Hayes' word — "absorbed" the aggressor. And then Maxie exploded for the clincher. Never has 14-3 looked so good.

This writer was one who hoped but doubted. One who fitted rather snugly into the aforementioned 21-8 or 28-13 category.

Now he believes. Now he says that the Tar Heels' ninth straight victim will be Duke in Durham on November 20.

The Tar Heels rested after their 14-3 upset victory over Ohio State Saturday with a light one hour practice.

Films of the Virginia-Clemson game were reviewed and a general skull session followed.

Wingback Bud Phillips dressed and went through a full practice with the team. Phillips had been recovering from a shoulder separation that he suffered before the season began.

LEFTOVERS FROM OHIO STATE . . . One Ohio sportswriter was overheard trying to explain to a friend this who-are-they North Carolina club's superiority over the Buckeyes.

"After all," he said, "when they got started, they beat Michigan 24-10."

North Carolina sold out its allotment of 1,400 tickets for the game at Columbus. Carolina fans sat in a block almost directly behind the UNC bench but there wasn't a cheerleader there to direct them.

Not even one.

Athletic Director Chuck Erickson told me Monday that he would have been happy to take at least one up on the team's plane but no one asked to go.

What's the matter cheerleaders? Afraid we were going to take a licking or is it that you just don't like football?

Ohio State Coach Woody Hayes, who ranks third among active coaches in his won-loss percentage, talking about what impressed him most about North Carolina: "It was their fast start. They came out there, took the ball away from us and then scored. We didn't exactly expect that."

* * *

Chancellor Paul Sharp made the trip up with the team and the night before the game was called on to say a few words at a party for the press and special guests.

"When I was president at Hiram College (Hiram, Ohio) I never dreamed I'd one day be bringing a team down to play Ohio State."

Of course, that raises another question. As chancellor of the University of North Carolina, did he ever dreeam he'd beat them?

Bob Quincy, UNC's director of sports information who, incidently, makes other school's SIDs rate purely amateur, quipped at that same party:

"We brought 50 men with us on this trip so we would be sure and have enough to finish the game. And the 50th one is a 250 pound tackle who knows no fear. Terror, yes, but no fear."

* * *

The public address announcer gave the Tar Heels one of their most satisfying laughs. Once fullback Will Sander, who carried the bulk of the Buckeye attack against UNC, was piled up at the line of scrimmage by at least four Tar Heels.

And the loudspeakers in Ohio Stadium boomed—"Sander is the ball carrier. He was tackled by — he was tackled!"

On the darkened bus coming back home from a warm reception at Raleigh-Durham airport Carolina players chattered happily among themselves, reliving the highlights of the game, when one of them burst out, "Let's win every game, boys, so we can always be this happy."

And that's an idea I fully endorse.

Harriers Edge Frosh 27-28

Carolina's injury plagued varsity cross country team edged the freshman distance runners 27 to 28 Monday in a three mile run over the freshman course.

Captain Jim Meade paced the varsity runners with a winning time of 15:27, but after that the frosh turned on the steam to give their "elders" a real scare.

Freshman Jim Hotelling finished a strong second followed by the varsity's Bill Bassett. The frosh grabbed the next two places to give them three runners in the top five.

The varsity ran without the services of Trip MacPherson who has a light case of mononucleosis. He will be lost to the team for at least three weeks. Drummond Bell another letterman did not run because of a back injury.

One of the brightest spots of a dim day for the varsity was the performance of junior Charlie Worley. Worley, who had been well back in practice, finished third for the varsity.

The top ten finishers:

Jim Meade (V), Jim Hotelling (F), Bill Bassett (V), Joe Lasich (F), Truitt Goodwin (F), Charlie Worley (V), Tom Greer (F), Fred McCall (V), Mike Williams (V), Eddie Daw (V).

Frosh Footballers Whip State In Season Opener

By RON SHINN
DTH Sports Writer

Freshman football Coach George Barclay is all smiles this week.

In Saturday night's annual Sudan Temple Bowl Game his squad defeated N. C. State's Wolflets 9-0. It was the opening game of the year and began what Barclay hopes will be his second consecutive undefeated season.

Barclay found it impossible to praise this team enough.

"This is a great bunch of boys," he said, "and they did an excellent job."

Canadian import Dick Wesolowski had a lot to do with Carolina's rushing success. The 6-1, 205, halfback from Hamilton, Ontario, gained 107 yards in 24 carries.

"He was a bull in a china closet," Barclay said. "he picked his holes well and really did a great job.

Barclay also heaped praise on quarterback Gayle Bomar. Bomar completed seven passes for 92 yards.

"He had to do less running than he normally would have done because he injured his shoulder on the second play of the game, but he still did a good job," said Barclay.

Barclay also praised guard Mike Smith and center Chip Bradley for their fine jobs on offense.

Refusing to single out anyone on the defensive team, he said, "The whole defense, particularly the secondary, did a tremendous job. They limited N. C. State to only four completions out of 17 passes."

Dickson Outlines New SG Program

By ERNEST ROBL
DTH Staff Writer

Speaking before a group of Ehringhaus residents Monday night, Student Body President Paul Dickson said that the Student Government is considering retaining a lawyer to advise it on legal matters.

Dickson, making a tour of various residence halls, also enumerated programs he wants enacted this year.

Dickson also talked at length about the possibility of establishing a student co-operative to sell books, clothing and other items for reduced prices.

Contending that current prices, both downtown and in campus stores are too high, he mentioned the possibility of Student Government "taking over" the Book Exchange.

A student raised the question of whether or not Student Government could legally operate a business on campus. To this, Dickson replied that it might be necessary for Student Government to incorporate itself, and that this was one of the reasons that the organization wished to hire a lawyer for legal advice.

During a question period following Dickson's informal 20-minute talk, several students asked the student body president about his recent conviction on a Campus Code violation.

"If you don't want me in office," he told his audience, in reply to one question, "you have the right to remove me."

Later, refusing to elaborate further on the matter, Dickson said, "I considered the case closed the day I issued my statement."

Dickson issued a statement Sept. 21, saying that he thought it in the best interest of Student Government not to resign because of the conviction for which he received an official reprimand.

He said that he did not think that the conviction limited his power to carry out his responsibilities to the students and the University. "I think there is no real problem in my relations with the administration," Dickson said.

Other topics brought up by Dickson during his talk included the speaker ban law, a possible shuttle-bus service for the campus and the general image of the University.

Dickson said that a shuttle-bus service for the campus, especially the more outlying areas, is currently under consideration by both the administration and Student Government, but no definite plans have been made so far.

"There's no sense in spending money on something like this," Dickson explained, "until we have a feasible plan."

Dickson said that he thought that the image of the University had been badly damaged by the speaker ban controversy, and urged students to ask their parents to write to the Speaker Ban Commission.

Dickson said that he thought the Speaker Ban Study Commission was set up "not in good faith, by the governor who was stalling for time." However, Dickson said that he felt the commission had acted fairly and that he was confident that the commission would decide in favor of the University.

Terming current criticism of the University "vicious," the student body president said that Student Government would work to the best of its ability to improve the image of the University.

One project Dickson is backing is a 15-minute public relations radio program to be distributed state-wide by Student Government.

Jurors Picked For Rinaldi

HILLSBOROUGH (AP) — District Solicitor Dick Cooper Jr. said Tuesday 96 jurors have been summoned for the second murder trial of former UNC graduate student Frank Rinaldi Oct. 11.

Rinaldi is charged in the slaying of his wife.

Cooper said he plans to confer with State Bureau of Investigation agents and other officers Friday "concerning the evidence we plan to present."

Rinaldi, 35, a former graduate student and part-time English was convicted last Nov. 18 of first degree murder with a recommendation for mercy. This carries an automatic life sentence under North Carolina law.

The North Carolina Supreme Court, in a 5-2 decision, ruled June 20 that Rinaldi was entitled to a new trial.

The high court said certain state evidence introduced at Rinaldi's trial was prejudicial to his case.

Rinaldi's wife, Lucille, 34, was found slain in an apartment in Chapel Hill on Christmas Eve, 1963.

"Anthropo-Medical" Seminars To Start

The first of several medical anthropology seminars are scheduled at the University Oct. 4 and 5, and will be conducted by Professor Arthur J. Rubel of the University of Texas.

"Illness as a Form of Social Communications" will be the topic Oct. 4 at 7:30 p.m. when the seminar meets in the staff room of the Alumni Building.

Charges 'Scandal, Irresponsibility'

By JOHN GREENBACKER
DTH Political Writer

Former student body vice president Don Carson leveled charges of "scandal" and "irresponsibility" against Student Body President Paul Dickson and his administration Monday night at a meeting of the University Party in Gerrard Hall.

Carson said his remarks were meant to "set the record straight" about the UP's role during the aftermath of Dickson's conviction this summer for a campus code violation.

Dickson received an official reprimand from the Men's Council for taking a coed into a closed fraternity house.

In the resulting crisis, student leaders, University administrators and 1,500 students attempted in vain to get Dickson to resign.

"It is regrettable," Carson told the group of nearly 150 "That in order to camouflage their own irresponsibility the members of the opposition party have begun a desperate attack against this party.

"They are charging that we are in collusion with the administration and have given information to the state press," he said.

"I want to tell you of the role played by the University Party in this situation."

Carson said UP leaders had quietly kept counsel with Dickson and his advisors during the early days of the crisis.

According to Carson, when Dickson refused to resign, Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey threatened Dickson with the possible review of his case by the Faculty Review Board.

Carson said Cathey implied Dickson would be thrown out of school by the Board if he didn't resign from the presidency.

Ease Pressure

The UP leaders who had previously asked Dickson to resign then sought ways to ease the administration's pressure, according to Carson.

Carson blasted top Dickson advisors Arthur Hays, Roger Foushee, John Randall and former student body president Mike Lawler for their reaction to the administration's demands.

"It was disgusting to sit there and listen to the hysterical proposals these four made," he said.

Carson said the four advisors, whom he referred to as the "fearsome foursome" of the Student Party, advocated "hiring lawyers, sueing the administration, and even moving Student Government across Franklin Street.

"Mike Lawler, who I understand holds certain tactics used in the Berkeley riots in high regard, told Dickson, 'No course of action you take in this matter could be too radical,' " Carson said.

Intervention

He said the UP leaders intervened for Dickson, spoke in a group to Chancellor Paul Sharp, and got the University to withdraw its threat.

"I can tell you now," Carson said, "that had it not been for the intervention of the leaders of the University Party, the president of the student body would be singing 'I got my troubles, you got yours' to the tune of 'going home to Raeford.'

"I will say to John Randall that if he and the other members of the SP old guard had advised without regard for petty patronage the University would have been spared its latest trip through the journalistic mud of the state's news media."

Open Defiance

Carson criticised SP leaders for suggesting the open defiance of the University administration, which he praised for its support of Student Government in the past.

"Being a student is not a license to gratify every whim, to incite protest or to dictate to the administration," he said.

Attacking the "incompetence and irresponsibility" of the Dickson administration, Carson expressed distress that "the ability and creativeness of men like Bob Wilson are stiffled by an arteriosclerotic administration.

"The present administration is filled with men who have a higher regard for their own twisted philosophies of student autonomy than they do for the good of the University," Carson said.

"The Dickson administration reminds us of a child playing in the driver's seat of a car," he said. "It doesn't matter to the child that the car isn't going anywhere, just so long as he's steering."

Interesting Story

When he heard of Carson's remarks to the UP, Dickson said yesterday, "That's an interesting story."

Student Body Secretary Sherry O'Donnell (SP) said in a statement issued yesterday, "I was most shocked to find Don reversing in his address to his political party the positions he had taken previously in confidence."

She said Carson had taken part in several discussions about the Dickson crisis "in a spirit of non-partisan concern for the University.

"Although this may be politically expedient for Don," she said, "I cannot help but feel that the damage his ill-considered remarks may do Student Government and this University are so great that expediency alone cannot justify them.

"In fact," she said, "I consider Don's statement malicious and indefensible, irresponsible in the extreme.

"Since Don feels the proposals made at these meetings were 'hysterical,' I can only conclude that Don's endorsement of them was made then in a similar state of mind," Miss O'Donnell said.

It Is No Secret

Student Body Vice President Britt Gordon also told the party, "It is no secret to any of you that a deep and serious crisis surrounds your Student Government at this time.

"I stand ready to give all that I have, including subjecting myself to the personal abuse that I will surely receive, in defense of the honor of the University and the integrity of this Student Government," he said.

UP Chairman Jim Hubbard also criticised the current Student Party administration and outlined a program for party progress during the next year.

"This party will never lower itself to the point that its committment to this campus is to criticise or slander," he said.

White Says 'Patience, Restraint' Essential In Solving Ban Problem

State Sen. Tom White of Lenoir County defended the speaker ban law Monday, saying that no solution could be found without "the exercise of patience and restraint."

Addressing the Durham Rotary Club, White called the possible loss of accreditation to state - supported institutions a "veiled threat" and said the thinking of some educators and board members of the UNC board of trustees has switched from rational to emotional.

Psychological Explanation

The chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, a longtime supporter of the ban, used a psychological explanation in pointing out the errors of state educators.

"Psychologists tell us a suggestion that the community is threatened is more potent than a direct statement to that effect," White said.

"When this sort of an idea is introduced indirectly by suggestion, it gradually penetrates the entire mental processes of any person involved and becomes a part of his outlook."

White based his argument on the premise that the possible loss of accreditation is more a "suggestion" than a threat. He said a person must exercise intellectual objectivity and emotional stability when considering the matter of the speaker ban.

"...patience and restraint..."

"The exercise of patience and restraint is essential," he said. "Honest and sincere efforts on the part of administrative officials, educators and legislators are necessary if any improvement in the situation is to be achieved."

The senator could not be reached yesterday to comment on what "improvement in the situation" he was referring to. Before mentioning the speaker ban Monday, however, White outlined how much money was appropriated to education by the General Assembly this year.

He said the legislators in Raleigh do have the best interest of UNC at heart, "despite all efforts of the liberal press to convince the public" otherwise.

White then summed up the controversy as it faced this year's General Assembly. "The trustees of the University appointed a committee," he said.

"The chancellors made pronouncements. Efforts were made to evaluate the chances to repeal or amend the law," he continued.

Threat "Procured"

"In some yet unknown way an alleged threat of loss of accreditation was procured. The liberal press got into the act with aclarity and venomous zeal."

Concerning academic freedom as it applies to the University, White commented, "I do not know what is the accepted definition of academic freedom at the University of North Carolina or at other institutions of higher learning in the state.

"But if the present concept of academic freedom at institutions of higher learning includes as either necessary or advisable a program of having known Communists, other subversives and all kinds of oddball beatniks speak on the campus with the institutions' cloak of respectability draped around their shoulders, then, in my opinion, this concept ought to be revised."

Sen. White added that he would like to know just what the real situation was in regard to the many charges of rampant Communist influences at UNC.

HELLO . . . GM INFORMATION! If you ever call the GM Information Desk to ask for some cute coed's telephone number and you get an answer such as "36-24-33," don't be alarmed! The man at the desk is probably giving some other caller a mailbox combination over another line. DTH photographer Ernest Robl caught GM employee giving out information in such a two-phone conversation here. (We have to admit, the topic wasn't quite as interesting as the one we described.)

Town Of Chapel Hill Will Get In On The Towing Act

As if the parking problem wasn't bad enough. The town of Chapel Hill is now stepping into action to free itself from the exhausting headache.

The Board of Aldermen Monday approved an ordinance giving police authority to tow away and impound improperly parked cars at the owner's expense.

Police asked for more detailed authority to deal with the cramped parking situation after University students returned to the campus several weeks ago.

Traffic congestion has been on the increase every year, and this year the problem has become critical.

New restrictions by the administration have forced many students to park their cars off campus.

The police request dealth with the parking problem along E. Franklin St., which was converted to four lanes this year.

Town Manager Robert Peck said there have been no accidents so far. But he warned that police have reported several close calls when cars were parked in the Franklin St. traffic lanes.

The towing arrangement established by the town will be similar to the one used by the University.

The University, using a new parking system this year, has a towing arrangement with several wrecker services here.

In other action Peck told the board he has received 65 replies from 154 bond holders who financed the town parking lot on Rosemary St., concerning a plan to convert the bonds in order to extend the lot.

At its last meeting the board adopted a plan by New York bond attorneys to recall all 3 per cent revenue bonds sold to finance the lot and to issue 2.25 per cent revenue bonds to finance the new expansion.

Eleven bond owners, holding $5.500 worth of bonds, said they would not go along with the plan. Peck said 54 holders agreed.

Further action was pending the receipt of more replies.

The board also urged the police department to enforce crosswalk regulation in the downtown area.

It transferred $980 to the police department to purchase an up-to-date radar speed check device to replace the four-year-old one now in use.

Several recommendations by the police department concerning increased downtown parking space for two-wheeled vehicles were adopted.

The board accepted a low bid of $46,780 by Muirhead Construction Co. of Durham for several street projects.

It also voted to close an unnamed street between Burlage Dr. and Bolin Creek.

The area is scheduled to be developed as a "medi-center."

Toronto Chorus Will Perform Here Tonight

The University of Toronto Chorus will appear in Hill Hall at 8 p.m. tonight as part of the Graham Memorial entertainment series.

The performance is free to the public.

Termed "one of the finest musical organizations in Toronto and the province," the group has distinguished itself in every type of choral music, but especially for its precision and sensitivity in the interpretation of 16th century a capella works.

The all-varsity mixed chorus is on a tour of American universities, which began this week and will run through the first week in October.

They arrived in New York City in mid-September and performed at the Lincoln Center for Performing Arts during the International University Choral Festival.

It Works Both Ways

He didn't intend it that way, but Sen. Tom White struck pretty close to home Monday when he said, "When this sort of idea is introduced indirectly by suggestion, it gradually penetrates the entire mental processes of any person involved and becomes a part of his outlook."

The chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee — and new University trustee — was telling a Durham civic club that talk about our schools losing accreditation because of the speaker ban law is a "veiled threat."

He said educators and trustees have quit being rational and now are emotional about the ban because of insecurity about accreditation.

"Psychologists tell us a suggestion that the community is threatened is more potent than a direct statement to that effect," he said.

A very perceptive point. But obviously White did not consider the possibility that his argument, if it is true in this context, is also true in all others.

The very passage of the speaker ban law itself is just as much a "suggestion" that our schools are in grave danger of being subverted by Communists and their sympathizers as the threat of loss of accreditation "suggests" our school system is in real academic trouble.

Using White's own reasoning, the General Assembly's passage of the law has contributed to the general undermining of confidence in the ability of the University to handle its own affairs. Once the "idea was introduced by suggestion," it soon "penetrated the entire mental processes" of many people.

If the suggestion that we ought to be worried about losing the accredited status of our schools is at last penetrating some mental processes, thank God.

Help Draft Yourself?

The State Board of Health is planning to set up a counseling service for men rejected by the Selective Service as unfit.

We predict the service will be notably unsuccessful. It may be unpatriotic, but it is an undisputed fact that most men turned away from the draft will not go to any special pains to lift themselves up to the minimum standards of acceptance.

The plan, as outlined by the Health Department, is to have interviewers at the state's draftee examining stations in Raleigh and Charlotte to "confer" with those rejected for physical shortcomings.

Recommended corrective treatment would be given by a home-county physician — at the expense of the rejected draftee.

Those turned down by the Selective Service for mental reasons would be interviewed by representatives of the Department of Labor. Apparently they would be "rehabilitated" and made into useful citizens.

With its shamefully high percentage of rejected draftees, North Carolina needs to take steps to lower the number of its men who are sub-par, physically or mentally.

But to expect a man to voluntarily go to trouble and expense, and thereby virtually assure himself that he will be inducted, is utter naivete.

Few will be swayed by the argument that "this is something which should be done for the good of the state." When a fellow is told to "go see this doctor and he'll take care of you," the inference is that once his problems have been corrected he will most likely be drafted. No matter what his trouble, it is unlikely the man will do much about it.

As long as the corrective measures are voluntary this rather hopeless situation will exist.

No one, not even the Negro, understands the Negro.

Martin Luther King does not understand him. President Johnson doesn't even know him. The Los Angeles riots prove the point. Neither of these two men have been able to comprehend the problem.

Perhaps there was one man who came close to knowing the Negro. At least John Kennedy got along with him. The period between the Eisenhower and Johnson administrations was a relatively calm interlude between two flaring times.

Kennedy believed in one step and then another. He was putting down a foundation for the Negro to build on. It would have taken a few years before the Negro could have walked in the front door, but at least the steps were being taken.

It is hard to say what Eisenhower was doing for the Negro. All he seemed to accomplish was a basement that caved in every so often.

Johnson has built the Negro's house. However, he made a minor mistake. The front door is locked shut; it can only be battered down. Each brick that is laid, each nail that is driven must be laid flat and driven straight. Quality is far more important than quantity.

Negroes and whites cannot be compromised; both must be satisfied. It is a perplexing problem and one that requires the skills of a perfectionist.

Perhaps we forget that neither side is united. We have Negroes and whites fighting against Negores and whites. On the one side you find the white Negro sympathizer working with such organizations as CORE and the NAACP. And on the opposing side, as ridiculous as it may sound, you have the Klan and the Black Moslems. Their goals aren't the same, but in essence they are working against the others.

What we have then are many diversified groups. Each has its own way of thinking and process of implimentation.

The Negroes in the so-called Watts ghetto are one of these groups. Why did they kill, burn and generally make war on the city of Los Angeles?

Police brutality is an easy, but very foolish answer. It just isn't so.

President Johnson denounced the riots saying: "A rioter with a Melotov cocktail in his hands is not fighting for civil rights any more than a Klansman with a sheet on his back and a mask on his face. They are both more or less what the law declares them: lawbreakers, destroyers of constitutional rights and liberties, and would ultimately destroy a free America. And they must be exposed and dealt with."

Were the Negroes rioting against the conditions under which they live? It is hard to believe, Los Angeles was known as a good city for Negroes.

One Negro said that the rioters were rebelling against themselves, or rather the false image of themselves that they want to destroy. If this is correct, then the Negro only proved what he was trying to disprove.

Right whites have attempted to lay the blame on the shiftlessness of the Negro. But these were people who have jobs and are making a fairly good living.

And so we are left with only one answer to the problem. And yet, it is only half the answer.

It is a lack of understanding. And understanding between men must come through education. It is the basic thing both white and black must learn before the door will open, unforced. The knock and the opening must be through understanding.

And if not, the knock will be a battering. And if not, there will be no one at home.

Men Swamped By Schroeder

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The city dump has nothing on Schroeder Swamp except perhaps its location. Schroeder Swamp lies between the north and east wings of towering Morrison Residence Hall. Schroeder Swamp was born as a result of poor drainage, recent rains (August) ,and the lack of any landscaping. Tracks left by construction equipment in the thick, gluey clay have been filled with water since construction ceased in August evidenced by the infinite number of mosquito larva which infest these cesspools. Broken bottles and bricks, Budweiser and Pabst cans, wood chips, wire, paper bags, old Daily Tar Heels, paper airplanes, decaying banana peels, old cigarette packs, empty ice cream buckets which served as coolers during some recent private party on one of the upper floors and numerous paper cups have blended together to form the illusion of a garbage dump in our beautiful swamp. One overturned trash can amidst this rubbish has taken on the characteristics of a defeated soldier in the war against pollution. An airplane, once a Daily Tar Heel, has crash landed in this infested area and is slowly decaying. In the center of Schroeder Swamp stands a sign as a warning to all those who might venture too near its borders — DANGER, QUICKSAND!

Part II

The New Fraternity

Mr. Powledge, a graduate of the University here, is a reporter for The Nev York Times.

By FRED POWLEDGE
DTH Editor, 1957-58
From ESQUIRE

The organization that has the least to do with the campus is the one that receives the most respect from the other Brothers and Sisters: The Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee. S.N.C.C., the motivating force behind most of the change in the South, has grown from a tiny bunch of malcontents with a large sense of humor in 1960 to a large bunch of malcontents with not much of a sense of humor in 1965. The laughs are few because the virulence of the attacks on S.N.C.C. has increased to the point where they would make Norman Vincent Peale bitter. S.N.C.C. has been exposed to some of its most insincere politicians, some of its scaredest white liberals, and some of its most jealous Negro leaders.

After S.N.C.C. comes a long list of student and crypto-student organizations that are proud of the designation "radical." They view Hubert Humphrey and the A.D.A. as funny moderates and joke about the Communist Party, U.S.A., as a right-wing outfit. The list includes:

Students for a Democratic Society, an organization primarily of Northern whites whose most dramatic work is done in the ghettoes, through "community organizing" and really living with poor folks, but who also find the time to write intellectually stimulating essays about all this.

The W.E.B. DuBois Clubs of America got started in San Francisco, where anything can get started; it would be relatively unknown except for the fact that J. Edgar Hoover said it had been "spawned" by the Communist Party to "draw blood for the vampire which is international communism." A lot of DuBois people freely refer to themselves as Marxists. Their twenty - six - year - old national president, Phil Davis, is the son of a stockbroker from Ferndale, Michigan, and an ex-fraternity man who now calls himself a Socialist.

The Northern Student Movement, a Harlem - based organization, started out in 1962 with tutorial projects in Northern cities and rarely talks much about civil rights anymore. Poverty is the big worry here.

The Progressive Labor Movement, commonly referred to as the Chinese Communist wing of the Student Left, issues tracts in the same heavy, boring style that has convinced generations of articulate Americans that communism was not for them.

Others: The Southern Student Organizing Committee, a recent entry, apparently is designed to represent some of the more moderate student activists on the white campuses. And there is a whole spectrum of organizations with "socialist" in their names that probably will become full-fledged members of the New Fraternity if and when they can solve their ideological disputes and determine what they want their identities to be. Much of their hangup comes from their history; the Socialist youth organizations were almost universally the offspring of Socialist adult organizations, and it is taking some time to break the cord and become independently militant.

There are a few characteristics that all of the members of the New Fraternity have in common. For one thing, they are not scared of anything, anyone, or any institution. They have been successful, by and large, in many of their endeavors, and they are, after all, possessed of the revolutionary's sense of mission. They have become almost painfully self - critical; their criticism of their colleagues on the Left is scandalous. An S.N.C.C. "retreat" last spring, scheduled to last one weekend at an abandoned Negro seminary in Atlanta, went into such intensive self - analysis that it lasted a week. When S.D.S. starts a community - organizing project, its workers live communally and without salary, and the leadership changes hands every week or so. When the New Fraternities organize conferences, they invite the standard speakers from the outside world, but they are often a viciously critical jury. ("It's all a matter of who we identify with, man," said one young role player at a recent meeting.)

Joan Baez, the "housemother" who helped out with the Berkeley uprising and who has done no mean job of telling power structures all over what they could go do with themselves, attended a "Democracy on the Campus" conference last spring at the Christian Association of the University of Pennsylvania. Now, Miss Baez is practically a deity among student radicals. She is the Glenn Miller of this war. But one of the rules of the game is that everything and everyone is fair game. So when Miss Baez commented that there was too much talk about strategy, there were a few snorts from some people at the rear of the room. Then she said: "Let the word 'love' be used a little more freely in this room. We start talking about tactics and my mind wanders. We have to talk about love." A young man in the rear of the room caught the eye of a friend and went through the motions of shoveling something, the universal gesture for "bull."

Later, when Miss Baez was prevailed upon to sing a song or two, even though she had not brought her guitar, another young man rose and said: "I think we've brought up some serious problems here today and I don't think singing will do anything for them." Miss Baez, with love in her voice, said, "I think you're quite wrong," sang We Shall Overcome, and sat down.

Another characteristic of the New Fraternity is that it really is a fraternity. An activist can go from Meridian to Berkeley in his white Levis, his beard, his fruitboots, and his Equality Button, and be accepted without question as a member of the Order. Jeffrey Shero, a twenty - two - year - old organizer from the South, commented on this: "It's a set of values, I suppose. Anywhere I go in this country I know there're people who have the same sets of values I have. I can go anywhere and know that I can find a place to eat and sleep, because there are people there who understand me. Just any sort of tenuous connection, and I've got a place to stay. We can talk frankly about anything.

"Charlie here" (he motioned toward Charles M. Smith, a young man who had introduced himself as a Trotskyite and then seemed disappointed when his visitor did not recoil in shock) "and I disagree politically, but we can work together. We both operate on the idea of trust and goodwill. There's practically nobody in this movement that I don't have a great deal of trust in."

This camaraderie, especially in a fraternity that admits female members, is no doubt responsible for much of the current criticism that the movement is immoral and orgiastic. Unscientific but intensive surveying of the members of the movement indicates that they probably go to bed together as often as members of previous generations, even as often as members of, say, "Young Americans for Freedom, but that they are less guilty about it afterward.

Still another characteristic: They don't seem to hate. Whether this is because they have not yet been exposed to military training (few of the student radicals have served or will serve in the military, thanks to their status as C.O.'s or as perpetual students, their refusal to sign loyalty oaths, or their police records), or whether this is an unexplored phenomenon that has something to do with the Bomb, the fact remains that they are not filled with hatred of the Opposition. Yet. Helen Garvey, who runs the publications end of S.D.S.'s operation, recalled that at the 1964 convention of the National Student Association (a hypothetically neutral organization in the contest between Left and Right), the Y .A. F.'s mimeograph machine broke down "and we let them use ours."

"Hell," said Jim Stalarow, "back at Texas when we'd demonstrate we'd call the Other Side and let them know, and they'd counterdemonstrate. Made it more fun."

Mysteries Abound In Past And Present At Carolina

By ANDY MYERS
DTH Staff Writer

"Will Scour Woods for Moorer's Body," exclaims a Daily Tar Heel dispatch, dated Tuesday, September 22, 1930.

"Morgan P. Moorer, a member of the freshman class, disappeared during the spring quarter of last year," the news story says.

Times certainly have changed at Carolina in the past few decades — or have they? Campus mysteries were just as common 35 years ago as they are today.

The missing freshman story concludes, "For days fraternity brothers and friends searched the neighboring territory, fearing that the boy had committed suicide, but hoping that he was still alive."

Although private detectives and University students combed Chapel Hill for weeks, the boy was never found, and his death is still a mystery.

The next day, September 23 the DTH shocked its readers with the headline: "Co-eds Repulse Blond Intruder." In the following story some of the free - wheeling reporting would have put Ian Fleming and his .007 thrillers to shame.

"Inmates of Spencer Hall were rudely awakened from their slumbers last night when a lone member of that species commonly referred to as "male" defied convention and arrest, climbed to the back porch of the dorm and indulged in a little eavesdropping and detection on his own hook."

The exciting tale continues: "The fair damsels were startled — but not frightened — oh no, a mere male cannot frighten a Carolina co-ed, and it is to be confessed that the main thing the girls remember is the fact that the intruder was a blond."

After a lengthy description of the incident, our Tar Heel reporter tells how officer William Blake of the Chapel Hill police investigated.

"A few well ordered screams brought a sturdy representative of the law and an inquiry that would shame Scotland Yard resulted.

" 'Yes,' one told officer Blake who was summoned to the scene in a more or less state of dishabille, 'I went to the window and gazed right into his piercing eyes and blond curly hair.'

" 'And what did you do then?' The law spoke hitching his belt, with a gesture that said 'justice will triumph.' " The story ends with a prediction that no fingerprints would be found.

September 22, 1935 presented Carolina students with a mystery of a different sort. Three students were appointed to investigate the closing of Swain Hall, the college eating hall until that time.

Tsey wese to report on "the present eating conditions in the village (town), and make a survey of food at State College and Duke University in order to present a comparative report on all three institutions."

Perhaps the most puzzling mystery of all appeared in the September 27 issue of the 1947 DTH. That was how a new ruling was to be enforced concerning visitation hours at fraternities. A DTH story read:

"Until the new coed visitation agreement goes into effect, no coeds may visit the property or premises of any fraternity on campus. This rule applies to new and old coeds and graduate students alike . . ."

The story states that the ruling is temporary but until a code is worked out, "the interfraternity council will have complete charge of the program, and they will enforce and administer the visitation agreement."

Mysteries will never cease at Carolina.

Yack Pictures

Picture - taking for the 1965-66 Yackety Yack will continue according to schedule through Oct. 15.

If you are a senior, fourth-year medical student or freshman whose name begins with a letter from A through J . . . you're late!

Otherwise, here is when you go:

FRESHMEN: K-O Sept. 29; P-T Sept. 30; U-Z Oct. 1.

SOPHOMORES: A-E Oct. 4; F-J Oct. 5; K-O Oct. 6; P-T Oct. 7; U-Z Oct. 9.

JUNIORS: A-E Oct. 11; F-J Oct. 12; K-O Oct. 13; P-T Oct. 14; U-Z Oct. 15.

Date and time for students in the School of Pharmacy will be announced by the end of this week.

Odds 'N Ends

By Laws Called For

The presidents of all campus organizations receiving money from Student Government are asked to submit a copy of their by-laws to the Rules Committee of Student Legislature by not later than Oct. 5.

The committee must approve of the by-laws before Student Government money is released.

CORE Scholarship

The Chapel Hill Freedom Committee, the local chapter of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), announced yesterday its first scholarship presentation to a local student.

Thomas Bynum, was presented $85 by the group as the first of a number of scholarships to be offered.

The Freedom Committee's scholarship fund was started in the name of Dr. Albert Amon, a UNC psychology professor, who worked with the organization.

WHC Interviews

Interviews will be held for the Women's Honor Council today from 4 to 5 p.m. and tomorrow from 1 to 2:30 p.m. in the Council Room, second floor, GM.

Seats are open on the council from all women's residential districts.

All interested women should sign up for interviews at the GM Information Desk.

Appointments to the council will be made by Student Body President Paul Dickson tomorrow.

Auto Towing

The Traffic Office wasn't bluffing about the towing of illegally-parked cars.

Assistant to the Dean of Men Robert Kepnar said yesterday that six cars have been removed to the storage ground so far.

However, he said, the new parking system seems to be working out very well.

According to Campus Security Chief Arthur Beaumont, campus parking has been less a problem this fall than in any recent school year.

DU's Get Award

The UNC Chapter of Delta Upsilon received the Directors' Award for Excellence at the 131st leadership Conference and Convention of the fraternity recently.

The award is made annually to chapters on campuses with 14 or more fraternities.

Campus Calendar

All Campus Calendar items must be submitted in person at the DTH offices in GM by 2 p.m. the day before the desired publication date (by 10 a.m. Saturday for Sunday's DTH). Lost and Found notices will be run on Tuesdays and Saturdays only.

TODAY

The first meeting of the U.N.C. Public Health Student Wives Club will meet at 8 p.m. on the second floor of the Public Health Building. Dr. Flash, Assistant Dean of the School of Public Health, will give a brief talk followed by a get-acquainted hour when refreshments will be served. Wives of the Dean, Assistant Deans and Department heads of the School of Public Health are invited.

The Bureau of Internal Affairs will meet in the Woodhouse Room from 3-4 p.m.

U.N.C. Physics Colloquium, 4 p.m. in room 215 Phillips Hall. Willis E. Lamb from Yale University will speak on "Measurement in Quantum Mechanics." Tea and coffee will be served one half hour before the talk in the Lounge, room 277 Phillips Hall.

Student Athletic Council will meet at 7 p.m. in the Grail Room.

International Students board will meet at 7 p.m. upstairs in the Y.

Graham Memorial interviews are being held this week. Positions are still open in tournaments, drama, current affairs, social, publicity, music and films committee. Sign up at G.M. Information desk.

The UNC Tutorial Project will hold registration for this year's program today. All those interested in tutoring elementary or high school children are invited to pick up a registration form in Y-Court.

Interviews for the Toronto Exchange will be held in Roland Parker 1 and 2 from 3-5:30 p.m. Interested persons should obtain an application from the GM desk.

Applications for the United Nations Seminar trip to New York during the Thanksgiving holidays may be picked up in room 106 in the Y or in the secretary's office at the Y.

The Collegiate Council for the United Nations will meet this evening at 7 p.m. in front of the Y.

Refunds for the tickets to the Otis Redding Show will be given out today in Y-Court from 1-3 p.m. You must have your ticket stubs.

THURSDAY

NAACP meeting in 205 Alumni, at 7:30. All interested persons are invited to attend.

UNC Young Republicans meeting for all members and those interested in membership, at 8 p.m. in Roland Parker 1 and 2.

PROMPT TREATMENT

"Strep" infections need not lead to rheumatic fever if they are treated promptly and thoroughly with penicillin or other antibiotics, the North Carolina Heart Association emphasizes. If every recognizable strep infection were promptly and adequately treated, rheumatic fever could be virtually wiped out in a generation.

Our AVERAGE Student Reads 4.7 Times Faster Than His Starting Speed
WITH EQUAL OR BETTER COMPREHENSION
The internationally famous EVELYN WOOD Reading Dynamics Institute
INVITES YOU TO ATTEND A FREE DEMONSTRATION OF THIS UNIQUE METHOD
At The Durham High School on Duke St., Wed., Sept. 29 at 8 p.m.

Where you will:
- See an amazing documented film about Reading Dynamics.
- Learn how Reading Dynamics can help you to faster reading, improved comprehension, greater retention.
- See a live demonstration by a Duke student.

HOW DID IT START?
Eighteen years ago Mrs. Wood made a startling discovery that led to the founding of Reading Dynamics. While working toward her masters degree, she handed a term paper to a professor and watched him read the 80 pages at 6,000 words per minute—with outstanding recall and comprehension.
Determined to find the secret behind such rapid reading, she spent the next two years tracking down 50 people who could read from 1,500 to 6,000 words per minute. She studied their techniques, taught herself to read at these faster rates. Now, after years of testing, you can benefit from this great discovery.

IS IT SIMPLY A PROMOTION STUNT?
Results have been reported in TIME, NEWSWEEK, BUSINESS WEEK, and ESQUIRE. Demonstrators have appeared on television with Jack Paar, Garry Moore and Art Linkletter. Over 100,000 people have taken the Reading Dynamics course, both in the U. S. and abroad. Some of their comments are reprinted here:
Senator William Proxmire, Wisconsin—"I must say that this was one of the most useful educational experiences I've ever had. It certainly compares favorably with the experiences I've had at Yale and Harvard."
GARY HEMRIC, BURLINGTON, N. C.—"Evelyn Wood Reading Dynamics is the most valuable single asset I have received in education. With it, I have increased my reading speed from 338 to an average of over 2,680 words per minute, and have read at over 5,000 W.P.M. Moreover, with this speed increase, my comprehension has not suffered at all. My total impression of a book is much clearer, and recall of details is as easy if I had read it word for word.
"Through Reading Dynamics, new worlds in books have been opened to me, and I have been relieved of the drudgery that I experienced with normal reading. Evelyn Wood Reading Dynamics is a revolutionary concept in educational progress and I am grateful for having been able to experience this dramatic innovation."
SENATOR HERMAN TALMADGE, GEORGIA—"It is my opinion that if these techniques were instituted in the public and private schools of our country, it would be the greatest single step we could take in educational progress."
BEN E. JORDAN, JR., VICE-PRES., SELLERS MFG. CO., SAXAPAHAW, N.C.—"I am very pleased with the fact that my reading increased about five times, but I am even more pleased that my comprehension improved from 65% to 95% at the faster rate."
SENATOR STUART SYMINGTON, MISSOURI—"I can now read most materials at speeds above 3,000 words per minute and technical material in the 2,000 word per minute range."
VIRGINIA HARRIS MILLER, LIBRARIAN, CHARLOTTE AND GREENSBORO, N.C.—"It is well worth the time and money of anyone who reads for business or pleasure. I only wish it had been available when I was in school."
JIM KAIGHIN, DURHAM, N.C.—I feel the Reading Dynamics course gets right to the heart of the problem of reading. Not only does it increase speed and comprehension, but gives an appreciation of the finer books and material.
ALAN W. ECKERT, DURHAM, N.C.—A reading speed of over 2,000 words per minute is enabling me finally to read the vast quantity of material I feel I should read. I am going to try these techniques on cases in Law School, and of course in all my other reading.

HOW IS IT DIFFERENT FROM OTHER COURSES?
No machines are used. You learn, instead, to use your hand as a pacer—a tool you always have with you.
Conventional rapid reading courses aspire to 450-600 words per minute. Most Reading Dynamics graduates can read between 1,000 and 3,000 words per minute, and many go even higher.

GUARANTEE
We will guarantee to increase the reading efficiency of each student by AT LEAST 3 times with equal or better comprehension. We will refund the entire tuition of any student who does not obtain at least this triple of his reading efficiency as measured by the beginning and ending tests. This refund is conditioned upon the student's having attended all of the required classes or having made up missed sessions with the teacher. He also must have practiced the required number of hours, following the assignments as outlined by the teacher. The average student may expect 5 times increase in reading speed, and an improvement in comprehension and recall.
Any student who must withdraw from the course for any reason may re-enter any subsequent courses at any future time, at no additional cost.

A 10-WEEKS READING DYNAMICS COURSE WILL BE HELD AT THE DURHAM HIGH SCHOOL ON DUKE ST. THERE WILL BE ONE 2-HOUR SESSION EACH WEDNESDAY FOR 10-WEEKS BEGINNING WEDNESDAY OCT. 6 AND ENDING DEC. 8.

Class Time: 7:30-9:30 p.m.
Registration Begins at 7 p.m.

"Let's forget Ohio State and get to work" is UNC coach Jim Hickey's plan for his shocking Tar Heels.

"We played probably our greatest game last Saturday against Ohio State," said Hickey at his Tuesday press conference, "but that is over and forgotten."

The Virginia Cavaliers who visit Kenan Stadium this Saturday are the problem at hand.

"We're terribly concerned with Virginia," said Hickey. "They've lost two close games to Duke and Clemson, but they are the same team that was rated so highly in the pre-season polls.

"Actually," he said, "those first two losses are deceiving. They have been flying up and down the field. They just haven't scored as much as they should.

"They'll be hard to stop," he continued. "Against Ohio State it was a matter of getting your hat on tight. But with Virginia, you can never be sure."

Hickey had praise for Virginia's triple - threat quarterback Bob Davis.

"Davis beat the daylights out of us last year," he said. "He hasn't played as well this year as he has in the past, but he still goes off the corners better than any quarterback I have seen."

Virginia is the big one for the Tar Heels but Hickey could not completely quench the fire from last Saturday's dumping of Ohio State.

"It was one of the few times that I have felt we played a great game and then had my feelings confirmed by the game movies.

"We thought we played well against Michigan," he said, "but the game films pointed out some mistakes we hadn't seen."

Quality was the big difference between the Michigan and Ohio State games.

"We had good efforts in both games," said Hickey, "but we eliminated quite a few mistakes against Ohio State."

The entire team played a fine game according to Hickey. "It's hard to single out any one individual," he said. "The line did an outstanding job — so did the linebackers. They passed on us a little but they never could shake loose for that long gain. Technically, it was the best game we have played in a long time.

"But I can't help but feel that we are behind in the conference race," he said. "We haven't lost a conference game of course, but we haven't won one either."

Chief scout Emmett Cheek confirmed Hickey's concern over Virginia.

"Virginia has looked impressive," said Cheek, "even though they have lost both of their games.

"They were in the Duke game until the last quarter and they completely dominated the Clemson game for the entire first half.

"Their quarterback Bob Davis is one of the finest athletes I have ever seen," said Cheek. "He can scramble with the best of them.

"While Davis scrambles," continued Cheek, "he can jump and throw, run and throw and stop and throw.

"Of course Davis isn't the only good quarterback Virginia has," said Cheek. "This boy Hodges looked better than Davis. He would probably start for several clubs in."

Top Ten

The Texas Longhorns nosed out Purdue and Nebraska for the top spot in this week's AP collegiate football poll.

Texas collected 15 first - place votes, Purdue 14, and Nebraska 13.

UNC, Duke and Maryland were the only ACC clubs receiving votes.

"The hardest way to win a national championship," said Texas coach Darrell Royal, "is to get the top spot early in the season.

"You have to play under the pressure all year," he said.

"It's just too early to start talking about polls."

"BONES" McKINNEY

Bones Quits From Illness

WINSTON - SALEM — Horace "Bones" McKinney announced his resignation today as head basketball coach at Wake Forest, saying that "my health at this time simply makes it impossible for me to continue as coach."

Dr. Gene Hooks, athletic director, said that McKinney's assistant, Jack Murdock, would be named acting coach.

The 46 - year - old McKinney had been head coach at Wake Forest for eight years. During that time, Wake won 122 games and lost 94. In the last six years, the Deacons have won 106 and lost only 47.

McKinney's teams went to the finals of the ACC basketball tournament five straight years between 1960 and 1964. The Deacons won the conference title in 1961 and 1962. The 1962 team, led by All America Len Chappell, went to the semi-finals of the NCAA tournament before losing to Ohio State.

Murdock ranks as one of Wake Forest's all - time basketball greats. The Raleigh native was a three year varsity regular, graduating in 1957. A guard, he started in 83 consecutive games at Wake Forest and had a varsity scoring average of 14.9 points per game.

Murdock will be only Wake Forest's third head coach in 31 years. Murray Greason served 23 years as head coach prior to McKinney.

The Daily Tar Heel SPORTS

A Letter To The Team

Dear Carolina football Players:

You fellows were born as a team that hot day against Michigan and then last week against Ohio State you showed 'em all just how good you could be.

The game was Big Time — a "prestige and currency" affair — and you proved that you belonged. Right there in the middle of Big Time.

Your offense clicked for 14 points and your defense met Buckeye rush after determined rush and refused to break. Time after time Ohio State headed goalward but you met their backs with tackles that jarred the very foundations of their football tradition.

A lot of people have wondered why.

Didn't you read the papers? Didn't you listen to people talk? Didn't you remember the licking you took in 1962? Or was it that you did remember...

John Kilgo, Charlotte News' columnist, has gone out on a limb and said Saturday's win wasn't an upset. We are inclined to join on that limb.

Except for one thing.

We heard a player — and let us tell you, he played one hell of a ball game Saturday — say half in jest, "Well, it's back to the little league. We play Virginia next, don't we."

Tar Heels, if you ever start to take that sort of idea seriously, you are going to be in trouble.

Most of the 80,000 who saw you play last week considered you "little league." But you showed them, didn't you. "Just a mild scrimmage for the Buckeyes," they said. But you exposed that "Little league" idea for what it was — a myth.

Now the shoe is on Virginia's foot, or N. C. State's the following Saturday, or Maryland, or Wake Forest, and so on. You proved you weren't little league. Virginia will be out to do the same.

You showed us courage against Michigan, Tar Heels. You showed us a great ball club against Ohio State. Now show us class.

Show us a team Saturday with enough pride to go all out.

Baseball Players Battle For Starting Positions

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

From observation and a conversation with Coach Walter Rabb, it seems that there are building up on the baseball club a couple of close battles for the positions that must be filled next spring.

For instance, the Tar Heel squad is in the enviable position of having two fine catchers in John Shaw and Tom Robbins. Also, Charlie Thomas and Butch Watts are performing neck-and-neck at second base, and third base looks like a duel between Lee Sawyer and Rodney Thompson.

Rabb indicated pleasure at the showing of Wingate College shortstop transfer Nolan Leonard, and Logan White is a fine-looking soph outfield prospect.

Bill Estes, a Michigan boy, is back after a summer of baseball in Detroit where he improved his defense

Along the frosh line, several boys from the Charlotte Post 9 team which won the American Legion World Series last summer are among the standouts.

One of them, right-handed pitcher Garry Hill, ranks as one of the top hill prospects in the South. Third baseman Ronnie Lemmons and catcher Skippy Hull are also held in high esteem by the baseball coaching fraternity.

Other freshmen with outstanding prep and summer league credentials are Joe Swaim of Durham and Ron Bevacqua from Raleigh.

Rabb wishes to thank male students who have cooperated by staying off the new baseball field.

Intramural Results

By BILL HASS
DTH Sports Writer

Intramural tag football got off to a rousing start in the residence hall and fraternity leagues on Monday and Tuesday.

On Monday the Mangum Mugs rolled over the Ruffin Rascals 61 - 0. J. R. Simpson led the touchdown parade with two scores and one each was added by F.C. Pierce, R. E. Nesbitt, W. A. Holland, Joe Dunn, Sam Hardison, R. L. Carter and C.L. Conner.

Another Ruffin team, the Rebels, fared better as they whipped the Manly Riverrats, 41-0. Charles Markland and Howard Hudson paced the Rebels with two touchdowns each, while Norman Leafe and Charles Rouzer each scored one.

In an intra-dorm battle, the Parker Pack edged the Parker Fugitives, 24-18. Joe Rhyne, Sam Howe and Charles Warren scored TD's for the Pack and Alan Thursby, John Shaw and Wayne Killian tallied for the Fugitives. The winning margin for the Pack came on two points after touchdown and two safeties.

The Morrison C club trimmed the Morrison Marauders, 24-14. Bill Tate, Rod Jurash and Scott Peterson scored for the winners as Bill Austin scored twice for the losers.

The Parker Pretzels downed Avery No. 2, 22-2. Mark Graham scored for the Pretzels, along with Tom McInnis and Kent Summers, who also added two PAT's.

Rounding out the residence hall action, the Joyner Jokes blanked the Conner Craniums, 19-0. Bill Mees scored twice and Bill McCoure added another TD to lead Joyner.

There was one forfeit, Morrison No. 1 over the Morrison Steelers.

Stolen Credit Card Gets University $100 Gas Bill

The FBI recently conducted an investigation to determine why the University was charged for $100 worth of gasoline that it never received.

The federal agency was called in after it was learned that the fuel was charged to a credit card that had been missing from a University - owned vehicle since June 24.

By checking the license number on the gas company's credit slip the FBI discovered that the car in which the fuel had been used had been wrecked in South Carolina in the latter part of June.

James H. Beaman of Durham has been identified as the driver of the car. Beaman is currently serving a term in the Durham County Jail, for temporary larceny and auto theft in another case. No charges have been made concerning the missing credit card.

Beaman claims that he does not remember who gave him the credit card.

Dickson Left Out Of University Day

President Paul Dickson will not participate in the annual University Day celebration here Oct. 12.

Instead of Dickson, who has been the center of campus controversy for the past two weeks, John Harmon, president of the senior class, will represent the student body at the ceremony, Dr. Joseph Sloan, chairman of the faculty committed planning University Day, announced yesterday.

Asked if Dickson's omission from the program was because of the controversy arising from his conviction on a "Campus Code" violation, Sloan replied: "The answer is obviously yes."

University Day is an annual UNC event which celebrates the anniversary of the founding of the school. The president of the student body has traditionally been called upon to represent students.

Sloan said Harmon was invited to speak and that no invitation was sent to Dickson.

Dickson, a Raeford native, holds the highest student position on the UNC campus. He was convicted last summer by the men's honor council, an organ of the student judiciary, on a violation of the fraternity visiting agreement.

He was handed an official reprimand by the council for having a girl in his Chi Psi fraternity house at an unauthorized hour.

Several student petitions have sought Dickson's resignation or recall from office.

Dickson has flatly refused to resign, saying that only recall or impeachment will cause him to step down.

Art Speaks

Art Buchwald, nationally syndicated humor columnist, will begin a series of three lectures at N. C. State University in a student sponsored symposium this week entitled "Issue 65: Criticism and Inquiry in a Free Society."

The program, sponsored jointly by Student Government and the Erdahl-Cloyd Student Union will also feature David Riseman, leading Harvard social scientist, and Dr. Frank Porter Graham, first president of the Consolidated University and former U.S. Senator.

Buchwald will speak on Sept. 30, Riseman on Oct. 1, and Graham on Oct. 2. All lectures will be held at 8 p.m. in the ballroom of the Erdahl-Cloyd Union.

The public is invited and no admission will be charged.

UNC Professor Honored For Aid To NATO

A faculty member of the University was decorated by the U. S. Defense Department at the Pentagon in Washington Tuesday.

George E. Nicholson Jr., chairman of the UNC Department of Statistics was recognized for his distinguished service in protecting the United States and its partners of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) against potential enemies, including Russia, Red China and other Iiron Curtain foes.

Nicholson was honored by the U. S. Air Force and the Defense Department and given the "exceptional civilian service medal" for his work as a U. S. advisor on NATO matters. He was also cited for his conduct as a special consultant to the Air Force.

"As chairman of the Department of Statistics at the University of North Carolina, and in cooperation with university officials, Professor Nicholson assumed responsibility for the organization, recruitment and the training of a select cadre of highly qualified scientist personnel," the citation said.

Nicholson assumed a major role in the design and evaluation of tests involving equipment and tactics for the G91, a light reconnaissance strike plane.

Brown U. Backs Doctor's Issue Of Contraceptives

PROVIDENCE, R. I. (AP) —The administration at Brown University backed up yesterday the health service director who gave two unmarried coeds prescriptions for contraceptive pills.

University President Barnaby C. Keeney said he is satisfied with Dr. Roswell D. Johnson's "performance and judgment."

Both Keeney and Johnson stressed that the two cases were carefully considered. The disclosure stirred little adverse comment on the Brown Campus.

Dr. Johnson said both women involved were "mature people, already engaged and they both had been referred to me by clergy." Keeney said one of the women has since married and both were over 21.

Carol R. Dannenberg, president of the Pembroke Student Government Association, said she saw "a distinct difference" between an individual young woman seeking advice and medication from an experienced physician, and "an entire student community," seeking such advice. Pembroke is the women's division of Brown University.

Keeney said Dr. Johnson has broad discretion to treat cases as seems best to him" and added, "after careful examination of the circumstances Dr. Johnson decided to prescribe contraceptive pills. It is common practice to do so well before marriage."

Dr. Johnson said he acted on what he called his own policy and it does not constitute a "blanket prescription." He said:

"We don't prescribe without a great deal of serious soul searching. This is a highly personalized matter. The fact that so few have gotten prescriptions is a pretty good indication of how hard it is to get by the barriers.

"We want to know why they want to use the pills. I want to feel I'm contributing to a solid relationship (between the people involved) and not contributing to unmitigated promiscuity."

The Rev. Julius S. Scott Jr., acting University Chaplain, said "this situation patently documents the moral ambiguity of the contemporary university campus, the collapse of tight ethical systems, the insufficiency of Shibboleths, and the necessity for tough-minded conversation about the nature of moral life in our times."

House Defeats Home Rule Bill; Plans Referendum

By GEOFFREY GOULD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — (AP) — President Johnson's home rule plan for the District of Columbia went down the drain in the house today.

In its place the House passed a substitute measure providing for a referendum on whether district residents want home rule.

If they vote yes, a charter commission would be elected to make a seven-month study of what form the city government should take. Then the charter would be submitted to the voters and finally to Congress, which now overseas the District government.

But it was not clear that even this modified home rule plan would ever get final congressional approval.

The Senate passed an entirely different bill that would give District residents the right to elect their own mayor and council next year. It seems unlikely the Senate will accept the drastically different House version in the waning days before adjournment.

President Johnson used his powers of persuasion earlier this month to get the "home rule now" bill to the House floor.

This was done by a discharge petition signed by eight House members to take the bill out of the hands of a hostile House District Committee.

Republicans complained of arm - twisting by the White House. Perhaps significantly, six Texas Democrats whom the President had persuaded to sign the petition switched against home rule on a preliminary vote two days ago.

The House approached the final votes today in an atmosphere of parliamentary confusion. At one point no less than five members, including the Democratic and Republican floor leaders, made successive parliamentary inquires to find out what the situation was.

The key vote came on the adoption of the substitute bill, sponsored by Rep. B. F. Sisk, D-Calif. on an an non - record teller vote it was approved 198 to 139, and this was confirmed by a later roll call vote of 227 to 174.

That made it a brand new ball game. Backers of the administration's home rule plan were faced with the alternative of voting for the Sisk substitute or getting nothing at all.

The count on final passage was 283 to 117, with 197 Democrats and 86 Republicans voting for the substitute. Against it were 75 Democrats and 42 Republicans.

A partisan group of home rule advocates spoke one after another against the Sisk amendment.

Pi Kappa Phi Gets Dan Moore Trophy

The Dan K. Moore leadership trophy for outstanding leadership among members of Kappa Chapter of Pi Kappa Phi here has been established.

The announcement was made at a recent meeting of Kappa Council, Inc., an organization of alumni of the Chapel Hill group.

During his undergraduate years, Governor Moore was a member of Pi Kappa Phi, was elected to Phi Beta Kappa and was a campus leader.

The trophy was donated by an alumnus in honor of the governor and will be awarded annually to the member of the chapter who has shown outstanding leadership during the year. Academic achievement, as well as participation in and contribution to chapter and university activities, will be major criteria in making the selection.

Presentation of the trophy will be made at the chapter's annual Founder's Day dinner each fall.

UNC Journalists Net National Positions

School of Journalism staff members read papers and were elected to office at the national journalism teachers' convention held recently in New York.

The meeting of the Association for Education in Journalism (AEJ) was held in Syracuse. Seven UNC journalism faculty members attended.

John B. Adams was elected head of the group's International Communication Division, its Teaching Standards Committee and the AEJ Advisory Board. Kenneth R. Byerly was elected to the executive committee of the Newspaper Division.

Papers were read by three of the staff members. Joseph L. Morrison presented a paper on a history panel. His subject was "Editor for Sale, A World War II Case History." James J. Mullen's paper was "Predicting Newspaper Advertising Readership." Prof. Adams reported on "The Foreign Correspondent and His Readers."

Dean Wayne A. Danielson is presently a member of the AEJ Research Committee, the joint committee of AEJ and the American Newspaper Publishers Association, and the executive committee of the American Association of Schools and Departments of Journalism, an affiliate of AEJ.

Norval Neil Luxon, was named consultant to the Hearst Foundation Journalism Awards program. Stuart W. Sechriest was instrumental in the formation of the Newspaper Division of AEJ.

Ban Highlights Will Be Replayed On T.V.

A number of people interested in the proceedings by the Speaker Ban Law Study Commission were away at the time of the August and September hearings.

Arrangements have been made to replay highlights of the four days of hearings from the videotape made by WUNC-TV during the sessions.

The closed-circuit showing is scheduled for Oct. 1, between 2 and 6 p.m. in the WUNC-TV studio in Swain Hall.

The arrangement to replay the hearings was made by the Chapel Hill Chapter of the American Association of University Professors for the benefit of its members, but the public is invited.

CUSC Appointments Announced Today

Student Body President Paul Dickson today announced his appointments to the Consolidated University Student Council.

They are Diane Peed, Van MacNair, Camilla Walters, Jim Little, Sheri O'Donnell, Phil Kirstlin, Russ Sleeper, and Phil Riker.

There will be a compulsory meeting of all council members tomorrow at 5 p.m. in the Grail Room to choose 20 finalists for queen of Consolidated University Day.

Phi Gamma Delta Cops National Award

The UNC chapter of Phi Gamma Delta social fraternity has received an award from its national headquarters for achieving the greatest all around improvement of any Phi Gam chapter in the nation this year.

The award, known as the Herbert L. Condon Sr. Cup, was presented at the ninth annual Phi Gam national convention, known as the Fiji Academy.

Legislature Meets Tonight

Student Legislature will hold its first meeting of the academic year tonight at 7:30 on the top floor of New East.

Several bills will be introduced and debated, including a controversial reapportionment bill.

Campus radio legislation, stalled on the floor in last spring's SL meetings, is expected to be sent back to committee until after the Oct. 5 referendum on the issue.

Several Student Government appointments will be voted upon, including the new members of the Student Government Elections Board.

Di-Phi Hears UNC Radio Pros, Cons

By JOHN GREENBACKER
DTH Political Writer

John Stupak, chairman of the Campus Radio Committee of Student Government, explained the proposed campus carrier current radio system and answered critics at the Di-Phi Senate inaugural debate Tuesday night.

Stupak told the group of nearly 35 that campus radio was needed to provide entertainment, emergency information and emergency communication.

"At the present time," he said, "there is no way of getting in touch with the entire student body at one time."

Stupak said the radio could be utilized to inform the students of cancelled classes, notify students of campus meetings and to allow radio listeners to question speakers directly over the radio through telephone splices.

He listed the names of those radio stations commonly picked up on campus and listed reasons why their programming or reception was inferior.

Top Forty

Stupak said most students listen to WKIX in Raleigh, a "top forty" station which he said "broadcasts on a junior and senior high school level."

According to current plans, the campus radio system will consist of a broadcasting studio which will have its noncommercial FM signal sent through the air within a five mile radius of Chapel Hill.

A total of 21 transmitters will be installed in University residence halls to pick up the FM signal, convert it to an AM signal and send the AM signal through the existing power lines of each residence hall.

AM Signal

The power lines will radiate the AM signal throughout each building and not more than 50 years beyond it.

Stupak said the initial outlay for the establishment of the system would cost Student Government $34,828, and annual operating expenses would total nearly $11,000.

Frank Longest, a Student Party representative to Student Legislature and member of the SL Finance Committee, explained that money for campus radio would have to come largely from Student Government's $70,400 general surplus.

The general surplus has been building up since 1946.

10-Hour Day

The radio will likely broadcast between the hours of 3 p.m. and 1 a.m., and the type of music to be played will be determined by a campus-wide poll.

A referendum on campus radio is scheduled for Oct. 5.

Members of the senate and guests criticized the radio for its expense, the lack of AM programming for 50 per cent of the student body living off campus, the possibility that the station will become a noncommercial WKIX and the uncertainty of such a new, untested operation.

Story Of Earth Is Morehead Show

Currently showing at Morehead Planetarium is "The Earth in the Universe," described as a three-way program that:

(2.) Gives a completel demonstration of celestial mechanics, how things move and seem to move as seen from Earth.

(3.) Was designed to correlate with courses in North Carolina and Virginia schools in earth sciences. (Most sicence textbooks cover astronomy in the first twelve weeks or so of school.)

"The Earth in the Universe" was shown for the first time last fall. Planetarium Assistant Director Donald S. Hall said, "It was one of the most successful shows ever given during the fall in terms of attendance, which was just phenominal."

The program observes the sky 11,000 years in the future and illustrates the earth's rotation in three minutes as seen from the North Pole. The moon zips through half its phases, about two weeks, in 30 seconds.

This program is of such universal appeal," Hall said, "that anyone would enjoy it and benefit from it. It isn't below anyone's intellectual level."

Borin's Comin'

Attention bridge players!

Starting today (P. 4) the DTH will carry an exclusive weekly bridge column penned by a former UNC student, the incomparable Charles Borin'.

Borin' attended the University in the fall of 1952. Due to his inordinate love of bridge, he was forced to drop five of his courses (being a lover of physical fitness, he stayed in phys ed) in order to meet his table obligation.

In 1953, when Borin' took to the professional circuit, playing and writing an annual bridge column for Grit, he explained his departure from the University with this now famous statement:

"When academics start interferring with your extracurricular activities, it's plain to see you're taking too many subjects."

Most of Borin's columns will come from table exploits recorded at the Hogan County Little League Baseball Benefit Bridge.

It was in this tournament that Borin' won the coveted "Catcher's Cup."

Backfield In Motion

Our heartiest congratulations to the women of Winston.

True sports that they are, they caught the fellows from Alexander a little off guard when they accepted a challenge to a football contest.

A lively practice session yesterday afternoon proved distracting enough to cause 'most everybody in the central part of campus to come take a look.

Singlehandedly, these girls — settled in the midst of male residence halls — may prevent the usual early-fall doldrums that set in with the first quizzes.

They've lived in formerly all-male Winston just a few weeks, and already they're setting an example to be looked up to by the rest of our coed population. We see no reason why coed football games couldn't be incorportated in the intramural system, and there is reason to expect that this pastime will become so popular that it will become so popular that it will be sanctioned as an intercollegiate event.

Football rules, of course, will have to be adapted to coed play. We expect there will be a 75-yard penalty for illegal use of the hands but backfield in motion will surely be legalized.

Weeding Out The Bugs

When a new system of any sort is created from scratch, it's found to be full of bugs at first.

One of the buggiest things to happen to the University lately is the rather unrealistic approach which is being made to the problem of campus parking.

Just this week Dean of Men William G. Long corrected one of those bugs when he announced that half the car registration fee will be refunded to students who have T stickers. They live within 20 minutes walking distance of the school and may not park anywhere on campus.

It was unfair to expect those who have no parking privileges whatsoever to pay the same fee as those who at least have a "hunting license," as Long calls it.

"We've received several legitimate complaints about this and we became convinced they had a point and something should be done about the situation.

"Our whole system is subject to scrutiny and we always welcome suggestions for improvements. Our job is not to harass, but to reduce harassment," he said.

A beautiful statement — and luckily, Long already has another opportunity to prove he meant it.

The Bell Tower Parking Lot literally overflows with cars of commuting students every morning. As one student said, "They're parked on top of each other in there." He wasn't far wrong.

Two sections of the lot — those nearest the center of campus — are reserved for staff parking. Little more than half of the 180 places reserved for staff cars are being used, however.

While "Lot is Full" signs turn students away, an entire section of the lot is not being used. The students who are deprived of these spaces have to go somewhere and are often forced to park illegally. Those few who dare park in the forbidden Bell Tower spaces — which staff members apparently neither need nor want — are ticketed. Campus police finally barricaded the area yesterday.

Nobody expects miracles. Any plan will be unsatisfactory so long as there are more than twice as many cars as parking spaces. Because of this shortage of room it is all the more necessary that there be no waste.

If that space in the Bell Tower Lot is not being wasted, we are hard pressed to see that it is being put to any use.

We think a reallocation of the available space is in order.

Changes take time, but we're willing to wait patiently if there is some assurance that they will be made as rapidly as the harried Dean of Men's office can work them out.

Long has stated his willingness to correct defects in the system. We trust his sincerity.

And we're waiting.

Ralph Moody: Boy Educator

Ralph Moody is no longer Deputy Attorney General of North Carolina. Instead, he's now in charge of the state's educational facilities.

Moody's first task in his new job was to wage a big campaign on behalf of the speaker ban law. That way, he was confident, folks would soon learn of his deep interest in higher education.

Next, he ruled that North Carolina public Schools cannot sell photographs, magazine subscriptions, insurance and soda pop. He felt that if the schools continued selling these items, they'd be unfairly competing with private enterprise, although they used the profits of the sales to buy library books, band uniforms and athletic equipment. This did not please the kids, their parents, and the school superintendents, but at least it made the sodapop vending companies very happy.

After that, he enraged the state's beatles and beatniks by okaying disciplinary action against kids who "substitute odd behavior, (long hair), and bizarre dress in lieu of brains."

If a man can do all this, I figures he must be some sort of a super-educator.

"That's right," Moody said while I dreamed I interviewed him in Raleigh. "Why, when I was a kid, I walked 30 miles every day to school."

"How come?" I asked him.

"I'm a firm believer in private enterprise," he replied, "and even back then I had long since decided that publicly run School athletics may have to be curtailed er was cold, and toward the end of each winter I usually developed double pneumonia, but I knew that if I rode to school I'd be sanctioning the introduction of alien economic system."

Moody said a school store "may sell books related to the educational process," but not books like Candy and The Memoirs of Casanova.

"You want to protect the morals of the students, don't you?" I inquired.

"No," he said, "it's not exactly that. By banning Candy, I was only fighting socialism. Besides, kids nowadays spend too much time reading these books when they could be doing something to improve themselves —like studying the McGuffey Reader."

School athletics may have to be curtaile if funds obtained by selling the sodapop are cut off, but Moody assured me this wouldn't matter. "If the folks get too bored and want some entertainment, they can always watch professional wrestling on television.

"And by the way — as long as we're discussing TV, let me tell you the state should get rid of WUNC and other publicly-run stations. Jessie Helmes has assured us that WRAL, if offered a fair contract, would be willing to take care of North Carolina's education TV needs, especially in the area of political science."

Asked about teen-age behavoir, Moody said: "A public school is a place for educational and instructional purposes. It is not a bistro, a joint or a pad where beatniks gather, drink expresso coffee and substitute odd behavior and bizarre dress in lieu of brains. These things must not be tolerated; otherwise, we would be in competition with Harry's Restaurant.

"As for the beatle haircuts themselves— if we permitted them in the schools, we'd be competing against the Ed Sullivan Show."

During the interview, Moody announced he is conducting a study to see is school cafeterias are taking business away from Hardee's hamburger chain. Then he paused a minute.

"Say—you know something," he said. "I bet we could resolve this here controversy about Communist speakers on state-supported campuses by making all the schools privately owned."

Freshman Camp

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

On behalf of all 185 freshmen who attended Freshman Camp at Camp New Hope, I wish to thank the YMCA and all those who made the camp possible. In my opinion, Freshman Camp helped me to win many close friendships as well as to offer me an insight into the Carolina way of life.

Many people do not realize the value of such an enlightening experience as Freshman Camp. I personally want to offer thanks to director Wyatt McCallie, his staff of officers, and the many counselors who gave up part of their summer vacation to give their services. I only hope Freshman Camp can be continued for the benefit of those freshmen who want to gain a firmer foothold on college life at UNC.

Dickson Publicity

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Out of the present crisis over the presidency of the student body, several things are abundantly clear.

Those students who signed the peitition expressed their concern that this situation not receive publicity in the state press. Yet, they released their petition to the public.

The signers of the petition expressed concern for the student judiciary. Yet, they used their position of trust to violate the traditional protection of privacy afforded to every defendent.

The petition signers say they supported Dickson when he was faced with administration coercion. Yet, they cited as a reason for his vacating the office the fact that that same administration refuses to recognize the person placed in the presidency by the student body. Has the coercion really ceased?

Just who is fooling whom?

The New Fraternity

Mr. Powledge, a graduate of the University here, is a reporter for The New York Times.

By FRED POWLEDGE
DTH Editor, 1957-58
From ESQUIRE

The chief identifying characteristic of the New Fraternity, though, is none of these. It is an intense attention to the details of running a revolutionary office. Never before has a generation made such wide use of the tools of bureaucracy to foment peaceful insurrection. A member of the Student Left without his staple gun and his Magic Marker is as defenseless as an Alabama state patrolman without his cattle prod or a Klansman without his sheet.

It was not always like this. The Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, after which all the others are fashioned, started out as anti-office as it was anti-segregation. Early S.N.C.C. pamphelts, and even some late ones, are collector's items for their typographical errors and splotchy print jobs. But even S.N.C.C. has changed: mimeograph machines are rampant at the headquarters in Atlanta, and the organization is thinking about buying an offset press.

S.N.C.C. now has seven full-time photographers, is renovating a surplus-cotton warehouse to serve as a headquarters (after a succession of offices that always turned out to be too small), has a fleet of sixty automobiles, more than fifty Citizens' Band radio units, a bulk-rate long-distance-telephone line, and one defensive weapon according to one officer: "Our bodies." There aren't many parties at S.N.C.C. anymore. The staff has grown too big.

The other groups, which started later, have gone in the same direction. The headquarters of the W. E. . DuBois Club in San Francisco is a model of bureaucracy. Corkboard is all over the walls, and messages are held there by real pushpins. The mimeograph machine is as immaculate as the engine of a general's jeep. The work tables are constructed of plywood, a standard practice, but they have been shellacked. It is safe to say that no other organization on the Student Left today has taken the pains to shellac its work tables.

An S.D.S. worker was quick to provide his own analysis of this. ("Analysis" is a big word around the S.D.S., along with "relevance." There is a newspaper photograph on one S.D.S. bulletin board that shows a model in a fashionable bikini, and someone has written under it, "The New Relevance." "DuBois is so anally compulsive," he analyzed, "because everybody thinks of it as the real far-out group, and it wants so badly to be in with the others. It acts as if it almost had to prove, with neat bulletin boards and pamphlets, that it's relevant."

Students for a Democratic Society, which as the front - runner of the Northern student organizations doesn't have to prove anything to anybody, luxuriates in offices that are good-naturedly messy. When the New York office was still the headquarters of the organization, someone had gone around with the office Labelmaker, putting strips of imprinted plastic on doors that read "UNDEMOCRATIC LEFT" and "AGIT-PROP." Still, the well - oiled mimeograph machines dominated the office; on the wall a pencil sketch of one of the machines had been captioned "Our Founder."

An S.D.S. office in the field is different. The headquarters of the Newark Community Union, a community organizing effort run by S.D.S., is in an old barbershop that is falling to pieces. There are no signs that say AGITPROP and not even a Labelmaker. The project puts out a mimeographed newsletter that is almost calculatedly sloppy and that completely lacks references to analysis or relevance. Someone who doesn't like the project (and that could include almost all of Newark's power structure, along with many of its traditional Negro leaders) put out a fake edition of the newsletter not long ago that libeled most of the S.D.S. staff.

DuBois, meantime, hammers away at respectability. An issue of Spur, the club's publication, recently published a page titled "A Guide to Better Stencil Making: Some Helpful Hints." It advised stencil makers, among other things, to use an electric typewriter whenever possible. The club also published an advertisement that eloquently states the case for revolutionary bureaucracy:

"The National Office has issued a poster calling for an end to the war in Viet Nam. The poster is 11" x 17" and includes a quote from Senator Wayne Morse: 'The American people will bluntly and plainly call it murder. The American people do not want to go to war in or for South Viet Nam.' The poster displays a photograph of a woman fleeing with her children from a burning village. The posters are available only in bundles of 25 or more, at 10 cents each."

Even the real fringe groups like P.L.M. are printing stuff that looks readable, even if it isn't. Treatises from the Student Left no longer look as if they were printed by some nut outfit in Mexico, complete with the British Socialist spelling of words like "organisation." And great strides have been made in improving the old standby, the picket sign. C. Clark Kissinger provides the latest word in The S.D.S. Chapter Organizer's Handbook:

"First off, buy yourself a Swingline staple gun for about $5. With this marvelous instrument thousands of things can be constructed. Picket signs are easily made by stapling poster boards to sticks. And buy yourself some nice sticks from the lumber yard, rather than using rotten boards and broom handles. The simplest way to letter a picket sign is with marking pens, which give you a wider range of colors, but if you aren't going to do a neat lettering job, then skip the whole idea. In particular, note that the width of a marking - pen stroke is much too small for lettering — it is unreadable fifty feet away, and what is worse is that it is completely lost in the dot pattern of a newspaper photo. Letters should be at least an inch thick — start by outlining them and fill them in. They are also more legible if fluted. As for banners, make sure they contain holes or semicircular slots to make them stable in the wind."

Two items are never missing from a New Fraternity conference or seminar: buttons and pamphlets. At the meeting held on the campus of the University of Pennsylvania, there were thirty-one different pieces of literature on a long, dark refectory table, some of them free, some for sale. (There were also lapel name cards, of the sort that may be found at any JayCee convention.) The literature included a pamphlet on the Progressive Labor Movement's dreary "outlook," titled, predictably, Road to Revolution; the tabloid newsprint American Socialist, the journal of the American Socialist Organizing Committee out of Chicago; pamphlets put out by the National Committee to Aid the Bloomington Students (three University of Indiana students who were the victims of a witch-hunt there); Vol. 1, No. 1 of The Partisan, the magazine of Youth Against War and Fascism; Young Socialist, and Free Student, another tabloid, this one put out by M2M, or the May Second Movement, a pacifist organization that is particularly enraged over the United States' involvement in Viet Nam.

Student radical editors are a conformist bunch. They print interview after interview with the late Malcolm X, article after article on Viet Nam (none of them really informative), and piece after piece on the Berkeley Affair. The Berkeley uprising is perhaps the most analyzed campus event since Fermi split the atom at Chicago. Appearing among the ranks of the Student Left are a number of self - appointed experts (most of them sociology students with limited powers of expression) who seem to be specializing in one or more moments in time during the Berkeley uprising. Whole theses appear about to be written on such subjects as "What the Future of F.S.M. Would Have Been if President Kerr Had Given Mario Savio the Microphone During the Greek Theatre Meeting." All this contrasts rather poorly with S.N.C.C.'s record in the South, which is singularly lacking in written analysis and pampleteering, probably because the S.N.C.C. folk are too busy getting shot at.

Practice Underway For First UNC Sex Bowl

By ED FREAKLEY
DTH Staff Writer

Set. Down. 36-22-36, Hike!

The Sex Bowl is coming.

Some guys in Alexander Residence Hall got together a few days ago and decided they would challenge the ladies in Winston to a game of football.

Out they went and tacked a sign in the girls' dorm. Figuring these gals as typical "Carolina Coeds" the boys didn't expect anything to happen.

The Daily Tar Heel got word of the little plan and phoned the girls to see if anything was going to come off.

The game was scheduled for yesterday afternoon and the girls said they would be out in form.

As it turned out the ladies showed, but nary a brave soul from Alexander could be found, at first.

Finally after looking around and waiting, one of the fellows showed up with the lame explanation that they meant for the game to be played next week.

The ladies responded to the challenge saying they would meet Alexander on the battle field next Tueday, Oct. 5, at 4 p.m.

The girls then decided on a little practice for the coming contest.

Ready to go to it the untypical coeds asked for a football. It took the surprised males a few minutes to find one, but by this time the crowd was gathering, and the boys were all too willing to be of any assistance. They wanted to play . . .

One shapely halfback said, "We just want to mess around, see what its like and practice a little."

"Come on," yelled another, "let's warm up."

"I played left tackle in high school, and I'm pretty good too," said one well-put-together brunette.

The girls said they kept in shape by running up and down four flights of stairs every day in their dorm.

After getting the football the girls got into formation. The line averaged about 112 pounds from end to end, and about 36-24-38 the rest of the way around.

They ran through a few plays which made the boys decide to split the teams for next week's game. Boys and girls together is an old Carolina tradition you know.

The Daily Tar Heel will provide full (and we mean full) coverage of UNC's first, and we hope annual, Sex Bowl.

Opening lead: Heart x

No contract is impossible.

Here's a good example of what can be done when the chips are down.

Since our opponents were vulnerable and had a 90 leg, I knew it was now or never for our side.

Lacking opening points or a biddable suit, I decided to stretch the requirements for a pre - empt bid, combining this opening call with the short club.

Since our situation was so desperate, I knew I must bid a very long short club to impress upon my partner the importance of a wise response.

Thus — I opened with three short clubs.

West passed.

Then my partner, north, made the mistake that almost cost us the game — he employed a convention which he did not fully understand.

Naturally I understood his three-no trump response over my three short club opening to be a cue meaning that he had first-round control over the minor suits, unless he had a hand containing between 16 and 19 points with a void in my suit and a five-card major suit with an ace in the other major suit, which he would have indicated by coughing three times if his ace was a spade or blinking his eyes twice and spitting over his left shoulder if it was a heart, then, of course, answering my bid at the four level in the suit in which he had a number of cards equal to the number of honor points in his weakest suit, excluding his void.

"You're a terrific player, J. B."

Since the intervening opponent had passed, I could readily eliminate the possibility that he was telling me that he had 22 points with a six-card minor suit, forcing me to declare a misdeal on the ground that west had seen two of my cards during the deal.

East doubled.

But since the three-no trump contract would produce game without being doubled, I undoubled to take the pressure off my partner, and the bid was passed out.

East led a heart through my dummy (which less than pleased my partner who thought my undouble had meant that I wanted the hand to be played at his bid) and west took the trick with the king, leading back a spade.

At this point north lit up a 1915 Kentucky Colonel cigar and aimed his discharges to his left. By the time play progressed to west, he was feeling ill from the unbearable fumes and asked to be excused.

Naturally north refused. After a few more hearty gusts from the 50-year-old stogie, west was forced to leave the tabkle to regurgitate.

North immediately filed a protest on grounds of an illegal departure from the table during the playing of the hand.

The protest was validated and our side won the game.

Legality Of Voting Rights Bill Is Pressed By S. C.

WASHINGTON (AP)—South Carolina asked the Supreme court today to accept an original suit by the state attacking constitutionality of the voting rights bill signed by President Johnson on Aug. 6.

Atty. Gen. Daniel R. McLeod of South Carolina, in a motion urging a final ruling by the highest tribunal, contended the new act "arbitrarily, unconstitutionally and unlawfully" attempts to restrict and prohibit the state's right "to exercise her sovereign power to prescribe fair and reasonable qualifications for registration of her electorate and the conduct of her elections."

The motion named U.S. Atty. Gen. Nicholas Katzenbach as defendant. The federal government, under high court rules, has 60 days in which to file an answer.

There is a question whether a state may sue the federal government before the Supreme Court in an original case. By original is meant that the first action in the case is before the Supreme Court.

Katzenbach's answer presumably could state that the government will or will not consent to being sued in this manner. A volume on "Supreme Court Practice" by attorneys Robert L. Stern and Eugene Gressman says that because the federal government stands in relation as parent in respect to the constitutionality of a federal statute, states have been held unable to sue the federal government in that capacity.

McLeod's motion for permission to file the South Carolina suit ran 96 printed pages. It asked the Supreme Court to declare the new voting act in violation of the federal Constitution and that the high court permanently enjoin the government from enforcing or attempting to enforce the act against South Carolina.

U. S. Warns N. Viet Nam About Trials

WASHINGTON — The United States warned Communist North Viet Nam yesterday against war crimes trials of captured American pilots, saying such trials would be merely a smokescreen for reprisals prohibited by a 1949 treaty on prisoner treatment.

U. S. Officials are privately concerned about the treat of the Hanoi government. At least half a dozen American pilots are held in North Viet Nam. In South Viet Nam two captured American fighting men were executed by the Viet Cong two days ago and one earlier in the year. The United States denounced the executions as brutal murders.

Some authorities here believe Communist tactics may be moving the war into a new and more savage stage. Executions of captured U. S. flyers in the north would raise serious questions of possible counter action by this government, further expanding the conflict.

The threat of war crimes trials was contained in a letter which North Viet Nam sent the International Red Cross committee in Geneva. It stated that American pilots were attacking civilian targets in North Viet Nam and all those captured will be considered as war criminals. The letter was dated Aug. 31 — almost a month ago — and exactly what North Viet Nam intends to do under the announced policy was not clear in Washington.

State Department press officer Robert J. McCloskey said today: Any effort to brand the pilots as war criminals and try them in kangaroo fashion would be smokescreen for reprisals.

He explained he meant reprisals for the execution by the South Vietnamese government or Communist Viet Cong terrorists captured in South Viet Nam.

McCloskey declared that in the U. S. view war crimes trials would be a transparent attempt to evade the clear prohibition on reprisals which is contained in the 1949 Geneva Convention, adding:

Any effort to cloak such actions as so-called war crimes through the device of mock trial would be utterly unwarranted and a deliberate evasion of the obligations undertaken by Hanoi when it adhered to the 1949 convention.

UNC School Of Medicine, Charlotte Memorial To Unite

By ED FREAKLEY
DTH Staff Writer

The UNC School of Medicine and Charlotte Memorial Hospital will become affiliated next July providing a unique education and exchange program between the two institutions.

Dr. Isaac Taylor, dean of the School of Medicine, and John W. Rankin, director of Charlotte Memorial Hospital, made the announcement Wednesday.

Under the agreement Memorial's chief resident will serve under the joint sponsorship of the departments of medicine at both institutions.

Clinical Faculty

Six of Memorial's specialists in internal medicine will be appointed to the clinical faculty at the medical school here. Any teaching these men do, either here or in Charlotte, will be as part of the official medical school faculty.

A N. C. Memorial Hospital resident in medicine will be sent to Charlotte to become chief resident there.

Initially, the emphasis in Charlotte will be directed toward doctors who have graduated from medical school and are taking advanced training.

However, it is hoped that after a few years, senior UNC medical school students will receive part of their training in Charlotte once the exchange program is set up properly and under way.

First Small Step

Dr. Lewis Welt, chairmen of the Department of medicine, said yesterday, "The University is taking its first small step toward the community hospitals of North Carolina to foster a better understanding between us, so that medicine may benefit and our knowledge can grow."

The affiliation is expected to spread to other departments in the two institutions.

If this happens Charlotte doctors in the 15 or so other specialties, such as surgery, pediatrics, obstetrics and gynecology, will receive appointments to the medical school faculty here.

This would also mean that residents in the other specialties would probably be exchanged between the two hospitals.

The program will give UNC a base in Charlotte on which the training of doctors could be expanded as required.

To implement this, members of the department of medicine here will commute to Charlotte to give lectures. In turn, Charlotte faculty members will come here to give lectures at the medical school.

Mutual Benefit

Members of the two hospitals said the program will "mutually benefit and strengthen the opportunities for graduate and undergraduate medical education."

In their formal statement, Taylor and Rankin said:

"The School of Medicine at the University of North Carolina and Charlotte Memorial Hospital are pleased to announce an initial step in an affilliation for graduate medical education between the two institutions.

Joint Sponsership

"Beginning in July 1966, the chief resident in medicine of Charlotte Memorial Hospital (currently a member of the residency staff of the medical service at N. C. Memorial Hospital) will serve under the joint sponsorship of the department of medicine of Charlotte Memorial Hospital and the department of medicine of the UNC School of Medicine.

"The administrative officials and the members of the departments of medicine of the two institutions support this development enthusiastically in the belief that such an affiliation will be mutually beneficial in strengthening the opportunities for graduate and undergraduate medical education and will serve to improve the quality of medical care in North Carolina.

"It is anticipated that this initial affiliation may be extended at some future time to include other departments in Charlotte Memorial Hospital and the School of Medicine of the University of North Carolina."

Pep Rally!

Have classes started to get you down yet? Do you feel like screaming?

Well, tonight's the night to do it. At 7:30 p.m. the cheerleaders will be gathering forces for the biggest pep rally to hit UNC in years.

Head cheerleader Jerry Houle said yesterday to remind everybody to bring torches to the planetarium parking lot before 7:30.

When the crowd has gathered to mammoth size the great march will begin across campus; pep band, torches and all. The marchers will parade over to the upper quad, and down into the lower quad picking up forces along the way.

Then the cheerleader, with the band and the crowd at their heels will stomp into Emerson stadium for some good healthy yelling.

A giant bonfire will be waiting for the crowd when they get to Emerson. Cheerleaders said some necessary equipment for tonight's festivities, in addition to the torches, will be trash cans to beat on, or anything else that makes noise.

Just to show their confidence in the team the cheerleaders said that helium-filled balloons will be on sale at tomorrow's Virginia game.

Each time UNC scores, everybody will release his balloon, to the amazement of Virginia fans.

Remember, 7:30 in the planetarium parking lot. And bring torches and trash cans.

University Gets $2 Million, 700 Acres In Kenan Will

From the Associated Press

He left his 700-acre Randleigh Farm at Lockport, plus $2 million, to the University, his alma mater.

Most of Kenan's estate was left for educational purposes. Kenan's will, filed in Niagra, N. Y. County Thursday, began:

"A good education is the most cherished gift an individual can receive."

Industrial Pioneer

Most of his fortune, which Kenan made as a pioneer in the carbon acetylene business and in Florida real estate, will be used to establish "professorships, instructorships, scholarships and fellowships."

Chancellor Paul F. Sharp said yesterday that "through the years, this will be a very great thing for the University." He added, "I hope that it will substantially enrich the Kenan Professorships."

Student Body President Paul Dickson on behalf of the student body:

"I wish to express a feeling of deep gratitude for this generous gift from a man who, in the past, has given much to the people of North Carolina through his gifts to its primary educational institutions."

Kenan, a North Carolina native, was born in 1873 and graduated from the university in 1894 with a B. S. degree. He was a football letterman, playing halfback.

His gifts to the University over the years were many. He and his family set up the Kenan Professorship Fund, which supplements salaries of distinguished professors.

WILLIAM R. KANAN

The University's football field, Kenan Stadium, was a gift from Kenan in 1926, as a memorial to his parents, William R. Kenan and Mary Hargrave.

At that time it had a seating capacity of 24,000 and cost $375,000. Kenan also directed building of Kenan Fieldhouse in the east end of the arena at a cost of $28,000.

In recent years the stadium capacity was increased to 43,000 permanent seats, at the expenditure of more than $1 million, with funds made available by Kenan.

Last fall two new wings costing $100,000 were aided to Kenan Fieldhouse.

Press Box

Another Kenan gift, in 1949, made available funds for construction of a new press box and a guest box on the opposite side of the field.

While at the university, Kenan and Dr. Francis P. Venable were co-discoverers of the commercial use of carbon acetylene.

Attorney General Reverses Moody's Concession Stand

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

Chuck Erickson, UNC's director of athletics, was delighted by the attorney general's Wednesday ruling that state public schools can sell food and soft drinks at athletic events.

Atty. Gen. Wade Bruton's opinion overturned Deputy Atty. Gen. Ralph Moody's decision, which many educators feared would have raised school taxes or curtailed extra activities because of loss of funds from concession stands.

The original opinion did not directly affect fund raising activities at UNC.

Erickson called the refreshment stands an integral part of high school football, saying they attracted many spectators who otherwise would not attend the games.

He said loss of the funds would have "cut down freshman high school squads, and we need to develop this talent. The boys are at a formative age, and if possible, we'd like to help the late-bloomers.

"That's why we'd like to see as many boys as possible playing ball.

"Kind of A Shock"

"It was kind of a shock to see Moody's ruling — especially since the concession stands have been operating for 50 years."

Bruton apparently agreed with the director of athletics, commenting that "various fund raising activities in the public schools" and related activities are "traditional and accepted.

"I do not think the school laws are to be interpreted as prohibiting such activities so long as they are supervised and kept within reasonable, appropriate limits by the various school administrative authorities.

". . . The activities of the hundreds of different schools are too numerous and varied to enable me to set forth a definitive list of activities which a school is legally authorized to conduct."

Asks Clarification

Bruton suggested that the 1967 General Assembly clarify how the "government in business" section of the general statues apply to public schools.

Dr. Charles F. Carroll, state superintendent of public instruction, had requested the attorney general's opinion.

Bruton said the so-called government in business law "does not mean that schools have been given legislative authority to enter unrestrainedly into the field of retail merchandising without limitation or restriction.

He did not "think it would be proper for a school to operate a commissary or store that competed generally in the entire field of retail merchandising."

Miss Mississippi To Date N.C. Boy

Some lucky North Carolina male will have the honor of dating the first runner-up to the 1965 Miss America this weekend.

Lovely Patsy Puckett, Miss Mississippi, will arrive here Friday evening and will fill out an "Operation Match" questionnaire.

The data from her questionnaire will be telegrammed to the computation center in Cambridge, Mass. which will process the data and telegram back the name of the boy who from the data on his questionnaire seems to be the ideal date for Miss Puckett.

Her plane will set down at Raleigh - Durham Airport tonight at 7:55.

UNC students are urged to join Duke and Wake Forest students to greet her there.

After a brief press conference at the airport, during which she will be officially crowned "Miss Match," a caravan will bring her to Chapel Hill for a tour of the UNC campus.

After an 8 a.m. breakfast with Gov. and Mrs. Dan K. Moore in the Governor's Mansion Saturday, she will attend a reception at Erdahl-Cloyd Student Union at N. C. State.

At noon she will be back at Carolina for a press conference at the Kappa Sigma fraternity house. Television stations WRAL, WFMY and WTVD will broadcast the announcement of her ideal date. This lucky gentleman will escort Miss Mississippi for the remainder of the weekend.

Saturday afternoon Miss Puckett and her escort will attend the Carolina - Virginia football game, after which they will be honored guests at the Rams Club.

Then it's on to the Maverick House for a reception which is open to everyone.

The grand finale of her visit to Chapel Hill will be a banquet in her honor at the Blair House at 6:45 p.m.

Immediately after the banquet Miss Puckett will go to Duke where she will attend a large reception in her honor given by Pi Kappa Phi fraternity to which all members of the Durham community have been invited.

Miss Puckett plans to leave Chapel Hill Sunday at 9 a.m.

Young men who would like a chance to date this beauty, but have not yet submitted a questionnaire may get in on the game by filling out the data sheet and slipping it under the door of 5 Old West before 8 p.m. Friday night.

MRC Hears Resignation Resolution

A resolution calling for Paul Dickson's resignation as student body president was introduced in the Men's Residence Council Wednesday night, and MRC members voted to postpone its consideration until next week.

The resolution was introduced by Jim Sturges of Graham Residence Hall, one of three students who sponsored a recent campus-wide petition calling for Dickson's resignation.

The petition, signed by nearly 1500 students, was presented to Dickson last week.

After Sturges introduced his resolution, Andy Holland of Mangum Hall moved to suspend the rules for the resolution's immediate consideration by the body.

According to MRC rules, all bills and resolutions are introduced by their sponsors and the body waits until its next meeting before voting on the proposals.

A suspension requires two-thirds of the body's support to be approved.

Holland's motion was defeated by an estimated vote of 35 to 15.

The Sturges resolution said Dickson's conviction for a campus code violation "has endangered the respect for Student Government and in particular the Campus Code and Honor Code."

"A recent poll of student opinion in residence halls and fraternities has shown that he no longer has the confidence of the student body," it reads in part.

The resolution also cited appeals by high Student Government and University administration officials calling for Dickson's resignation.

In other business, MRC President Sonny Pepper announced the resignation of MRC Vice - President Bob Peyton.

David Keil, chairman of the Freshman Class Scholarship Committee, explained plans for a tutorial service offered students in the freshman - sophomore honors program.

He urged MRC members to support the service.

MRC Presses Suit Against Redding

The Men's Resident Council is suing Otis Redding for expenses including cost of publicity, phone calls, tickets, salaries and posters for a concert in which he failed to perform. The entertainer will also be sued for breach of contract and defamation of the character of MRC.

Sonny Pepper, president of the MRC said, "It is hard for us to have concerts now without people being skeptical." Pepper also noted that Redding never contacted the Council. The band and singers showed up for the program but had no idea of the whereabouts of Redding.

The Jokers Three in Greensboro, agent for Redding, is suing him along with the MRC. The band itself was one and a half hours late but had called MRC to let them know of their lateness. The band had had an engagement in Hampton, Va., the afternoon of their scheduled appointment here, Friday, Sept. 24.

The band and singers put on a two hour show while waiting the arrival of Redding. Pepper announced that each ticket holder would receive a refund from the advanced sales of $1,200 if they presented their ticket stubs in Y-Court.

The sum for which Redding is being sued has not been announced as yet.

UNC, Town Argue Route Of By—Pass

Officials of the University and the Town of Chapel Hill are in disagreement with the State on a proposed route for a northwest by-pass linking Carrboro and Airport Road.

The State Highway department has apparently chosen a route which:

— almost parallels the proposed thoroughfare plan road.

— will take up 10 acres of university-owned land.

— blocks off 10 more acres of "the best undeveloped land the University owns."

— creates a dog-leg connection with Estes Drive causing a possible traffic hazard which will be compounded when Airport road becomes a four-lane highway.

According to UNC Business Manager J. A. Branch, the Chapel Hill throughfare plan, which has been approved by the state, shows the by-pass meeting Estes Drive at Airport Road.

The by-pass would be part of the secondary road system. The new route proposed by the state shows an intersection of the Airport Access Road, some distance south of Estes Drive.

The Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen Monday voted to use "all possible influence" to pursuade the Highway Department to return to the original plan, and make a direct connection with Estes Drive.

Branch said the University is opposed to the new state plan "for two reasons." First, "it takes 20 acres of the best land we have, ten acres for the road and the ten which would be shut off by the road."

Branch said the state plan has no connection with the local thoroughfare plan, but if they were both built the thoroughfare road and the state road would be almost parallel.

"We think some road is necessary," Branch said, "so we will try to find out why another plan couldn't be used. All we can do is try to work out a suitable plan."

Branch added that state officials have been "very cooperative and considerate in the matter." He will meet next week with the Highway Department's district engineer to try to work out a new route.

Final action by the University will be up to the board of trustees. Because the road is part of the secondary system, the University is being asked to donate the right-of-way.

Air Force Opens UNC Soccer Season

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

Carolina's soccer team kicks off its 1965 11 - game schedule this afternoon at Fetzer Field (3:00) against the U. S. Air Force Academy.

"This looks like the best bunch we've ever had," UNC Coach Marvin Allen said yesterday. "There are a good number of boys back from last year (20) and we have a lot of talent to work with. Our offensive line is strong — real strong — and should score on anybody. They are good ballhandlers, good shots, and they are fast."

Allen is beginning his 19th season as coach here. His clubs have a composite record of 92-44-12. With 13 sophs on the squad last season, UNC posted a commendable 5-2-2 slate and finished second to Maryland in the ACC.

On the other hand, USAFA streaked to a 7-2-1 record and won the Rocky Mountain Area Championship. It was the first year of coaching there for Capt. Carmen Annillo, a UNC grad of 1954, and it was the Academy's best record event.

Allen has only one sophomore starter as of now. He is center foreward Jimmy Johnston.

"These boys proved themselves last year, and should contribute a great deal to the good season we're looking for," Allen said.

Another Tar Heel starter is junior right halfback Gordon Cadwgan, a transplanted fullback who has shown up well in his new position.

USAFA was expected to run into a good deal of difficulty this year after losing 9 of 11 starters off last year's champs. They well might, but the season was opened in impressive fashion last Saturday when the Falcons blanked Wyoming, 7-0.

The Great Flip-Flop

Bit by bit, the irritants of our chafing parking regulations are being diluted — at least a little.

The changes just announced by Dean of Men William G. Long are for the benefit of faculty members only, but we certainly won't begrudge them.

As one prominent faculty member put it earlier this week, "Here's a parking lot right outside my office. But who gets to use it? Secretaries and janitors. And I have to park in a lot all the way across campus.

"Why, it costs the state $6 just to pay me for the time I waste walking from my car to the office every morning."

A rather egocentric attitude, perhaps, but true.

So another change is being made, and hopefully it will get hot-tempered faculty members off the neck of the administration so it can worry about bigger and better problems.

"It Costs $6 . . ."

Contrary to widespread belief, North Carolina Attorney General Wade Bruton has neither died nor skipped the country.

He's just been letting his deputy, Ralph Moody, run the show lately.

In most cases this arrangement would pass unnoticed, but the deputy has unburdened himself of so many controversial opinions lately that the fire has begun to crackle under his boss man's chair too. You see, everything Moody says is supposed to be with Bruton's approval and endorsement.

Moody delivered a number of advisory opinions recently, including a eulogy of the speaker ban law and a sneer at its opponents. He also made the point that if the law is altered or repealed, the General Assembly could still control speaking on campuses by playing with the school budgets.

He said local school boards had the right to suspend any student who wore his hair too long and refused to dress according to "normal and accepted practices and fashions."

Things were great up to this point. This sort of condemnation is just what a lot of folks like to hear.

But then Moody said schools were going to have to quit running concession stands at athletic contests. As a matter of fact, they would have to quit selling insurance, school pictures and magazine subscriptions too.

The backfire was loud and strong enough to bring Bruton out of hibernation to personally reverse Moody's decision.

In a letter to Superintendent of Public Instruction Charles F. Carroll, he did a full double back flipflop and said, "My staff and I have restudied the entire matter and, even though the law is far from clear, I have concluded that certain observations expressed in the opinions heretofore are too restrictive in practical application."

Controversy had struck a vital nerve — the taxpayers' pocket. The immediate reaction of school officials all over the state to Moody's ruling was that extracurricular activities would have to be curtailed or subsidized by tax money.

The "government in business" law on which Moody based the original opinion is at best vague. It implies that public schools are exempt from some of its restrictions, and as Bruton said, it would be "highly desirable" for the next General Assembly to make the intention of the law clear.

In the meantime, we suggest that Ralph Moody — in his concern for private enterprise — obtain a concession permit for the next football game in Raleigh's Riddick Stadium — to sell humble pie.

Supply And Demand

Lessons in economics can come in strange places.

You wouldn't expect it, but in front of Kemp's record store is about as clear an explanation of the law of supply and demand as can be made.

Kemp has a big jar with umbrellas in it. A sign on the container says, "Umbrellas — $3.60." A smaller sign says, "While raining — $4."

Graham, Ike And LBJ Represent Reactions To Los Angeles Riots

By ROBERT KEISER

After the eruption of the Watts district riots in Los Angeles, the white community responded, for the most part, in three different ways, each of which can be represented by the reactions of Billy Graham, Dwight Eisenhower and Lyndon Johnson. Graham (we will begin with the sacred before the profane) took a look around the area and honestly believed the riots were Communist-inspired. Although no other public figures were willing to accept this preposterous and unproved conclusion, his general view, nevertheless, of seeing the outburst created by agitators, was accepted by many others. Black Muslims, for instance, were blamed, and the civil rights leaders, who advocate civil disobedience, were thought to have encouraged the riots. To be sure, Muslims were active, and the civil rights movement raised expectations which have not been satisfied, thus increasing the probabilities of such deviant behavior. To point to these as the real cause, however, is to ignore the fact that the riots were essentially leaderless and a spontaneous reaction to a social situation felt to be intolerable.

Although Eisenhower is intelligent enough to realize the riots were something more than a Communist conspiracy, his response is not much better than Graham's. A man long ago passed by history, Ike can only point to the riots as another instance of the increasing breakdown of law and order in this country. After a little reflection, however, we should ask among whom the breakdown occurred most, the Negroes or the whites. Some brutal acts against human beings were committed by the Negroes, but most behavior was directed towards the destruction of white-owned property. Actually, thirty-three of the thirty-six people killed were Negroes, mostly as a result of action taken by National Guardsmen. And after the riots climaxed, gunstores in the area were bought out by whites, fearful of the "black peril," an incident which hardly illustrates the white man's belief in law and order.

Furthermore, Ike says a lot about law and order, but he casually ignores the cold statistics of the conditions underlying the riots. Eighty-five per cent of Los Angeles Negroes, for example, live in one per cent of the city's area. The schools in Watts, although legally integrated, are ninety per cent Negro in fact. A Negro male unemployment rate of over thirty per cent results in lack of self respect and broken homes. To put it in plain language, the Negro slum dweller is being discriminated against and rejected in education, employment and housing and it does little good to exhort him to respect a law and order offering him degradation rather than protection.

Fortunately, President Johnson seems to recognize this. He admits the Negro must be given equality and self respect and the whites must help him out of the social conditions which create such riots. We can praise the President for this, but at the same time, express two notes of caution. First, will Johnson, who like most Americans tolerates a rather large gap between his ideals and his actions, really fight hard for the programs necessary to integrate the Negro into the American nation? Certainly, we can improve the Negro's condition just enough so he will no longer senselessly and violently rebel against the system, but — and this is my second question — will we feel the moral imperative to eradicate in full the cultural and social poverty in our midst, among both Negro and white?

The Best Educated Students Are Oysters, Not Sausages

What is education?

Possibly the most widely held concept is what Sydney J. Harris called "the sausage-casing view of education." The student is seen as an empty sausage casing waiting to be "stuffed" with wisdom.

But if you ever feel that you spend so much time studying that you don't have a chance to learn anything, you're probably dissatisfied with this notion of the function of education.

Harris suggests that Socrates had a truer idea of the purpose of education — to withdraw knowledge from, not pour knowledge into.

Educational controversy that concerns itself with what goes into the student and not what is drawn from him is futile. To educated is to instruct and give practice in mental activity — reasoning, analyzing, synthesizing, evaluating, making personal judgments. To absorb a collection of miscellaneous facts is not to educate oneself, not to use years at "the Greater University" wisely, if you will.

The speaker ban law may be considered an example of making lawful the popular misconception of what an education is supposed to do. That is, it focuses on the content of education rather than the content of the student, his inherent scrutinizing abilities, the truth that lies dormant in him.

Anyone really dedicated to the goals of true education has a firm faith in the student as a "sorter" who rejects as often as he accepts. Those, on the other hand, who see students as motionless vacuums who readily incorporate into their working philosophies all the ideas that are dished out to them, those of this "vision" don't know what the word student means. To be well-informed and to be educated are not the same. Education goes beyond information gathering.

Hearing communist speakers does not mean taking in, engulfing all they say, digesting it and adopting it as a way of life. Nor does it mean listeners' minds will be poisoned or their rational faculties knocked out of operation by what they hear.

Sydney Harris gives an analogy more accurate than the sausage analogy: students are more like oysters than sausages. With proper stimulation they will open to reveal inner knowledge — the only real knowledge.

The New Fraternity

Mr. Powledge, a graduate of the University here, is a reporter for The New York Times.

By FRED POWLEDGE
DTH Editor, 1957-58
From ESQUIRE

Buttons are great money-raisers, and no self-respecting organizer is without a supply of them to sell to potential activists. They are also valuable symbols of identification; a button is to the New Fraternity man what a hat and tie are to an F. B. I. agent. One at - large activist turned up in New York not long ago, knowing no one, carrying his bedroll and wearing a button. He recalled later: "One way of making contact with somebody is with a Viet Nam button. I did this when I got to town. I walked up to somebody with a Stop the War in Viet Nam button on, and said, 'Where'd you get it?' He told me, and I walked into the office. They said, 'Can you run a press?' I said, 'Yes.' They said, 'You're hired.' "

Clark Kissinger, who has made a study of buttons, recently commented on the intricacies of proper buttoning: "The factors are diameter, colors, type of pin on the back, quantity, and the method of printing it. The cheapest button we've been able to make is 2.6 cents, and the most expensive one, used by S.D.S., is 6.4 cents.

"The S. S. O. C. button" (depicting white and black hands clasped in front of the Confederate battle flag, and printed by S. D. S. for use by the Southern Student Organizing Committee until one faction raised objections to the use of the flag) "was really a landmark pin. It was the first four - color pin in the movement. Beautiful, too; one and one-fourth inches, clasp on the back instead of a simple pin; we only made 3,000, which made it expensive and pretty much of a collector's item now.

"There're some really important factors to consider in making buttons. There are celluloid buttons, which have the message printed on paper, wrapped around the shell, and then covered with celluloid, and there are those that have the message printed directly on the metal. If you're printing an enormous quantity — say, 25,000 or more — it becomes cheaper to print on the metal. For small numbers you use celluloid. You get so you can look at somebody's button and you can tell what league they're in, because everybody has to follow these same rules of economics." During the last academic year, Students for a Democratic Society caused 53,500 buttons to be struck by local button mongers: 5,000 "Part of the Way With LBJ" buttons; 3,000 of the landmark S. S. O. C. buttons; 3,000 "Jobs or Income Now" buttons for its Chicago community - action project; 5,000 "Chase Manhattan — Partner in Apartheid" buttons (to protest the bank's loan of money to South Africa); 17,500 "A Free University in a Free Society" buttons, and 20,000 "March on Washington To End the War in Viet Nam" buttons.

Brother Kissinger can recite all these figures from his memory, and he can be really funny about them, because he is still in that stage of student radicalism where he can afford to laugh at himself. He loves to tell about S.D.S.'s stroke of imagination in purchasing fifty air mattresses. They are used for conventions and conferences, since there is no money in the budget for staying at hotels. But there are many in the movement who are totally lacking in such humor, and they are the ones to watch It is a safe bet that some of them will be working for labor unions or teaching within a few years.

There were a few examples of this humor gap at the Philadelphia "Democracy on the Campus" conference. The students had been presented with a proposed "student bill of rights" that effectively placed college administrators where the students thought they should be, i.e., in the roles of caretakers and servants to the students and faculty. No self - respecting group of student activists was going to adopt the proposed draft in toto without a little criticism, however. They broke up into small discussion groups, and the conversation went like this:

Young man, fiery-eyed: "We've got the only weapon the labor movement has — and that's the ability to stop what you're doing."

Handsome young woman, delegate from M2M: "If we have a strike, we'd better have it within the next few weeks. How about May 3, since May 2 is on a Sunday?"

Young woman, leotarded and long-haired and buxom: "All outside investigative agencies should be barred from the campus."

Young man, white - Levied and long sideburned: "But suppose you get robbed?"

Young woman: "We'll let the students and the faculty set up their own organization to deal with things like that."

Quiet, reflective young man: "I'd just as soon have professional cops do the investigating if I get robbed."

Another boy: "Let's add that all recruiting for the R. O. T. C., the F.B.I. and the C.I.A. shall be prohibited"

Another: "Hell, let's prohibit all recruiting . . . well, no, not job recruiting."

An intense argument developed in one small discussion group over semantics. A youth's voice was heard repeating, "Freedom? What do we mean by freedom? We've got to define it . . ."

And then the chairman of that particular small discussion group outshouted the rest. "All right," he said, "we've had plenty of discussion on this sentence. All those in favor of dropping the word 'unfettered' from the sentence designated number one, raise their hands . . ."

A participant, the quiet, reflective young man of a few paragraphs back, abstained with a look of disgust. "What a crock," he said, rubbing his naked chin. "But I suppose it's better than apathy."

Parking Revision Is Made

Continued moaning and groaning brought another change in parking regulations yesterday.

All full-time faculty and administrative personnel will be issued new "F" stickers as soon as they are available.

The "F" stickers will be valid in all University parking lots.

Previously most faculty members had "E" stickers which forced most of them to park some distance from their class buildings.

Until the "F" stickers are distributed all "E" stickers will have access to "D" lots. After this time "D" and "E" stickers will be valid only in their designated lot.

Slots Available

Dean of Men William G. Long, whose office is handling the parking regulations, said, "This change makes all slots in all lots available to faculty members. They will be able to move back and forth now without being encumbered.

"The decision is the result of an obvious difficulty created by the new zoning restrictions. This is another consideration of the program we've had to make after it has gone into operation.

Need Change.

"We're still reviewing the situation and I anticipate that it will probably be necessary to also make some changes in the Bell Tower Parking l o t regulations," Long said.

Last Monday the Traffic and Safety Committee decided to refund $2.50 to the 1,300 students who paid the $5 registration fee and got a "T" sticker.

The refund was made because students with "T" stickers aren't allowed to park anywhere on campus during the restricted hours of 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. Mondays through Fridays, and 7 a.m. to 1 p.m. on Saturdays.

Chancellor Paul F. Sharp announced the creation of a new Traffic and Safety Committees that previously existed — one for Health Affairs and the other for academic affairs. The committee will be headed by Long.

Tar Babies Face WF Today In Kenan

By RON SHINN
DTH Sports Writer

Today's freshman football game between the Tar Babies and the Baby Deacs of Wake Forest has all the markings of a battle between a giant and a runt. UNC is the giant.

Game time is 2 p.m. in Kenan Stadium.

The Tar Babies have 50 ball players on the squad — and that makes them a giant compared with the 28 players Wake will bring over.

Agreed, only 11 men can play at a time, but Carolina's 11 will be bigger. The Tar Baby starting line averages 224 pounds — bigger than the UNC varsity's line — against a Deacon starting unit averaging 215.

The Wake Forest eleven is also an untried crew while UNC is fresh from a 9-0 win over N.C. State.

The Carolina defense proved itself against State by limiting the Wolflets to only 79 yards rushing in its opener and Coach George Barclay hopes for a similar performance today.

Wake Forest must also face a potent Carolina one-two offensive punch in quarterback Gayle Bomar and halfback Dick Wesolowski.

Bomar injured his shoulder on the second play of last week's game but still completed 7 passes for 92 yards. Wesolowski gained 107 yards in 24 carries to gain top rushing honors.

Barclay said that his starting lineup essentially the same as last week's and that his squad is in top physical shape.

Wayne Busick, a 6-1, 210-pound tackle who was sidelined last week with an injury is ready for action. The playing status of guard Frank Coble, another starter hobbled with injuries, won't be known until game time.

Wake Forest Frosh Coach Joe Popp, himself a former UNC grid coach thinks he has an adequate unit for the ACC wars.

Because of the small number on the squad, many will have to go both ways. Popp has been stressing conditioning in an effort to make his team equal to the task.

Barclay expects a rough game from the Deacs.

"They may be small but they have some fine personnel," said Barclay. "They have three boys from the finest high school team in the state last season — Jim Clark, Jimmy Arrington, and Digit Laughridge from Rocky Mount."

Administration Says It Will Not Accept Dual Standard Verdicts

Council Decisions May Be Affected

By ANDY MYERS
DTH Staff Writer

The administration announced yesterday it will "no longer accept or enforce" widely varying penalties for the same honor code violations.

In a letter dated Aug. 26 from Dean of Men William G. Long to student government officials, it was stated that the "dual standards" now in use by the Men's and Women's Honor Councils must stop.

Simultaneously, the Men's Honor Council yesterday admitted the "enormous differences" encountered with the "dual standard" system of penalties now in effect, but countered the administration's letter with the rebuttal:

"The judicial system has been denounced for its inconsistent policy in not treating men and women students equally — hence the 'dual standard.'

"The Men's Council would like to remind the student body that the problem can be traced directly to the social rules under which the students live."

Van MacNair, chairman of the Men's Honor Council, said last night, "There is a basic difference between the rules governing men and women on campus. Women are subject to house rules in dormitories and sororities — there are no comparable rules for men. Because of the difference in the codes that govern the two sexes, the Men's Honor Council recognizes the fact that a double standard does exist.

"Until there can be substantial changes in the rules of conduct for men and women, the Men's Council must deal out penalties which are less severe than those given by the Women's Council.

"I'd like to emphasize that there is no such 'dual standard' under the Honor Code since this applies to all students regardless of sex," he said.

Dean of Student Affairs C.O. Cathey clarified why the letter had not been made public sooner. "The administration was severely worked over in an editorial in the Raleigh Times Wednesday and Chancellor Paul Sharp wanted it answered right away."

The Men's Honor Council said that although "duel standards" were used in enforcing the honor code, the Council based its decisions on "dual restrictions" made on men and women.

"The men are entrusted with a great deal of social freedom which the women do not have; and, therefore, the first logical step toward the elimination of judicial distinction is the equalization of social rules."

Long's letter said: "The contention that a man student's responsibility for a woman student consists only in his refraining from providing any barrier to her abiding by the University regulations . . . . is unacceptable."

Referring to the so-called "doctrine of minimal or negative evidence," the letter said, "it will not be recognized as a legitimate justification for the rendering of an exoneration by student judicial bodies."

The administration letter closely followed the honor council trial of Student Body President Paul Dickson and a coed, who were both convicted for breaking fraternity visiting rules during the summer.

Dickson, a member of Chi Psi fraternity, had been convicted of admitting a coed in to the lodge, and the coed was convicted of staying out all night and entering a closed fraternity.

Dickson received a reprimand and the coed was suspended for the offenses. The coed has since been readmitted to UNC-G.

In explaining his position, Long said: "For a number of years the University has become increasingly concerned about dual standard judicial decisions rendered by student judicial bodies.

"I know that this concern has been shared by many student government leaders. The most common form of this phenomenon is to be found when a man and woman students are each charged with Campus Code offenses based upon action that was common to both, and the disciplinary sentences imposed are widely disparate.

"From time to time we have also had instances in which students involved in the same violation of the Honor Code have received different penalties," the letter said.

Copies of Long's letter were mailed to, Vice Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson; Dean C. Hugh Holman; Dean C. O. Cathey; Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael; Dr. Raymond H. Dawson, chairman of the faculty committee on student discipline; the chairmen of the law, medical and dental school courts; the chairman of the honor council commission; President of the Student Body Paul Dickson; Vice President Britt Gordon; and Women's Attorney General Grey Reeves.

LOVELY PATSY PUCKETT, Miss Mississippi, arrived here last night in connection with "Operation Match." She will be in Raleigh this morning and will travel back to Chapel Hill for a noon press conference at the Kappa Sigma house. At that time, her "ideal date" for the football game and banquet will be announced.

Shunning Dickson 'Like 6-Year-Old' Legislator Says

By JOHN GREENBACKER
DTH Political Writer

Representative Frank Longest (SP) criticised the University administration for not recognizing Paul Dickson as the elected representative of the student body in a speech before Student Legislature Thursday night.

Longest referred to the University's recent decision to invite senior class president John Harmon as the official student body representative at University Day proceedings instead of Dickson.

"I believe that this is a personal slam not only to our president, but to the entire student body," Longest said.

"Paul Dickson is our elected president," he said, "and he should continue to represent the student body at all official occasions until such time as he might be removed.

Six-Year-Old

"This decision reminds me of a six-year-old who will not invite a friend to his birthday party because the friend hasn't done the things he wanted," Longest said.

"I hope the faculty will reconsider their decision and act in a more mature and responsible manner."

Dickson has been under criticism from members of the faculty, University administration and student body since his conviction last summer for a Campus Code violation.

Longest's statement was made over the protests of University Party Floor Leader George Ingram, who implored all members of the legislature not to mention the subject any more.

The legislature voted to send three bills establishing a campus carrier current radio system back to committee after a predominately Student Party majority defeated a move to have the bills tabled.

The motion to table the bills, made by Ingram, would have by-passed any further discussion on the bills in committee.

Radio Bills

Finance Committee chairman Hugh Blackwell (SP), who lead the fight in SL last spring to keep the radio bills in committee for further study spoke against Ingram's motion.

"There are numerous individuals who still wish to express their opinions and offer information about campus radio," Blackwell said. "It would be wrong to cut them off without having their say in the matter.

Blackwell promised the legislature that the campus radio bills would be discharged from committee within two weeks after the results of the Oct. 5 campus-wide referendum on the issue are known.

Ingram opposed the bills' return to committee because he said the radio proposals had been discussed enough by the committees.

Ingram's motion was defeated in a nearly partisan vote.

The body passed a resolution sponsored by Sharon Rose (SP) calling for the availability of more doctors to treat students at the UNC infirmary.

Redistricting

The legislature also passed a bill redistricting the representative areas of the Men's Council.

A bill requiring residents of Morrison, Craige and Ehringhaus residence halls to vote in campus elections at polls set up inside their residence halls passed with little discussion.

This bill will insure against election fraud and will save students from those areas the time and effort of having to vote in Y-court.

Sandy Hobgood (SP) defeated Jim Smith (UP) for the chairmanship of the Ways and Means Committee in a partisan vote of the body.

Last Murder Suspect Is Released

Chapel Hill Police Chief William Blake said yesterday that the latest lead in the Suellen Evans case proved to be a dead end when the suspect was given a lie detector test.

The 50th suspect to be questioned in the case readily submitted to the test at SBI headquarters in Raleigh after being questioned Tuesday in Raleigh after being questioned Tuesday in Chapel Hill Blake reported.

"When we gave him the lie detector test he came clean," Blake said. The man, a Negro, denied any involvement in the July 30 knifing in the arboretum. Blake noted that several more suspects are still sought.

About 1,000 of the 3,000 letters the department is mailing out have been sent, he said. The latest suspect was the result of a mailed reply from one of the coeds who attended summer school here.

"We've gotten lots of replies, so far," Chief Blake said, "but most of the incidents we were already familiar with." He added that a large increase in traffic tickets in the past few weeks has diverted the attention of his staff away from the case.

Blake said he is still interested in any information, no matter how unimportant it might seem.

NAACP Discusses 'Test Rush' Plan

By FRED THOMAS
and BILL OTIS
DTH Staff Writers

UNC NAACP Thursday night discussed the possibility of "test rushes" for the purpose of establishing a "pattern of discrimination" in campus fraternities.

Charles Miller presided over the group of 23 in Alumni Building and outlined several areas for action this year, including fraternities, athletic teams, campus speakers, faculty make-up and recruiting Negro students.

Concerning the possibility of integrating UNC's fraternity system, it was pointed out that the Greek organizations operate on the principle that any member of a fraternity may reject a candidate for membership for any personal reason.

A suggestion was made that perhaps some effort should be made to change this system.

The generally agreed-upon objective was to establish a "pattern of discrimination" in the fraternity system by having Negro students participate in rush.

This, several members expressed hope, would "embarrass" the fraternities.

One member of the group of 23 suggested that they concentrate on professional fraternities first since, membership in these oganizations can "materially affect" a student's future well-being.

Athletics was the area decided upon for most immediate action due to the high athletic interest during football season.

It was also noted that enthusiasm would be more difficult to arouse when exams and vacations start.

A committee was appointed to negotiate with proper authorities concerning the recruiting of Negro athletes for UNC teams.

To abet this effort, one member suggested that the NAACP publicize the fact that "our teams are all white."

By concentrating attention on this fact, the group could hope to "embarrass" athletic authorities, he said.

At this point the group's attention was diverted to the question of UNC NAACP's relations with the press — specificially The Daily Tar Heel.

It was suggested that a report of the meeting be written and submitted to the DTH, but the group decided against doing this after one member noted that they might have better results in their campaign with the athletic department if officials did not have prior knowledge that they were coming with questions for them.

"We want to catch them offguard in hopes that they will slip and say something that they would not have told us otherwise," he said.

Athletic Director Chuck Erickson told the Daily Tar Heel yesterday afternoon that the Athletic Department does not, and has not in the past practiced racial discrimination in recruiting athletes.

"If a boy is athletic and academically qualified, we want him — regardless of his color," he said.

On the subject of speaker programs for the year, some of the more fiery members of the group said that they favored having "good speakers, regardless of their status under the "speaker ban law."

However, many, including President Charles Miller, seemed reluctant to have speakers whose right to speak on campus might be questionable, because it would bring discredit to the sponsoring organization.

Reference was made to Carl Braden, whom UNC NAACP sponsored last year.

Braden was refused the privilege to speak on campus by the administration due to his apparently falling under the jurisdiction of the speaker ban.

Concerning the matter of getting more Negro students into UNC, Miller told the group that they must do their own job of recruiting.

It was suggested that members of UNC NAACP go back to their high school and carry the good tidings of Carolina, explaining that Negroes at UNC ". . . do not really sleep in closets. . .".

The faculty was mentioned at the opening of the meeting as one of the group's interests this year.

Miller told the group that to his knowledge the faculty here is all white.

Chancellor Paul F. Sharp told the DTH yesterday that he did not feel that he could make any comment until talking with NAACP representatives and finding out just what their plans are.

He did note, however, that Dr. David K. Hall, a Negro, is a clinical instructor in the University's Department of Oral Surgery.

Buchwald: 'Throw Garbage On The Lawn'

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

RALEIGH — Art Buchwald — the columnist who laughs rather than cries "because it pays better" — sold his squeals to more than 600 persons Thursday night at N.C. State.

"I am not now nor have I ever been a member of the Communist party," he said as he assured the audience he wasn't violating the speaker ban law.

"At one time, however, I did belong to the Book of the Month Club."

To satisfy the American Legion, Buchwald called for a redistribution of the country's communists. "Each small town should have a resident communist," he suggested, "so that people could throw garbage on his lawn."

Then Buchwald began telling his life's story, explaining that most people "think I have the world's best job. And if you look at it objectively from all sides, I do."

When the humorist received his $250 veteran's bonus after serving in the Marines, he wondered how he should spend it. "Why don't you go to Paris?" a friend asked. "The streets are paved with mattresses."

Buddy-Buddy

Buchwald heeded the advice and was buddy-buddy with all the girls on his boat while crossing the Atlantic. Supposedly they thought the well-padded humorist could help unload their belongings when they reached Europe since he looked like a stevedore.

Arriving in Paris, Buchwald wasn't worried about finding work. "The Marshall plan was the GI bill for foreign countries . . . They wanted Americans so badly you could apply as an office boy and be put in charge of steel production for the Benelux countries."

The New York Herald Tribune hired Buchwald for its Paris edition and soon had him reviewing films. He admitted he usually gave them rough ratings because he couldn't understand French.

He said his other employer was the Central Intelligence Agency. Every third word in his columns, he claims, was a tip - off for CIA agents who saw the satires in Pravda Buchwald hopes the columns were translated accurately.

During the Eisenhower administration, he gave his version of a typical press briefing by former Press Secretary James Hagerty. The transcript read:

"Good Night"

"Hagerty: The President went to bed at 11:06 tonight.

"Q. Jim, did the President speak to anyone before retiring?

"A. He spoke to the Secretary of State.

"Q. What did he say to the Secretary of State, Jim?

"A. He said: 'Good night, Foster.'"

Buchwald did not extensively quote the transcript in front of the Raleigh audience, but he did tell what happened after the column's publication.

". . . a communist block for every community . . ."

"Eisenhower held a real news conference to deny the remarks attributed to him. He told his press Secretary: 'Simmer down, Jim, simmer down' — and that was the last forthright statement Eisenhower ever made."

The satirist promised the DTH after his talk that he himself has no political ambitions, but earlier he announced he had volunteered for the Peace Corps. "I wanted to go to the French Riveria . . . to share the native customs . . . but I was turned down for the job . . . Sarge Shriver had already applied for it."

Inconveniences

When he returned to America, he found "there were many little things I had to get used to — like paying taxes."

Buchwald very much feared the atomic threat posed by the Cuban missile crisis. "Some people were hawks . . . Some were doves . . . and I was a chicken."

After he began writing about President Johnson, Buchwald decided to see if the chief executive had a sense of humor. Buchwald discovered that back at the LBJ ranch his one of his columns about the President was being passed from advisor to advisor. "They all chuckled until Johnson looked it over . . . When he didn't laugh, the advisors asked to read it again."

Discussing his talk's announced topic — "Criticism and the Press" — Buchwald said the papers weren't fair to Goldwater. "They quoted him."

LBJ's Gift

The nationally syndicated funnyman believes President Johnson selected Hubert Humphrey as vice president because he hadn't invited the senator to dinner. "I had to make it up to him somehow," Buchwald quoted the President as saying.

"The real reason Johnson didn't send Humphrey to Churchill's funeral was that he couldn't look sad," Buchwald explained.

Giving the dope on his famous campus sex survey ("I made all the results up myself"), Buchwald reported one Yale man said: "A boy should be able to say no to a girl without hurting her feelings."

Another student declined to have an affair "during the happiest years of my life."

Still another remarked: "Fortunately, that subject has never come up."

Music Is In The Air — It's Band Day At Kenan

John Sousa, W. C. Hany and Robert Preston would enjoy seeing what happens at half time in Kenan Stadium today.

More than two - thousand high school musicians will create a scene that could come right out of "The Music Men."

There'll also be 210 majorettes and 75 color guards.

The young musicians will perform "America the Beautiful" and the Broadway musical "Sound of Music."

Participating schools are:

Allen Jay High School, High Point; Apex High School; Bladenboro High School; Claremont Central High of Hickory; East Southern Pines; Elkin High School; Fayetteville Senior High School; Four Oaks High School; and Guilford High School.

Also Hoke County High School; J. F. Webb High School, Oxford; John A. Wilkinson School, Belhaven; Jordan High School, Durham; Kings Mountain High School; Laurel Hill Public School; Lenoir High School; Louisburg High School; and Lumberton High School.

Also Meadow High School; Millbrook High School; Mooresville Junior High School; Millbrook Senior High School; Newton - Conover High School; Northern High School, Durham; North Mecklenburg High School, Huntersville; Orange High School, Hillsborough; and Princeton High School.

Also Ragsdale High School, Jamestown; Reidsville Senior High School; Robersonville High School; Roxboro High School; Selma High School; Southern Wayne High School, Mount Olive; Wakelon High School, Zebulon; West Carteret High School, Morehead City; Whiteville High School; Hobbton High School, Newton Grove, and Lincolnton High.

What Has Happened?

By ROBERT E. BAKER
The Washington Post

RALEIGH — What has happened to North Carolina?

For many years the Tar Heel state has been the symbol of racial moderation and progressive thought in the South.

When other state universities in the South were silent under the impending racial crisis, the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill was publishing studies on the Negro and its professors were discussing the issue openly with students.

When other Southern governors were shouting defiance to the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision, North Carolina's governors were talking compliance.

When other Southern state legislatures were passing segregation laws by the potful, North Carolina's lawmakers in general were acting with calm, composure and good sense.

And it was North Carolina that provided the nation and the South with a much needed laugh during the tense and hectic days of 1958, when the Lumbee Indians, with shotguns, tear gas and war whoops, routed a rally of Wizard James "Catfish" Cole and his Ku Klux Klan on a field near Maxton.

These were the things that helped give North Carolina a sparkling image as the home of moderate, progressive, friendly folk who took pardonable pride in twitting South Carolina to the south and Virginia to the north by voicing an old saying:

"North Carolina is a vale of humility between two mountains of conceit."

But today, disturbing things are going on in the vale.

The Ku Klux Klan seems to be on the rise and recently Gov. Dan K. Moore held an audience with the Grand Dragon. The governor has appointed North Carolina's most vociferous segretationist, I. Beverly Lake, to the State Supreme Court.

And North Carolina is the only state in the union to have a "speaker-ban" law aimed directly at the University at Chapel Hill, a law which the mountains of conceit, Virginia and South Carolina, refused to enact and which even Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama could not get through his legislature.

All of this is disturbing to many North Carolinians and to her friends throughout the nation. Perhaps it is not as bad as it seems.

North Carolina's good image was the result of a fortunate 11 years under Gov. Luther H. Hodges and Terry Sanford, two men with the capacity to lead, and push when necessary, the state into progress, with highway, industrial development and educational programs of vision and challenge.

But in 1963, during Sanford's term, a spiteful session of the legislature enacted in a few minutes the speaker-ban law which prohibits Communists or those persons who have pleaded the Fifth Amendment in loyalty cases from speaking at state-supported colleges.

Now the fact is that you could cram all the Communists and Fifth Amendment-takers in North Carolina into an outhouse.

But the legislature supporters of the ban were not concerned about Communists. They were simply mad because Negroes and whites were demonstrating for open public accommodations at the Sir Walter Hotel in Raleigh, making it untidy for lawmakers who made their home there.

Among the white demonstrators were a couple of UNC faculty members. Refusal of the University to fire them led to the retaliatory speaker-ban law.

The next image-tarnisher came last year in the Democratic primary campaign for governor, featuring a spectrum choice of L. Richardson Preyer a liberal; Lake, the outspoken segregationist, and Moore, a man from the mountains who pictured himself as a middle-of-the-road conservative.

In the first primary, Preyer came in first, followed by Moore and Lake. Loser Lake then endorsed Moore in the second primary and with all the hard-core segregationist votes solidly in his camp, Moore trounced Preyer.

It looked like a political deal between Moore and Lake. And, recently, when Moore appointed Lake to the State Supreme Court, most everybody said: "Ah, hah, the payoff."

Moore also fired three department heads, including George W. Randall, director of prisons, whose successful reforms have made the North Carolina prison system a model in the nation.

Moderates immediately suspected that Randall was fired because he had desegregated the prisons. But more likely the truth is that Moore penalized Randall for overt support of Preyer, his foe, last year.

Moore invited additional criticism by conferring in the capitol recently with Grand Dragon Robert Jones whose Klan has been surging in the state.

Yet, the governor, a former Superior Court judge, was not gentle with the Dragon, telling him to obey the law or face the consequences.

A few days later, Klansmen showed their displeasure by picketing Moore in Kinston.

There are gusts that buffet North Carolina's proud banner of moderation, but it is the speaker-ban storm that is tattering it.

Moore inherited the law when he took office last January. And then was his opportunity to persuade the legislature to get rid of it. North Carolina's governors are strongest during the first session of the legislature — when they have appointments and programs and favors to bargain with. But Moore did not move.

Now the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools has threatened to remove accreditation from the state's colleges because of the law. Moore has appointed a blue-ribbon commission, with nary a Lake supporter on it, to study the situation and report.

At recent hearings, former governor (and commerce secretary) Hodges said the law damaged the state and its institutions and many other witnesses agreed. Supporters said the majority of North Carolinians favor the law and besides, what's wrong with keeping Commies off campuses?

Deputy Attorney General Ralph Moody contended the law was constitutional: Professor William Van Alstyne of Duke University filed a brief saying it was not.

The Moody-Van Alstyne feud continued in the press after the hearings. In a letter to the commission, Moody said the legislature could use "the power of the purse" to enforce the ban even if it were declared unconstitutional. And he questioned what business Van Alstyne had in the whole affair since Duke is a private university not affected.

There is a theory to explain North Carolina's present situation: its image had shone so brightly and high under Governors Hodges and Sanford that observers were blinded to the troubles beneath. Now, with a more conservative governor who is not so much in a hurry and who gained office with the help of the segregationist vote, these previously muffled voices and problems are coming to the surface.

And that is North Carolina's challenge, to deal with these left over problems and solve them with the good sense, temper and progress that has marked her past.

Few people doubt that North Carolina will succeed, for her momentum for progress has been firmly established. And the opposition is like the drunk who was so irritated by the noise of passing trains nearby that he staggered from the bar, stood defiantly on the tracks and swung at an onrushing locomotive with a baseball bat.

The Ban Is Bad Law Even If Constitutional

Of the thousands of words written and spoken about North Carolina's speaker ban law, some have concerned the merits or demerits of the statute, some, its constitutionality, and many — too many — the personalities supporting and opposing it. The first two points are worthy of discussion. Arguments on the third are largely a waste of time. A law is good or bad because of what it does, not because of who is in favor of it.

The fire and heat of the arguments on this issue have generated a considerable amount of smoke in the form of irrelevant statements which only confuse the situation. Both supporters and opponents of the ban have been guilty of this error. As a student at UNC, I am concerned about the fate of the ban. As a citizen of another state — Louisiana — I can view the issue with a degree of objectivity that the length and intensity of the fight may now make difficult for North Carolinians.

While I admire the ostensible motive behind the law — I don't like communism, either — I believe the ban should be repealed. Any law which limits the information available to the people is a hindrance to our form of government which is based on an educated, informed people. A law which places such a restriction on the basis of what a few people, or a state legislature, think is good for the people to know is dangerous. It is a step toward state control of the information channcels. If it is dangerour to hear a communist speak, it is dangerous to read communist material. A logical next step would be to remove the writings of Karl Marx from public libraries. An attempt could be made to cut off all sources of information on the beliefs and meanings of communism. Would this be good?

We are engaged in a fight with the communists. In some areas, such as Viet Nam, it is an open, armed fight. In others, it is a fight for men's minds. In this latter fight, knowledge is our weapon, knowledge of both our system and the enemy's. To limit access to knowledge of communism is to make a dangerous admission, namely, that there might be something attractive in what the communists have to say. I am sure that none of the advocates of the speaker ban law believe that the communist system is superior to ours. Why not let the communists speak and expose the weaknesses in their beliefs?

Moreover, as matters now stand, the law is futile. Apparently, its backers want to keep students from being exposed to and contaminated with communist beliefs and propaganda. Yet only a total censorship of all communications media, which fortunately has not been suggested, could hope to achieve this goal. The current law has about the same effect on the dissemination of communist information that blindfolding half of one eye has on vision: it is a nuisance, but not a serious impediment. Books newspapers, television and other mass media do much more to spread this information than do campus lecturers.

So much for the value of the law. What about its constitutionality? This question, while of some relevance, has, I believe, received too much attention. A debate on this subject tends to obscure the fundamental issue: Is this a good or bad law? Laws can be constitutional and still be bad laws. The mere fact that a law is constitutional does not mean that it should remain on the books. Personally, I think the law is constitutional with regard to the ban on communists; but I have my doubts that the invoking of a constitutional right — taking the Fifth Amendment — can be made the basis for a penalty.

In the bitterness of the fight over the speaker ban, both sides have resorted to weapons other than relevant arguments. They have done little besides confusing the case and increasing the ill feeling. Blackmail has been tried by both sides. The opponents of the ban have held up the threat of loss of accreditation by North Carolina's colleges. The ban's defenders have hinted at possible curtailment of funds for the colleges if the ban is repealed. Neither of the actions threatened has any relevance to the speaker ban. It is nonsense to suppose that mere permission for communists to speak on campus (without even assurance that any will come or that any students will listen) is on a par with such factors as quality of faculty, curriculum and library facilities. The existence of the ban does not justify withdrawal of accreditation.

Neither does its repeal justify withdrawal of funds from the colleges in this state. Such action would hardly hurt the communist cause. It would only hurt the students—and the state of North Carolina.

Another reason sometimes given for repeal is that the existence of the ban hurts North Carolina's image in the eyes of the nation. While the ban certainly doesn't help this image, I don't think it hurts it much, either. The issue is simply not important news elsewhere. Most people don't know North Carolina has a speaker ban law and probably wouldn't care if they did know.

In short, the speaker ban law may be constitutional and well-motivated. It is still a bad law; and for that reason alone it should be repealed. In attempting to restrict the free flow of ideas and information, it may be the start of a trend toward total state control of this flow. Such a trend should be halted now.

Letters To The Editor

Chase Manager Answers Critics

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

We at Chase Cafeteria appreciate the interest of the six students from Morrison who wrote in with their suggestions about the food and service encountered at this new dining hall.

After being open for just a week, we are gratified with the tolerance and understanding of our efforts to establish good food and quick cheerful service at low prices.

The building was due for completion in July to enable us to move in with furnishings, utensils, supplies and food; to train the new employees and to get accustomed to the new equipment. As it turned out, construction difficulties delayed the completion to the worst possible time—the evening before classes began.

The letter in Sunday's Daily Tar Heel also mentioned the inadequate capacity of the automatic ice dispensing machines. This is only one item among many others on six solid pages of defects which must be corrected.

I know the patrons who dine at Chase aren't interested in all the obstacles we are trying to overcome, but you can believe that the management and staff are bending every effort to provide for their satisfaction.

Mention was made of having only two lines. Since Chase is using the new "scramble system" serving area, the efficiency is considerably increased. Even at the start, with the patrons and servers being new at getting used to the system, the speed of the "line" is about double the time it takes to go through the line at Lenoir.

I know everyone in Chapel Hill is proud and delighted with the beautiful new cafeteria building, and we have been gratified with the enthusiastic encouragement and response already received.

Solution Given For Rams Head

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

One more letter in regard to campus parking. We hope the administration will examine our complaint and follow what we consider to be a constructive suggestion.

We have been informed that there is a drastic shortage of available parking spaces on campus. Then why, may we ask, does the Rams Head parking lot remain totally empty, except on weekends? Our regulation bulletin states that the Rams Head lot is to be used by "C" and "H" stickered automobiles. After a week's surveillance of parking at the Rams Head, we have complied the interesting statistic that no more than 30 cars ever park in the "C" and "H" area, except on football weekends — when the lot is reserved for Carolina Athletic Association anyway! At the same time, the members of Ehringhaus, Craige and gigantic Morrison are in constant competition for the few choice spaces in the Craige lot. Solution? Why not make the Rams Head lot a "C", "H", and "G" lot on Monday-Friday? Our economics majors inform us that this would be the "proper" utilization of available space. Well? Why Not!

Computer Love?

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I would like to suggest that this school sponsor a computer dance, based on the principle of Operation Match. Each student could pay a small fee and fill out an application which would then be matched with a supposedly compatible form filled out by a member of the opposite sex.

This would be a dance composed of all schools of the University of North Carolina. I'm sure that this kind of dance is possible because other schools have done it. Please print this letter and ask for other people's opinion.

Uncooked Pork Is 'Gross' Meal

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I feel that, in the interest of all students, this letter should be published; and if it cannot be published, please be sure that it reaches the Lenoir Hall management.

I am not one who really enjoys breakfast anyway, but half-cooked sausage is quite gross at 7:30 a.m. or anytime for that matter. Cold eggs, toast, etc., and warm orange juice are both tolerable and semi-understandable; they cannot make anyone ill — rare sausage can, though.

Anyone having had just an introductory biology course knows about the sometimes deadly trichina worm. Any biology book states that this parasite is most dangerous in pork that is not cooked enough.

Attention Lenoir Hall Manage:

For the sake of us "po'k loving' tar heels," please cook that sausage well done. Thank you for what I hope will be quick action.

'Art For Art's Sake'

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Columnist

Art Buchwald talked with me last summer after he discovered my concern over articles in Newsweek and Time, which, I felt, had slandered and misquoted the famed columnist.

To set things straight, I had offered to interview him for The Daily Tar Heel.

But first I promised I wouldn't:

1. Say he looks like a panda.
2. Call him a court jester.
3. Say he arises "grouchily."
4. Quote him as saying his favorite book is Catcher in the Rye.
5. Suggest that taxi fares be raised. (He spends nearly $800 a year to get from place to place because he doesn't drive.)

I assured him I would:

1. Call his planned ABC program "The Buchwald-Capp Report"—even if TV Guide has it the other way around.
2. Short-circuit our shop's computer should it ever again print his column upside down.
3. Avoid calling him simple and unpretentious.

I couldn't, however, guarantee that my editor would not use a pun like "Art for Art's Sake" in the headline above the interview.

Just as eager as I to correct Newsweek and Time, Buckwald agreed to be questioned. But he insisted it wouldn't take long — "since I talk very fast."

The interview lasted 75 minutes.

On the walls of his Washington office were mounted crackpot letters that only a columnist like Buchwald can collect. He exhibited these sourvenirs of his trade as members of a German dueling team would display their scars, a fisherman his biggest catch, or a press agent a photo of his best stacked client.

Later, I thanked him for his time. My letter went something like this:

Dear Mr. Buchwald:

Thank you for the interview. Enclosed is the article. If you don't like it, please write me a nasty letter which I can frame and show to any Herald Tribune columnists who might visit the DTH office to write a story about me.

And sure enough, I got what I asked for.

"Dear Mr. Rothman," the letter began. "I very much appreciated the interview which more or less quoted me as I had said it.

"The only thing you left out was my demand for royalties from The Daily Tar Heel.

"This letter may not be printed after my death."

Is UNC A Parent?

Dean of Men William Long and several student leaders as a panel will discuss Sunday night the question "Is the University A Parent?"

The discussion will center on the changing understanding of "in loco parentis," the idea that the University should function as a parent to its students. It will be held in the Presbyterian Student Center on Henderson Street at 5:30 p.m. October 3.

Other panel members besides Dean Long are Jim McCorkle, UNC Students for a Democratic Society; Leith Merrow, Chairman, Women's Honor Council; Eric Van Loon, National Student Association Campus Coordinator; and Daniel Pollitt, UNC Law Professor.

'Mikado' Opens Playmakers' Season

Tickets go on sale Thursday for the Carolina Playmakers' season - opening production of Gilbert and Sullivan's "Mikado."

Sixteen years ago, the Playmakers staged the world-renowned musical with student-actor Andy Griffith playing Ko-Ko and Barbara Edwards, Griffith's real-life wife, in the role of Yum-Yum.

To be performed Oct. 15 through 17 in Memorial Hall, the play features Prof. Walter Smith of London, England, as Ko-Ko dramatics major Anne Peacock as Yum-Yum; UNC Glee Club Director Joel Carter as the Mikado; Kenneth Smith of Los Angeles as Pooh-Bah; James Slaughter of Kannapolis as Pish-Tush; Campbell Read of Edinburg, Scotland, as Nanki-Poo; Margaret Buxton of National City, Calif., as Katisha; and Susan Quinn and Judy Logan, both of Chapel Hill, as Pitti-Sing and Peep-Bo.

A chorus of 32 "Ladies and Gentlemen of Japan" and 20 Musicians, playing the original D'Oyly Carte orchestrations, complete the performing company.

Foster Fitz-Simons, veteran Playmakers director-choreographer, is staging this new interpretation of "The Mikado," with James Holmes, composer of "Con Amore," assisting as musical director and conductor.

Season tickets for the year's five major productions are still available.

Don't waste time on cards or roulette.
Make money fast — just place your bet.

Well, I guess it's time I cracked down on a few ACC football teams. You'll have to admit, I've been understanding the first two weekends of the season.

For example, I've let those Clemson Tigers win their first two games over Virginia and N. C. State. I allowed Maryland to beat Ohio University in their opener last Saturday. I even permitted Wake Forest to lose by close margins in their first two games.

Fauntleroy Disguised

Of course, you Tar Heel fans are probably worried about my Duke policy. I have let them win their first two games. But don't worry — I have plans for those boys.

So here goes:

UPSET SPECIAL: Winston Coeds over Alexander (Sex Bowl).

GEORGIA TECH over CLEMSON: I think it's about time I cracked the whip on Frank Howard's boys. If you let those Tigers win too many, ol' Frank will start thinking he has a good team. If that happens, he'll start telling the sports writers about it and we'll have a big mess. Better let Tech take this one.

SYRACUSE over MARYLAND: Tom Nugent will have his "I" dotted today. He'll have his goal line crossed, too.

DUKE over RICE: I'm building the Devils up for the kill. Let them have this one.

VANDERBILT over WAKE FOREST: I've thought about this all week. Let Vandy have it — I never really liked Deacons anyway.

SOUTH CAROLINA over N. C. STATE: Let's help those Gamecocks out. I am understanding once in a while. The birds have been flying low for a while so things should begin to pick up.

MICHIGAN over GEORGIA: Tar Heel fans might be interested in this one. The Wolverines should have an easier time with the Bulldogs than they did with Carolina.

Other games:

ALABAMA over MISSISSIPPI
OKLAHOMA over NAVY
V.P.I. over WILLIAM & MARY
DAVIDSON over THE CITADEL
SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA over OREGON STATE

Runners Win Cakes

Joe Lasich and Darius Hinnant captured first place in the Open and Novice Divisions, respectively, in Thursday's Intramural Cake Race.

Eleven starters were off at 4:30 in the Open, with Lasich coming home first with a time of 6:47 for the mile-and-a-half race. Second was James Hoteling with a time of 6:55 and third was Truett Goodwin at 7:03.3.

Hinnant beat 11 other runners in the Novice with a 7:20.6 time. Close behind was Bob Everett at 7:22.5 and third was last year's Novice winner, Bill Horn, at 7:35.6.

Lasich is from Hagerstown, Md., where he was the state indoor and outdoor two mile champion. Hoteling, from Chapel Hill, went to Virginia Episcopal High School and was the state Prep mile champion. Goodwin was the North Carolina state mile and cross country champ. All three boys are on the freshman track team. Everett is from Ehringhaus.

Booters Dump Falcons, 4-0

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

Carolina's soccermen rode the slight edge provided by Jim Johnston's second-quarter goal through a third of the final period, and then splurged for three more scores in blanking the Air Force Academy 4-0 in yesterday's opening match.

An elated Coach Marvin Allen remarked after the battle: "We played excellent soccer out there today. It was a fine all-round team effort. Yes, you can say that I was very well-pleased with this showing in the opening match."

Co-captain and goalie Tom Roberts had this to say: "I agree with Coach Allen. It was a great team victory, and everybody who played contributed to it. This is just the first of a lot more to come!"

Carolina dominated the first quarter completely, with that stanza being played almost entirely in AFA territory. The Blue and White was unable to get a successful series going, however, and the second period began a new ball game.

Play was a little more evenly matched after the clubs switched goals. But with 13:07 having elapsed, soph center forward Jim Johnston maneuvered for the first of his two goals.

Johnston gained possession just in front of the Falcon goal, but his first attempt was blocked beautifully by AFA goalie Hans Mueh. The UNC steady recovered quickly, however, and footed the ball into the nets for a 1-0 lead.

In the first half, Carolina's swift defense kept the Falcons from firing a single shot. On the other hand, the Tar Heels took twelve shots.

The flyboys improved their play in the third quarter, but all six of their shots were staved off nicely by Roberts and reserve goalie Bob Johnson, who gave a good account also.

The Allenmen continued to fire away at the enemy's net, and with 14:10 left in the final go-round, Johnson took a pass from center forward Drew Murphy and slammed his second tally for a 2-0 spread.

It took Carolina just over six minutes to bag its final score. This one came with 4:23 remaining, and was counted by Drew Murphy on an assist pass from Johnston.

Tar Heels Hit Virginia, Davis At Halfback Slot

By PAT STITH
DTH Sports Editor

A Charlotte newspaper said Bob Davis will play second halfback when the Cavaliers of Virginia meet North Carolina at Kenan Stadium this afternoon.

But don't you believe it. Davis is about as likely to ride the bench as Danny Talbott—less likely, in fact.

Many have called him the ACC's best quarterback as a sophomore last season. Certainly his statistics speak well enough for him — 1,481 total yards, good enough for third place among ACC backs for all time.

He averaged a 6.2 yard gain every time he touched the ball, passing for 1,054 yards and averaging five yards a carry for 436 yards on the ground.

But cold statistics couldn't begin to tell the real story about this Bob Davis. North Carolina found out last fall, when it lost to Davis 31-28, that when you zig, he zags.

Carolina is not the only team he hurt. He ran 88 yards for a score against N. C. State and ran and passed for 334 yards against Wake Forest. Both marks are all-time Virginia records.

So far this year, they say he hasn't been his old self. But UNC Coach Jim Hickey has been telling his boys, no doubt, that even if this Davis is a dud, treat him like live ammo.

Virginia comes into today's game without a win — Duke whipped it 21-7 and Clemson won 20-14.

In those games, playing quarterback, Davis has run for 42 yards in 11 carries and hit 13 of 28 passes with three interceptions.

Today, senior Tom Hodges will call signals and Davis will be listed as a reserve left halfback. It is a safe bet, however, that he won't be in reserve long, if at all.

This is the 70th game in the UNC-UVa. series, dating back to 1892. It is the longest and most continuous of the South's major college football rivalries.

Carolina had won six straight from the Cavaliers until last year's defeat. It was the first loss to Virginia under Hickey, who came to Carolina as head coach in 1959.

The win was Virginia's first inside the conference in three years—and they haven't won one since.

Carolina comes into today's game fresh from one of the greatest victories in its 77 year history. The Tar Heels upset Ohio State University 14-3 before 80,000 fans at Columbus.

About 35,000 are expected for the 1:30 p.m. kickoff. It is Band Day and about 2,500 musicians will perform at halftime.

Carolina fans will be anxious for a took at the Tar Heel defensive unit, which absorbed a punishing Ohio State attack last week and yielded only three points.

Offensively the backs to watch are Max Chapman, who set up Carolina's first touchdown and cut through the Buckeye line on a 48 yard run for the capper. And, of course, Talbott.

Campus Radio Referendum Gives Students Their Voice

By JOHN GREENBACKER
DTH Political Writer

Students will be allowed to voice their choice on whether they favor the establishment of a campus radio system Tuesday during a campus-wide referendum on the issue.

The results of the referendum will undoubtedly influence Student Legislature when bills establishing the radio are sent from committee to the floor for final debate.

The carrier current radio would provide students with low - power AM-FM programming, which would consist of music and campus news.

According to plans for the radio system's construction, the signal would originate in on-campus studios, and would be relayed to a transmitting tower for broadcast.

If campus radio becomes a reality it will work like this:

The tower will broadcast with the power of five watts over an FM frequency, and this signal will travel within a five mile radius of Chapel Hill.

Conversion of the FM signal to AM for the benefit of students living in campus residence halls will be accomplished by FM receivers and AM transmitters.

These units will be located in all campus residence halls or residence hall areas.

The AM transmitters will send the newly converted signals through the existing power lines in each building.

The AM signal will be radiated by the power lines into each room, and the overall range of the signal will not exceed 50 yards of each building.

Students living in these halls will be able to pick the signal up on a set frequency of their AM radio dial.

The campus radio station will be registered with the Federal Communications Commission as a non-commercial, educational station.

The radio is scheduled to broadcast between the hours of 3 p.m. and 2 a.m., and will feature music programming of various types in proportion to the percentage results of a campus poll to be held on the subject.

The radio system will cost an estimated $34,800 to be established and operated during the first year, and will cost about $11,000 to operate each successive year.

Money for the project, if approved by Student Legislature, will be provided by a Student Government surplus fund of over $70,000 which has been accumulating since 1946.

Critics of the radio proposals have pointed to the expense of the system and the fact that students not living in campus residence halls will not receive AM signals under the original plans.

The campus radio proposals were translated into concrete legislation last year by former Student Body Vice President Don Carson and the current chairman of the Campus Radio Committee, John Stupak.

Campus radio has become "must" legislation of the Paul Dickson administration.

Pledge Sororities

Nine Chapel Hill girls are included in a total of 166 UNC coeds who pledged social sororities on campus following fall rush.

ALPHA DELTA PI – Susan Barron and Judith Fletcher; CHI OMEGA OMEGA – Anne Elizabeth Dye, Sarah Lane Ivey, Barbara Lalanne, and Rebecca Tatum; DELTA DELTA DELTA – Katherine Pierson Talbert; KAPPA KAPPA GAMMA – Joan Carol Archer and Lee Fambrough.

RUSH

Fall rush begins tomorrow night at all UNC social fraternities.

All sophomore, junior and senior transfer students and UNC students with above-freshman standing who have at least a 2.0 quality point average are eligible to participate.

Rush hours will be from 7-9:30 p.m. Monday and from 7-9 p.m. Tuesday and Wednesday.

Frank Martin, IFC president, said yesterday that he urges all eligible students who have any interest in fraternities to participate in rush, whether or not they anticipate joining a fraternity this fall.

It is not necessary for a student to have an invitation from a fraternity in order to visit that house.

Martin explained that many fraternities did not send any rush invitations but will be holding rush.

'Seven Basic Threats To Academic Freedom'

Former Consolidated University president Dr. Frank Porter Graham said in a talk on the N. C. State University campus last night that the state was in the midst of a "decisive turn in the history of freedom" in state education.

The former U. S. Senator and present mediator to the United Nations cited seven situations as the most threatening to academic freedom.

They were: (1) "the false clericalism which misrepresented the true religious spirit of the churches," (2) the Poole Bill prohibition of the teaching of evolution, (3) the Tatum Petition against freedom in libraries and classrooms, (4) pressures against equal rights of labor and management at the University, (5) pressure against farmers co-ops at N. C. State, (6) pressures against equal rights for Negroes, and (7) the speaker ban law.

"In all these controversial sitions in controversial strug-"the University of the people has stood true to the faith and hopes of youth, the moral autonomy of the responsible community of scholars and teachers, the historic heritage and the humane hopes of an advancingly free, venturesomely creative and aesthetically beautiful aspirations of a great people."

Graham said that the struggle to gain repeal of the speaker ban law has advanced in the last year. The evidence of this advance, he said, is shown in recent polls of N.C. legislators by state newspapers showing that a substantial number would vote for amendment or repeal of the law.

"It is the duty of citizens to study and make clear their positions on this law. It is not sufficient to stand on past positions in controversial trugles for human freedom. We must stand today against the present denial of freedom by the speaker ban law," he said.

"The speaker ban law expresses a lack of faith in the trustees, the administrations, the faculties, and the students of all our state institutions. It is basically a resort to the totalitarian way against the American way," he said.

He said that the law has misrepresented the people of North Carolina to the nation and to the world. The bill is in violation of the very Bill of Rights which North Carolina helped to make a basic part of the Constitution of the United States," he said.

Graham praised the parts that University educators and state newspaper editors have made in bringing information on the law to the people of the state and in working for the ban's repeal.

Graham spoke as part of a three-day symposium at N. C. State entitled "Issue '65: Criticism and Inquiry In a Free Society."

UNC's Share Of Kenan $$ Uncertain

University of North Carolina officials said Friday they did not know to what extent the Chapel Hill campus eventually may share in the $100 million estate of William Rand Kenan, who died July 28 at Lockport, N. Y.

After the will was read Thursday in New York, initial reports were that the University of North Carolina had been left $2 million plus the famed Randleigh Farm at Lockport.

UNC Chancellor Paul Sharp said Friday that the Chapel Hill campus was not mentioned specifically in the will.

He added: "However, one of the three trusts provides funds for support of colleges, universities, secondary schools and other educational institutions. While no specific bequest was left to the university at Chapel Hill, Mr. Kenan did ask that the university be included among the recipients of funds from this foundation."

Rigor Mortis Tar Heels

UNC Loss Is Only Return To Old Form

By ED FREAKLEY
DTH Staff Writer

Carolina came back into its old form yesterday.

The Tar Heels played football for about 15 minutes while a weak Virginia played for 60 minutes. To win you have to put out and hustle all the time — 100 per cent. Carolina didn't, because they didn't.

UNC has a better ball club. But just because someone says you're the better team doesn't mean you automatically win the game. You have to play better than the other guy and you don't let up.

The Tar Heels smashed the Cavaliers in the first quarter. They moved the ball fairly well on offense. Defensively they were tops.

Press Clippings

With the start of the second quarter they sat back as if to say "We lived up to our press clippings."

And that they certainly did. All week students were warning them of last year. Sports writers were cautioning the team in their columns.

"Carolina is always tough against top notch opponents. But they have a rough time against the weak ACC teams," they said.

It must have been hard for the coaches to get the Heels up for yesterday's game. The past two weeks they played football, and played it well, against those "top notch" opponents Michigan and Ohio State.

Up For Game

Well the coaches apparently performed their difficult task and managed to get the team ready for the ball game. It is unfortunate that it wore off so fast.

Hustle, drive and desire are words associated with every sport. Many fans don't think they mean much. "A good team is a good team, period," they say.

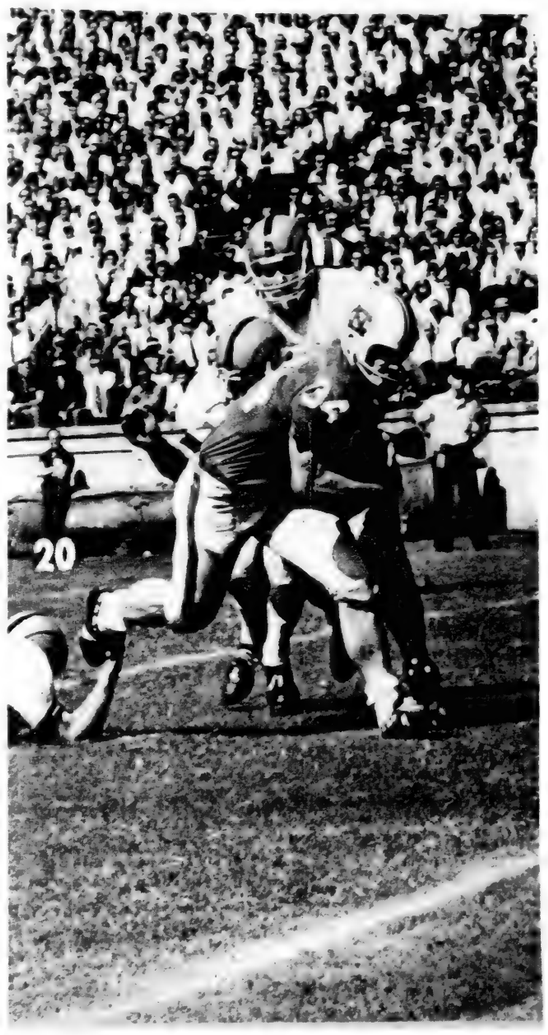
There was no excuse for the 21-17 Virginia win. It should have been something like 34-7 Carolina.

Better luck next week. State is one of those weak ACC opponents. Hopefully the Tar Heels learn their lessons better than they played football yesterday.



Running Back Max Chapman Scores

Cavs Kill Heels With 21-17 Win

By PAT STITH
DTH Sports Editor

North Carolina rolled up a 17-0 first half lead over Virginia here yesterday — and then quit — but the Cavaliers never gave up, and essentially that's the story of their 21-17 upset victory.

The Tar Heels struck for two quick touchdowns early in the first period and added a field goal just before halftime. After that they didn't just play dead — they were dead.

An uncomposed and angry Jim Hickey praised Virginia's comeback and then called his team's performance the "sorriest" he had ever seen.

Press Conference

The press conference he held after the game was one of the briefest on record. He had no praise for any phase of his Tar Heels' performance.

Virginia spent most of the afternoon penned up deep in its own territory. Only four times were the Cavaliers able to drive across the midfield stripe — once when they got the ball on the UNC 45 after a short kick and the other three times when they mounted long range scoring drives.

Virginia went in from 76 yards out in five plays late in the second quarter and then, with time running out in the game, the Cavaliers put together two 80 yard marches.

Winning Touchdown

The go-ahead touchdown came on a one-on-one situation with 2:53 left. Senior quarterback Tom Hodges chose to pass on a do-or-die fourth down and two on the Carolina six yard line.

He threw a standup pass to left end Ken Poates, who was split out, and the game narrowed to a personal battle between Poates and UNC cornerback Jack Davenport. Poates won, going in for the score standing up.

Virginia Coach George Blackburn said at the half he told his team, trailing at that point 17-7, that "it takes mental guts as well as physical guts to win a ball game. He said he urged his team to "go out there and with God's help we'll beat them."

Greatest Win

Assistant Virginia Coach Bob Marich called the Cavaliers' second conference win in four years "the greatest victory of my life." Both wins have been over the Tar Heels.

Blame for the defeat should rest squarely on the shoulders of Carolina's defensive secondary and the offensive unit, which opened the game with two quick touchdowns and then sputtered and died.

The defensive secondary looked as if the forward pass was a secret weapon, invented especially by Virginia to torment them. Cavalier quarterback Hodges was off the mark in the opening stages of the game, but down the stretch he riddled UNC with his passes

First Score

He set up Virginia's first score with three strikes, one to right halfback John Pencavage and two to Poates, moving the ball from his own 24 yard line to the UNC two.

Stuck deep in his own territory the first three times the Cavaliers got the ball in the second half, Hodges attempted no passes, but then, with time running out he took to the air again.

North Carolina has never made an opposing quarterback look better.

UNC defensive backs tried to play it safe and Virginia rolled down the field as Hodges hit on nine consecutive passes.

One was a 57 yard bomb to Pencavage, who along with Poates, was a chief receiver. He beat left cornerback Billy Darnall down the right sideline on a play that carried to the UNC 14, and set up the winning touchdown.

There were some bright spots for UNC.

Bright Spots

The defensive line — tackle Hank Sadler, ends Jim Masino and Bo Wood and especially middle guard Joe Fratangelo — did an excellent job. They completely stymied Virginia's rushing game — limited it to 69 yards of 44 attempts.

Bill Edwards did a good job punting.

WUNC Begins 13th Air Season Tomorrow Night

WUNC, the FM voice of the University of North Carolina, returns to the air for its 13th season tomorrow evening with its regular 6 p.m. to midnight schedule.

Robert J. Newlin, senior radio, television and motion pictures major from Charlotte will be station manager for the 1965-66 broadcasting year.

Station programming policy, according to Newlin, will "continue to foster knowledge and truth, and generally to concern itself with keeping the University in close contact with its community."

"The two basic ingredients of WUNC's offerings will continue to be classical music and informational - educational programs of the lecture, discussion and news types.

"The latter will attempt to incorporate as much of the University's total activity as possible," he said.

He also pointed out that the station additionally serves as a laboratory for students who wish to learn, under competent supervision, the operation of a broadcasting station.

The 50,000 - watt educational station, which serves an area within an approximate 100 - mile radius of Chapel Hill, operates at 91.5 megacycles.

Newcomers' Party Is Thursday Night

The Welcome Party of the Newcomers Division of the University Woman's Club will be held at 8 p.m. Thursday in the faculty lounge of the Morehead Planetarium. All faculty women and faculty wives new to the University in the past three years are invited to attend.

During the party, members and prospective members will be informed of the Newcomers' monthly programs.

Motorcyclist Swept Off Bike

A motorcyclist Friday night ran into a rope stretched across a parking lot near the Bell Tower, receiving minor injuries.

Edward Daw, a junior, said he was going "not more than 30 miles per hour" when the rope hit him in the stomach.

Daw complained the tope had not been adequately marked.

The rope is customarily strung up on football weekends to reserve parking.

Perfect Pair: Morrie Sills, Pat Puckett

Better than the average coed. That is probably the simplest way to describe Patsy Puckett, Miss Mississippi, first runner-up in the Miss America Pageant, Miss Match of North Carolina or just plain delightful.

Her computer match Morrie Sills, Carolina sophomore, agrees wholeheartedly.

Sills was notified of his selection this morning. "I thought someone was playing a joke on me," the economics major said.

Sills, a native of Philadelphia, had to break a date so he could date Miss Puckett.

"I took the coward's way out," he said, "I had a friend notify her."

"I can't wait to see what my my next four dates via computer will be like," Sills said at a noon press conference.

Patsy said, "He is just what I ordered from the computer." And Sills agreed that she was very close to what he wanted.

Musta Been A Real Party

There's nothing new about a social fraternity catching hell for being too social.

But we certainly have to give credit to Sigma Nu at the University of Texas in Austin for originality.

The city said the fraternity owed $2,300 in back taxes. The fellows said they thought they should be tax exempt.

But the city won — by threatening to make public some photographs made at a Sigma Nu toga party. Obviously there had been some tuggin' at the togas during the festivities because the fraternity paid up.

As Austin lawyer and Sigma Nu alumnus John Cofer said, the pictures were enough to "prejudice me against my own fraternity."

The injustice of it all is at least partially offset by the grounds under which the fraternity claimed tax exemption.

For this, we give these Sigma Nus the Originality Award. They said, "We shouldn't have to pay taxes because we have a study hall, a swimming pool (to maintain our physical fitness) and we have a Bible class."

Good Old Discrimination

One of the rankest examples of flat-out discrimination has come to light in Rockingham County.

It happened Thursday night in Wentworth at a meeting of the county Good Neighbor Council, of all places.

David S. Coltrane, head of the North Carolina Good Neighbor Council, attended the meeting — and so did a dozen picketeers who were demanding representation on the council. They claimed no representative from their group had been asked to participate.

The sheriff met the protesters and suggested they submit a list of members to the council to be considered.

Such a display of courtesy can hardly undo this brazen affront to that noble organization, the Ku Klux Klan.

Maybe there's something to be said for discrimination after all.

Those Theatrical Politicians

Whatever happened to the good old days when all a movie star was expected to do was flash his smile across the big screen?

It seems that famous folks just aren't satisfied anymore by the glittering marquees — they've decided to branch out — into politics, of all things.

In industry, they'd call it "diversification," but when the stars begin turning in their make-up kits for the speaker's platform, it's time to raise some doubts.

Two of the most conspicuous theatrical politicians are George Murphy and Ronald Reagan.

Murphy, a freshman Republican senator from California, defeated former Kennedy press secretary Pierre Salinger for the job. Actually Salinger never had a chance. He just couldn't compete with Murphy's potent campaign publicity weapon — the late night movies on television.

Reagan is another Californian, who would rather be governor of the state than have a new television series. An outspoken conservative, he's trying to take the stage as the Republican gubernatorial nominee.

Actor Gary Merrill, 48-year-old former husband of Bette Davis, announced a few days ago that he will run for the Maine House of Representatives as a Democrat next year. Why is he running? He's "always been interested in politics."

Back in Hollywood, there are strong indications that Steve Allen will run for the House of Representatives seat being left by Democrat James Roosevelt.

Television star Dan Blocker, "Bonanza's" big "Hoss," isn't making any secrets about his desire to play a role in government for a while.

The list continues, but the point should already be made.

All these naive, inexperienced box - office types are just going to ruin that dirty old art of politics.

If worse comes to worse and more of them get elected, there will have to be some sort of retaliation.

We can just see it now.

Carolina Comment: The Dickson Case

(Carolina Comment will appear from time to time whenever there is a single campus issue which is the subject of editorial comment by several of the North Carolina news media. Guest editorials from state newspapers will continue to be printed occasionally in the DTH editorial column. With regard to the Dickson case, many North Carolina newspapers have carried news stories. As of Friday evening when the DTH edit page went to the printer, two newspapers and WRAL-TV had written editorials on the subject.)

RALEIGH TIMES

One factor overlooked in the general uproar over the fact that the president of the Carolina student body has an honor council conviction on his record is the double standard which seems to have been applied in this case.

The male student, Paul Dickson, was given an official reprimand by the male student government honor council on a charge of visiting a fraternity house with a coed during unauthorized visiting hours. The girl in the case was tried by the woman's honor council and was suspended from Carolina. The incident occurred during the summer session.

Without having access to the full testimony in the cases, it would seem reasonable to assume that since the two made the visit together to the same fraternity house at the same unauthorized time, that the punishment should be identical. If the male student deserved only an official reprimand and was allowed to remain in school, the coed deserved that and no more. And just as surely, if the coed deserved suspension from school, so did the male student.

People who have been students at Carolina in recent years say that such a double standard of student-administered justice isn't unusual. The woman's honor council, they say, traditionally hands out much rougher punishment than does the men's honor council. The prevailing opinion, they feel, has been that it is up to the coed to draw the line and to make the line stick, and that if she doesn't do so, she merits the tougher punishment.

This is a dreadful way to administer justice. Two persons who participate equally in any transgression of any law are equally guilty and should receive equal punishment. In fact, they should be tried by the same court, not by separate courts.

It may be that the woman's honor council has been too tough, though there are those who feel that some tough discipline toughly administered might not be out of place on many of today's campuses. And, it may well be that the men's honor council has been too lenient in its seeming leanings toward slaps on the wrist for the men.

Be that as it may, it would seem that the time is long past for the Chapel Hill administration to not only take a long look at this situation, but to straighten it out.

THE NEWS OF ORANGE COUNTY

The hassle among the students of the University campus in Chapel Hill as to whether the President of the student body should resign is not just a "little" matter of concern only to the students themselves.

At this crucial time in the 176-year history of the oldest state University it is a statewide concern. And it is of especial concern to the citizens of the University community.

University Student Body President Paul Dickson was recently convicted in a student court of violating the Carolina Code by illegally taking a woman student into a fraternity house. Dickson does not deny his guilt. The penalty administered in this case was a formal reprimand, which was attached to her permanent record as a University student.

Because of his being guilty of conduct unbecoming the elected leader of 12,000 students at the University, a number of his fellow student leaders formally asked him to resign his post. Dickson refused, and apparently has his mind finally made up. However, a formal recall election may be held, in keeping with preparations initiated late last week by petition of a good number of Dickson's fellow students.

The issue was unfortunately clouded when the University administration, realizing the significance of the situation, issued an ultimatum to Dickson to resign. This usurping of student authority was subsequently rescinded by the administration. But its shadow remains, so that this young man is in some quarters now depicted and admired as a chap who has stood up to and understandably challenged the administration's ill-considered action.

Indeed there are no doubt some students who even have admiration for a fellow who can keep a girl out all night and "get away with it." (The News does not believe that Dickson himself harbors this notion.)

So the issue is admittedly complicated. But there are still some simple maxims ap plicable to it. There is a well-established law which strips the legal citizenship of a person convicted of a felony. By the same logic a student leader who has been found guilty of breaking specific moral laws imposed and administered by his fellow stuhas paid his penalty for this offense. But Dickson is more than a "citizen." As an elected leader he must be concerned with the effectiveness of his personal administration.

It is obvious that his effectiveness is going to be seriously impaired by the understandable lack of faith that his fellow students now have in him as their leader. Furthermore, in obstinately refusing to step down because he does not legally have to do so at this time, Dickson is harming the status of the University across the state.

The fallacious notion is cast abroad that Chapel Hill is full of communists, beatniks, dope addicts, and irresponsible youngsters who must be protected from alien ideologies by a Gag Law.

By his personal example of stubborn refusal to humbly relinquish the office he cannot now fill as it should be filled, Dickson tends to give substance to otherwise false concerns about "what's going on down there at Chapel Hill." He further endangers the absolutely necessary continuance of freedom of inquiry and freely - elected student self - government. And finally, he does himself no honor as a Carolina gentleman.

When he does resign he will be a far bigger and better man than he now is in his mis-guided self-righteous action. And in exhibiting a true sense of humility by resigning he will prove that he does indeed have qualities of leadership — a quality he is not now exhibiting. R. G.

WRAL-TV

No useful purpose would be served by either moralizing or sermonizing in connection with the conduct of a young couple involved in a regrettable incident now the subject of controversy at Chapel Hill. And we suppose that polite laughter may seem, to some, the best medicine for squirming University officials who apparently lack the imagination to deal with a young man who, these very officials have declared, is "unsuited" to continue as president of the student body at Chapel Hill.

The picture is blurred with a number of remarkably intriguing contradictions. It began several weeks ago, during the Summer session at Chapel Hill, when the student body president took a coed to a closed fraternity house for the evening, returning her to her dormitory after dawn. We do not propose to speculate upon the details of what may have transpired; it suffices to note that the University viewed this conduct with enough concern to suspend the young woman involved.

Unless things have changed, it still takes two to tango. It therefore seems logical to assume that whatever guilt may be involved, it ought to be shared equally by the young woman and her escort. But if one imagines that equal punishment ought to fit equal infractions of any rule, there is the disconcerting disclosure in this matter that the University takes a somewhat astigmatic view of joint misconduct by young men and young women. For while the young woman was suspended for her role in an all-night adventure, the young man — who just happens to be president of the student body — was given only a reprimand.

And in the face of demands by his fellow students that he resign, he responds that he not only intends to remain as president of the student body, but that he feels that he has not violated the students trust in him when they elected him to office.

It may be, of course, that the University both hopes and assumes that the student body will take action to remove the young man from office. And, at first glance, this may seem to offer to the students an instructive lesson in the workings of democratic procedure. But that course sets aside the responsibility of the University to demonstrate that it will not tolerate objectionable conduct by any student when discovered. Indeed, the present posture of the University is one of reluctance, if not helplessness, when it comes to imposing meaningful discipline upon a student — if the student happens to be engaged in campus politics.

What troubles us is not merely the double standards that have been applied to the two students involved. Rather, it is the alarming timidity of the University in grasping its responsibility of discipline.

The youngsters in this incident are not the only ones who will be tempted, now that they are away from home, to stray from the moral codes to which we must hope they were exposed at home. And certainly they are not the first, nor will they be the last, to yield to temptation. This is precisely the reason that restraints, imposed and enforced by constituted authority, are important.

There has been too great a tendency to assume that youngsters in college are mature, that they are not impressionable, and that they no longer need the protection and guidance which they were receiving at home only a year or so ago. College authorities cannot escape their responsibility to serve as substitute parents as well as teachers. These are difficult years for young people walking the sometimes shaky bridge between adolescence and adulthood.

While we wish not to inflate the incident at Chapel Hill beyond reasonable proportions, neither can we avoid the conclusion that an administrative error of judgment has been made. A young woman has been sent home in what she may regard as disgrace. Not knowing the details, we do not quarrel with the University's judgment in her case. But it hardly seems fair that her partner in the incident can remain on campus, and in office as president of the student body, with only a reprimand on his record.

The University has either done too much or too little. It should promptly decide which, and take action to abalance some presently unbalanced scales.

Letters To The Editor

Judiciary Clears The Air

Editor, the Daily Tar Heel:

The student judiciary of our University has, of late, been in hot water. Even though it commands a long history of respect and effectiveness, these qualities are now being overlooked due to certain popular misconceptions. First of all, the mock trial presented by the Women's Honor Council during freshmen orientation was "harsh, unfair"; therefore one logically concludes, all student courts are conducted in similar fashion. In my opinion, this trial was not typical. It was planned in poor taste, purporting to emphasize the Honor System while, in effect, doing injury because of its false image. Secondly, legislative leaders have proposed numerous judicial reforms, many of which will strengthen the court system; meanwhile, students believe that the judiciary, as it presently stands without these reforms, is violating their rights. Such beliefs are wholly in error. And thirdly, the recent Paul Dickson issue has brought many attacks upon our Honor System. I would like to point these out in some detail and hopefully bring to light their superficial nature.

In a letter to The Daily Tar Heel on September 24, William Rogers made it clear that Paul Dickson received a light sentence and instead, because of the sentence given his accomplice, should have been suspended; that Dickson, because he is president of the student body, did not have an ordinary trial; that Dickson was guilty of a "campus honor code" violation; and furthermore, that "supposing he did receive the same consideration that anyone else would have received, never again should a student at Carolina be suspended for taking a co-ed off-limits."

As a member of the Men's Honor Council and as one who heard all testimony presented in Dickson's trial, I can emphatically deny all of Rogers' conclusions about the "partiality" of the trial and his erroneous concepts about our judicial structure.

First of all, Dickson was in no way charged with an Honor Code offense. The charge consisted of a two-count violation of the Campus Code, both counts dealing with aiding a co-ed break women's rules. (Because of extenuating circumstances Dickson was found not guilty of the first count that he assisted the girl to stay out after curfew. On the second count — that he helped her enter a closed fraternity house — Dickson received a verdict of guilty and a sentence of official reprimand.) It is important to realize the difference in the two codes, for the Honor Code refers to a student's personal honor and integrity, whereas the Campus Code considers ungentlemanly or unladylike behavior.

One of the most damaging statements made by Rogers concerns the supposed partiality accorded President Dickson. Admittedly, the Council cannot completely dissociate the accused and his position when a student as well-known as Dickson is involved. But the Council followed normal procedure during all testimony and deliberation and did at no times base its decision upon the impact or lack of impact which such a decision would make outside the judiciary. In fact, the verdict and the sentence were both precedented in a very similar case tried not more than one hour before Dickson's own trial.

Concerning the charge that Dickson should have received suspension, and furthermore, that suspension is not just in such cases: Rogers has centered his decision around the fact that the Carolina co-ed involved in the case received one semester's suspension, and Dickson did not. It is important to realize that the Women's Honor Council handled the girl's case, and the Men's Council heard Dickson's — there were two separate trials. When a co-ed breaks a major social rule such as this one, the WHC has traditionally treated this very seriously and has given suspension. The MHC considers this rule violation to be on the most part the responsibility of the girl. The Carolina gentleman, nevertheless, still has some responsibility to see that she obeys her rules; so he is guilty of a lesser offense. Only if he has forcibly persuaded the girl to commit the violation must he assume the major responsibility. These are the reasons for Dickson's official reprimand and not a suspension.

The Men's Honor Council has recently spelled out in more detail the gentleman's responsibility toward a co-ed. I hope that all students will attempt to understand this policy — as it pertains to him — or herself, and also, as it pertains to Dickson's case.

Dickson . . . Again

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Last August the Tar Heel reported that it knew Paul Dickson was being tried for an Honor Code violation, yet it could not give the students the facts of the case as they were being withheld by the Attorney General's office. In an indignant editorial the DTH claimed it wanted the story not for its value as a scandal, but rather for the noble purpose of reporting the facts to the public.

Now the DTH has the story, and the result has been some of the highest grade of yellow journalism I have ever seen. In its editorials and stories the DTH has made several obvious insinuations about Paul Dickson's motives, his integrity, and his courage. I feel confident that if the DTH can keep the story alive for a few more days they will eventually get around to his lineage. Now that is real factual news reporting! Good show, Tar Heel. You too are a credit to our school.

Robert Beck, Jr.
18 Davie Circle

(Editor's Note: On August 19 the summer Tar Heel stated editorially that "the Tar Heel extends apologies to those readers who have inquired about rumors that a high Student Government official has been or may be charged with an Honor Code violation.

"We heard the same rumblings, and off we went to see if they were valid. But, alas, an intensive investigation by two staffers revealed only bits and pieces of the story, and it would be contrary to our journalistic ethics to print only part of the whole situation."

The first time The Daily Tar Heel mentioned the Dickson case was after eight students publicly issued a letter asking for Dickson's resignation.)

Letters

The Daily Tar Heel welcomes letters to the editor on any subject, particularly on matters of local or University interest. Letters should be typed, double spaced and include the name and address of sender. Names will not be omitted in publication. Letters should be kept as brief as possible. The DTH reserves the right to edit for length.

Dean Carmichael On Career Women

Dr. Katherine Kennedy Carmichael, University Dean of Women spoke on Saturday evening at the annual inaugural banquet of the Durham Eta Chapter of Delta Kappa Gamma Educational Society in the Duke University Ballroom. Her topic was "The Professional Woman: Some New Insights."

Despite increased educational opportunities and increased numbers of women who have entered the labor force, talented American women are not advancing in either the professions or in management at the rate which was predicted in the 1930's. Many cliches now apply to the American women – feminology, demifemininism, the feminine mystique. "I find women pretty much just people," said Miss Carmichael. Some are born to careers (like Queen Elizabeth I and II), some achieve careers (like the abbesses of the Middle Ages), and some have careers thrust upon them (like many drifters among the female population).

In the fraternity leagues the big surprise saw the PiKA Plummers edge the Phi Delt Blues, 7-6. Guy Smith scored the touchdown and Fred Stapp added the winning extra point. The Phi Delts were all-campus champions last year.

The biggest score of the week was rolled up by Zete I as they trampled Phi Delta Chi, 66-0. Knox McMillan was the big gun for the Zetes as they showed no mercy.

In League I, the PiKA Plummers are on top with a 1-0 record. In League II the Phi Gam Whiteowls and Zete II are the leaders. Zete I and Phi Delt White lead league III, while KA Blue II and Sig Ep head League IV.

In League V Kappa Psi, KA Blue I and CHi Phil all won their first encounters. The DKE Blues and Beta Brewers lead League VI and DKE White, Chi Psi and SAE Blue I are on top of League VII. League VIII has the Phi Kap Sig Jay Birds, DKE Reds and DU Blue II on top.

In the residence hall leagues, defending champion Everett scored three wins to open its quest for a second title. The Everett Rogahs downed the Graham Bells, 13-7 and the Everett Trojans eased by the Stacy Studs, 6-0. Everett also won their game.

In an overtime game the Alexander Poobahs came from behind to trip the Joyner Supporters, 14-13.

In the Upper Quad Area, the Mangum Mugs and the Ruffin Rebles are on top of League I while the Mangum Wumps lead League II. In Morehead College league, the Lewis Reds and Everett Hagor lead League I, Lewis Blue and Everett Trojans head League II and Lewis White and Everett Rogahs are on top of League III.

The Joyner - Connor - Alexander area has two leagues, with the Joyner Sarages, Alexander Mooses and Alexander Playboys leading League I and the Alexander Poobahs, and Joyner Jokes undefeated in League II.

In Scott College, Avery No. 1 and the Parker Pack top League I while the Teague Trojans and Parker Pretzels lead League II.

Leagues for Ehringhaus an Morrison Colleges are not yet completed. In Craige College, Maverick C No. 2 and Maverick B No. 3 are the leaders in League II.

All Academic

UNC center Ed Stringer has been named co-captain of the 1965 ACC All - Academic team. Stringer was also a member of the 1964 team.

End John Atherton, quarterback Jeff Beaver, end Lynn Duncan, guards John Harmon and Pat Jessup, and center Pat Shea were also nominated to the team.

Max Chapman Drives Over For First Carolina Touchdown

'God Helped Us'

By RON SHINN

University of Virginia Coach George Blackburn emerged from the dressing room Saturday sounding like a preacher.

His never-say-die Cavaliers had just bounced back after trailing 17 points to whip the Tar Heels 21-17. Needless to say he was a jubiliant man.

Blackburn was nearly shouting as he spoke to reporters.

"We won it the hard way," said Blackburn. "This is one of the sweetest victories of my career. If the boys live to be 80 years old I don't think they'll ever forget it."

He then began his sermon.

"I've stood out here two weeks and talked to you fellows after losing, and believe me it's been tough.

"I've told you all before that three ingredients are necessary to have a winning football team.

"One is a well conditioned football team. We only used 25 players today, so I'd say we were in good physical shape.

"Another is a smart and a well coached team. In our last two games we haven't looked like it, but we do now.

"The most important thing is fight. Football is a man's game. It takes mental guts to play it successfully. We came back. That showed that we have both intestinal and mental fortitude."

The Cavaliers, rated high in preseason polls, had failed to find the winning combination until the Carolina game.

"I told the team before the game that they had to play big league ball. Carolina beat a big league team last week at Ohio State, and if we wanted to be big league we had to beat Carolina."

He explained his team's lack of defensive might in the first half as inexperience.

"We never changed anything, we just started playing like we should. We were using a new defense that we had practiced only 20 minutes and the boys weren't quite use to it. After they got the feel of it, things really began to click."

Blackburn looked up as he made his next statement. "We had help from above on some of our long bombs today, and we thank God for that."

He had nothing but praise for quarterback Tom Hodges.

"His passing under pressure was tremendous. He took a licking in the first half but showed a lot of guts."

It was a real trophy day for the Cavalier defense. Refusing to single out anyone in particular, he praised the whole team for its great effort.

Blackburn accepted congratulations from various University officials as they filed through the dressing room. One of them noticed the game ball that he was hiding behind his back.

"This isn't for me," he replied. "Last night we decided to give it to the person who has meant the most to the athletic program at Virginia, President Ben Shannon."

Blackburn was asked about the Carolina punt late in the final period that gave his team ball possession and the final deciding score.

"It was a smart move. I would have done the same thing in Hickey's case," he said.

"Our winning play was called from the pressbox by Ben Wilson, the offensive backfield coach. I sent in another play but luckily we decided to use his at the last minute."

Why did you gamble on fourth and six instead of going for the field goal that would have tied the score?

"We had to gamble, Blackburn said. We came 200 miles and we didn't want a tie. We were ready for a win."

'Sorriest Game Ever, Hickey Says

By GENE RECTOR
DTH Asst. Sports Editor

The Tar Heel dressing room was a morgue Saturday afternoon.

Only the occasional thud of a falling shoulder pad or the scrape of dusty cleats broke the silence.

The joy of last week's upset over Ohio State was forgotten. The players dressed without a word.

Veteran reporters said this is the first time they had seen Hickey lose his composure in seven years.

The Tar Heel coach had watched the visiting Cavaliers crack a 17-0 Carolina lead to take the 21-17 victory.

"That was the sorriest football game I have seen since I've been here," Hickey said, using a half-spent cigarette to emphasize his point.

"We played just as sorry this week as we played great last week.

"Oh, we didn't take Virginia lightly," he said. "We've preached that to them all week. There's simply no excuse for the way we played.

"We just played around," he said. "I guess we expected Virginia to lay down and give it to us. We didn't play offense or defense. We didn't play at all."

"Virginia deserves all the credit in the world," he said. "I have to admire them. I'm disgusted with our bunch.

"I don't even want to talk about details," he said moving toward the door. "That's all I have to say."

Halfback Max Chapman had little to add.

"I guess Virginia wanted this one more than we did," he said, "particularly in the second half."

"We're not very pleased with ourselves," quarterback Danny Talbott said.

Punter Bill Edwards agreed. "We just didn't play good ball. We didn't play at all in the second half."

UNC 's Meade Gets Rematch

By BOB ORR
DTH Sports Writer

Tomorrow is a red letter day for Jim Meade, the UNC cross country captain who finished second best to South Carolina's Bob Crombie for the ACC title last fall.

Crombie and his South Carolina team will be here at 4 p.m. to take on the Tar Heels in the opening meet of the season for both teams.

Both outfits are pretty evenly matched and the race will be interesting — but the center of attention is the Meade-Crombie duel.

The two are unlikes. Meade is slow — his best quarter mile time is :55.6 while crombie is a converted middle distance runner.

Crombie must hope for a slow pace and a chance to use his speed at the end to win. Meade must set a killing pace — which he is fully capable of doing — and build up enough of a lead to last him through the final stages.

The harriers finished second to Maryland for the Conference title last fall, winning eight of nine meets. Their only loss, against the Terps, broke a 10 meet win streak.

Going into tomorrow's duel with South Carolina the Tar Heels have won six meets in a row.

Carolina has won the North Carolina state title for five consecutive years. Last fall's loss to Maryland broke a string of four straight conference titles.

Even though Coach Joe Hilton's harriers have been hit by illness and injury, they should give the Gamecocks a tough time on the 4.3 mile course. Lettermen Trip MacPherson and Drummond Bell will not be seeing action this week.

The task of beating USC will fall to a handful of healthy runners. Among these are sophomores Bill Bassett, Mike Williams, Fred McCall, and junior Charles Worley. These runners along with Meade were the first five Varsity finishers in last week's time trial.

The Tar Heel frosh will also open their season Monday against USC's freshman. The '65 freshman cross country editor should prove to be one of the best in Carolina history.

Led by Jim Hotelling, Joe Lasich, and Truett Goodwin, the freshman came within one point of beating the varsity in last week's three mile time trial.

Lasich was the Maryland state prep indoor and outdoor two mile champion. Hotelling, who is from Chapel Hill, went to Virginia Episcopal High School and was the state prep mile champ there and Goodwin was the North Carolina state mile and cross country champion.

Coaches Joe Hilton and Boyd Newnam feel that both varsity and freshman runners are in good shape and, barring further injuries, should prove successful in the coming season.

Ohio State games with a separated shoulder, played well also. He got in only for Carolina's last two desperation drives and caught three Danny Talbott passes for 33 yards.

Interception

Tabott's pass from the Virginia 31 yard line in the dying minutes of the game, which was intercepted in the end zone by Paul Klingensmith, was intended for Phillips.

Bud had told Talbott in the huddle that he could beat Virginia deep — and he did. But by the time Talbott's pass got there Virginia's secondary had recovered.

Student Opinion

What did UNC students think of Saturday's fiasco? For a sampling of student opinion see Gene Rector's feature-interview on page 4.

Police Tow Cars Parked On Sidewalk

Several people who parked around Fraternity Court Saturday night must have been surprised when they went to get their cars and found them gone.

Wreckers summoned by the Chapel Hill Police towed about 20 automobiles.

According to Police Captain C. E. Durham, complaints from residents of the area triggered the removals. He said that the cars were parked in the traffic island and on the sidewalk, so that people were unable to walk on the normal paths.

Capt. Durham said that he didn't recall towing any cars after the Michigan game. For this game, though, the situation was worse.

The Captain declared that there were "more cars than I've ever seen" in the area. He added that there were many out-of-town cars, from Duke and N. C. State.

The towing began about 7:30 p.m. and was completed about 10:30 p.m. Four wreckers were used. Each wrecker towed the cars to its own garage, and the charge depended on the wrecking company. All cars have been picked up by the owners.

Capt. Durham pointed out that the police and the local fraternities have always gotten along well. He said that the police usually can get the fraternities to move illegally parked cars by calling.

However, this time the policemen even went into the houses to ask that the cars be moved, without success.

"We could have started towing at one or two o'clock," Capt. Durham pointed out, "but we waited till after dark."

Once the towing started, he added, some students moved their cars, but some didn't.

He said the Police Department has received no complaints from the fraternities about the towing.

Capt. Durham added that the towing policy will be continued if the future parking situation is as bad.

RCA Speaker Will Address Job Program

Donald M. Cook, corporate manager of college relations for the Radio Corporation of America, will be the guest speaker at a career program for all seniors and graduate students October 7.

The meeting, which begins at 7:30 p.m. in Hill Hall, will be conducted by the University Placement Service, and is jointly sponsored by Alpha Kappa Psi and Delta Sigma Pi fraternities. All men and women students who will seek jobs following graduation or after completion of military service are urged to attend this career meeting.

J. M. Galloway, Director of the Placement Service, will explain how his office assists students in beginning their careers in business, industry, government, and college teaching.

Cook, now in charge of college recruiting fro RCA, was formerly head of the Pennsylvania State University Placement Office. He is active in the work of the College Placement Council and the Middle Atlantic Placement Association. As a speaker Mr. Cook has great appeal to student audiences and is well acquainted with the problems facing college students seeking jobs.

Any student who has satisfactorily completed two semesters of work at UNC is eligible to register with the Placement Service. Students are urged to register early in order to participate in the employment interviews conducted through the Placement Service from mid-October through April. Job counseling and career information are also available to students, and permanent personnel files are maintained for every individual registered with the office.

IBM Ballots Will Decide Fate Of Carrier Current

By ANDY MYERS
DTH Staff Writer

The polls have already opened, and the fate of campus radio is in the hands of the student body.

Today's referendum ballot consists of one statement: "I favor the establishment of a campus radio station," followed by a "yes" or "no" blank to be filled in by the voter.

The polls opened at 7:30 this morning, and they will close at 6 p.m. Rules for a general election will be followed, and voters must cast their balots in their own election districts.

Computerized Poll

This is the first computerized poll ever conducted by Student Government. Voters will be given special pencils to mark their ballots, since other pencils or ball point pens will not be picked up by the card punchers.

The ballots are actually data processing IBM cards. As soon as the polls close the cards will be sent to General Telephone Co. in Durham, where a data processor will punch holes in the ballots where they have been marked.

Then the ballots will be sent back to Chapel Hill and processed by central records in Hanes Hall. Results will be available by 8:30 p.m. tonight at the GM information office.

$34,848

The campus radio would cost $34,848 to set up a station and operate for one year. After that, annual operating costs would total nearly $11,000.

The money would come from the general surplus fund of student government, which now totals about $70,000. The general surplus has been building up since 1946.

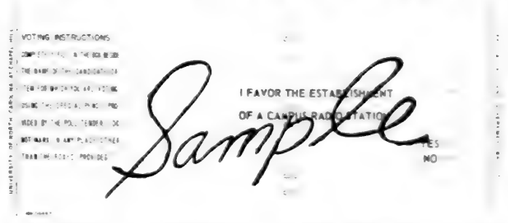
Broadcast hours for the station will most likely be from 3 p.m. to 1 a.m., and the type of music to be played will be determined from a campus - wide poll, if the referendum passes.

The campus radio bill is presently in the finance committee, which has been holding onto it tenaciously since early last semester.

The bill bogged down in the Student Legislature last year after Finance Committee Chairman Hugh Blackwell (SP), argued against the high initial cost of the facility.

Carrier Current

Campus carrier current will consist of an FM transmitter in Swain Hall, with a range of five miles. Any FM radio may pick up the signal.



In addition, each dormitory will be provided with a special FM receiver that will change the signal to AM, so that any radio in the dorm will be able to pick it up. Transistor radios as well as conventional receivers will work, since the system will use the wiring of the dormitory as short-range antennas.

Most of the fraternities and sororities have indicated interest in the facility, and interested groups should contact John Stupak, head of the campus radio committee for further details.

Dickson Comments

Student Body President Paul Dickson urged all students yesterday to vote in favor of the proposed campus carrier current radio system.

Dickson said the proposed system "would greatly benefit our entire campus."

He praised Campus Radio Committee Chairman John Stupak and his assistants for their work in planning campus radio.

TV Program On Carolina Will Feature Class Of '49

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

Don't expect to see more than a few glimpses of your friends when producer David Wolper's TV film on UNC is shown next year.

J. Maryon Saunders, secretary of the UNC Alumni Association, said yesterday the nationwide film will feature mainly material about famous Carolina graduates of 1949, including TV star Andy Griffith.

But you may at least get to see:

Scenes

— The area between South Building and Wilson Library at the change of classes.

— The Craige Ehringhaus Morrison section of the campus.

— Soccer, football and cross-country running on Navy Field and other athletic practice areas.

— A few shots of the campus dogs (though Saunders does not know whether Sebastian, UNC's unofficial, white - haired mascot will be featured).

Saunders said that Bill Kronick, director of the special, photographed the campus last week, aided by the research efforts of Time Magazine.

Time will use the program in an eight-part series called "The March of Time."

Saunders told the DTH the television group "first contacted us in June and July.

"We gave them names and addresses of alumni of the class of 1949 . . .

Symbolic

"They felt these people were symbloic of the class of '49 all over the country."

The producer of "The Making of a President" will send the film itself to independent stations from coast to coast.

The graduates featured will be:

—Andy Griffith of television, movies and the stage.

— John B. Swainson — former governor of Michigan and presently a Detroit judge.

— Professional tennis player Vic Seixas, winner of the Davis Cup.

— Pepsi - Cola Vice President Bob Cox, former president of the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce.

— Al Lowenstein, whose occupation is described by the UNC Press Bureau as "political activist."

— Mrs. Pretlow Winborne, operator of a Raleigh beauty shop.

— The Reverend Stark Dillard of Smithfield.

Class of '38

Two years ago, according to Saunders, the Associated Press ran a feature story about UNC graduates when the class of '38 was holding its twenty-fifth reunion.

"It was sent to 1700 AP papers" Saunders said. "It showed people from Massachusetts to California that the UNC alumni are achievers."

Fish— 'If They Even Stank'

A homesick North Carolina delegate to the 1777 Congress in Philadelphia wanted some Southern dryed fish so badly that he didn't care "if they even stank."

Phillips Russell professor of journalism, discovered a note from the delegate Cornelius Harnett written in 1777 to a friend, William Wilkinson, in Wilmington.

Russell, who is at work on a history of N. C. during the Revolutionary War which will be published soon, reports that the note read:

"Tell Mrs. Harnett that two or three gallons of Pickled Oysters would be the greatest rarity she could send me. I have not tasted one since I left home—also a few dryed fish of any kind, a dozen or two; if they even stank, they would be pleasing. . . . If I once more can return to my family all the Devils in Hell should not separate us."

The note was written in November, 1777, just as half the ragged American army, which included many N. C. soldiers, was going into winter quarters at Valley Forge.

Pope Paul Pleads For Peace, Unity

NEW YORK (AP) — Pope Paul VI dramatically pleaded for peace and world unity today, moving rapidly about this melting pot of the new world on a momentous and heartfelt mission — the uniting of all mankind in a future forever free of war.

History was written with virtually his every word nad action on this, the first visit to the United States of a reigning Roman Catholic pontiff.

"Peace be to this house, to this continent, and to all those who inhabit it," the Pope told worshipers jamming Yankee Stadium for a mass of peace. "We must love peace, we must make our own the cause of peace . . ."

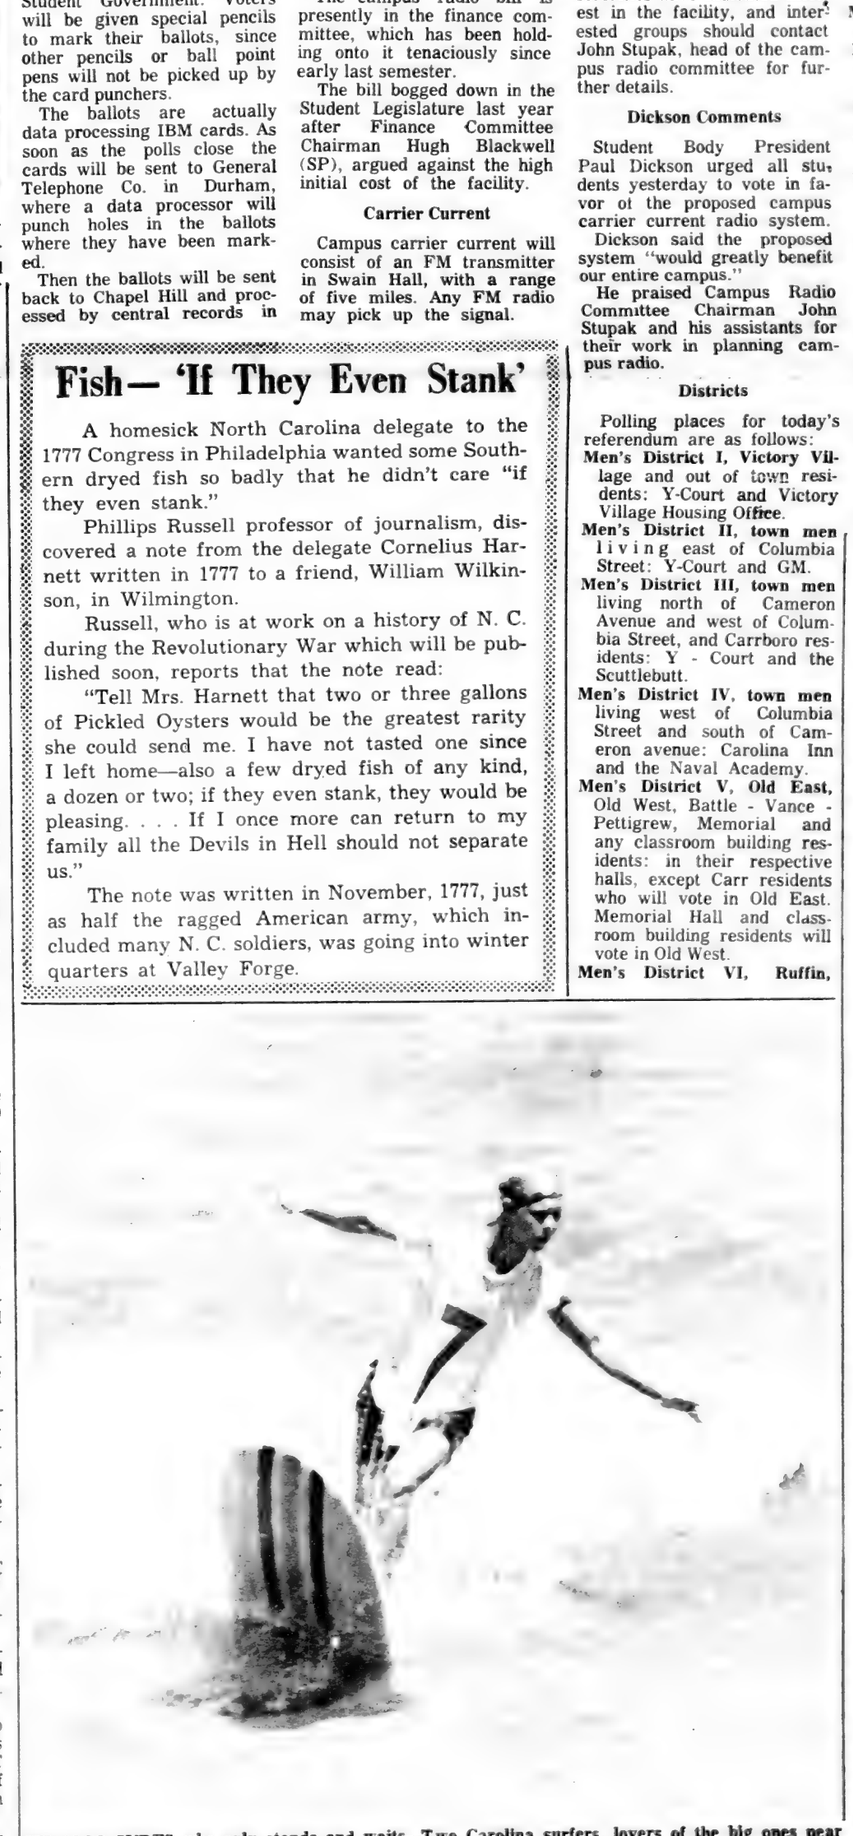
Pope Paul also talked with President Johnson, spoke to representative of 116 countries at the United Nations, and met with American leaders of other faiths before winding up his unprecedented visit with a stop at the New York World's Fair.

For the Fair, the Pope's route took him back to Kennedy Airport and the 4,280-mile return to Rome after slightly more than 13 hours on American soil.

Throughout his visit, Pope Paul exhorted for peace, warned against armaments and bestowed his personal blessing on the high - born and the lowly of all faiths who turned out in multitudes of more than a million to see and hear him.

Children, especially, basked in the warmth of Pope Paul's apostolic favor.

The Pontiff's trip evoked from the Senate of the United States a resolution welcoming him "on the occasion of his historic visit to our country."



HE ALSO SURFS who only stands and waits—Two Carolina surfers, lovers of the big ones near Virginia Beach and Nag's Head, have recently announced the formation of a surf club at UNC. Planned by the group is an intercollegiate surfing meet with the University of Virginia. All interested beachcombers should contact Chris Collins in 1020 Morrison.

'Man, Mind, Myth' Topic Of Symposium

In the spring of this year, the Carolina Symposium, which alternates with the Fine Arts Festival, will be held on April 17-22. The theme will be Man, Mind and Myth.

The Symposium dates back as far as 1927 when the Institute of Human Relations gave the first program. Speakers from all over come to discuss international situations, cultural and human relations. The Symposium was last held in 1964 when such famous men as Senator William Fulbright, Hans Morgenthau, Otto Eckstein, Frank Porert Graham and David Brinkley were visitors to the campus.

It is announced by Miss Mary King, secretary of the Symposium, that today through Friday, from 1-4 p.m., an information desk will be set up in Y-Court. Interested students are asked to sign up at the specified times for interviews which will be held the week of Oct. 11. Information sheets concerning the various committees and the topics for the Symposium as well as application blanks, will be distributed at this time. Miss Priscilla Patterson is in charge of the interviews.

Following is a list of the members of the executive committee for the Symposium: George Butler, chairman; David Lane, vice-chairman and program chairman; Mary King, secretary; Eric Van Loon, treasurer; Bill Graham, executive secretary; Robin West, student at large. Dr. Daniel W. Patterson will serve as advisor.

Chairman of the various committees are also being announced at this time. Christopher B. So Say Something

There is a referendum today, but it is a rather sad fact that most people couldn't care less.

The issue is Campus Radio, and it is a significant issue, if for no other reason than it involves quite a bit of money. But as a student said yesterday, "Nobody is talking about it."

This rather accurate gauge of lack of interest is hard to understand and even harder to forgive. Through its news, editorial and letters to the editor columns the Daily Tar Heel has willingly provided space for opinions on both sides of the question, but campus interest is still notably lacking.

The importance of the referendum should not be overlooked merely because its results are not binding on the Student Legislature. True junior politicians that they are, most student legislators will not vote against the radio proposal if they know their constituents support it. For this reason a good turnout at the polls is essential, because the authority of the referendum will be in direct proportion to the number of people who participate. Don't underestimate the importance of your vote.

The central question being asked in the referendum is, "Will a campus radio station be worth what it will cost us?"

There are many arguments against the station, and these are the most prominent ones:

1. We already have a radio station. Yes, we have WUNC, a 50,000-watt educational FM station. Students work on its staff, but the station is definitely not aimed at the campus audience—it is directed to the million or so people who live within its 100-mile broadcast range. It's programming is wholly different from that of the proposed carrier current station, and there would be no competition between the stations.

2. There are other AM stations we could listen to. True, but good reception at night in residence halls is exceptional. And the fact remains that there is no station broadcasting specifically to the Chapel Hill area after WCHL goes off the air at sundown each day. The value of a local station over a powerful distant station is the same as the value of a local newspaper over one from out of town.

3. Campus Radio would not be available to enough of the student body. No service offered on this campus can be utilized by 100 per cent of the students, but Campus Radio could reach most of them. The 10-watt FM signal would be transmitted from a tower at Swain Hall to 15 converters located in strategic spots around the campus. The signal would be converted to AM and channeled through the electrical wiring of every residence hall. The 46 per cent of the student body living off campus could receive the programs on FM sets. The signal would have a five-mile range. It is possible that converters could be set up for fraternity areas if necessary once the station has been established. Broadcasts could not be received in car radios since the effective range of the AM signal would be 50 feet from buildings, but we find it hard to see circumstances which would require automobile reception. Few students have to spend much time around town in cars.

4. It costs too much. The prices of $34,828 for establishment and $11,628 for yearly operation are high, but the usefulness of the station will depend on its quality. Shoddy, makeshift equipment is cheap, but no station could succeed with it. Radio experts were consulted in the selection of equipment and we feel the expense is prudent and justified. Drawing funds from Student Government's estimated $77,000 surplus should neither alter nor jeopardize other projects.

The utilitarian and entertainment potential of the station should be obvious. It could simplify campus election campaigns enormously. It could make important announcements immediately. It could offer entertainment exactly suited to the tastes of this campus, ranging from uninterrupted study music to comedy monologues to resurrected old radio serials.

The idea of Campus Radio has been around for a good while. A substantial vote today would help decide the issue at last—one way or the other.

It's your money and your chance to say something about how to spend it.

So please say something.

Right-To-Work Repeal Labeled 'Termination' Of Another Freedom

Never has the degeneration of what passes for liberalism been more evident that in the current effort of the "liberal" element in Congress to repeal Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act. This section permits states to enact laws forbidding the enforcement of contracts which require membership in a labor union as a condition of employment.

Leading the fight to terminate yet another of our remaining individual freedoms is no less than that marvel of political consistency, LBJ. In his State of the Union Address, the President asked for the end of 14(b) "to reduce conflicts that for several years have divided Americans." He could not have advanced a less convincing reason. The repeal proposal will likely succeed, but the "conflicts" will continued as men of principle seek to regain the measure of freedom that will have been taken from them.

It would seem self-evident in this, a nation which has recently repudiated the poll tax, that no individual should be compelled to join a trade union to obtain or to keep employment. Apparently it is self-evident, to the people if not to the Congress. The most recent poll by the Opinion Research Corporation of Princeton shows that 67% feel that an individual should have the right to hold a job regardless of his affiliation (or non-affiliation) with a union.

Often, those who seek a quick death for 14(b) wail that without compulsion, unions are impeded in gaining and keeping membership. How sad. They must actually demonstrate the worth of union affiliation to prospective members. Of course this is a burden to union officials, who could otherwise count the incoming dues, assured that the coffers would not lack for gold. The truth is that good unions, those effective with the employer and responsible and honest to their members have little trouble recruiting. They do not need the lever of compulsion. The others should not have it.

The simple fact is that right-to-work laws have not retarded unionism. Quite to the contrary, the rate of union growth in right-to-work states has consistently exceeded that of non-right-to-work states for 20 years. For the 10 year period ending in 1963, new manufacturing jobs increased in right-to-work states by 12.8%; in others they decreased by 7.6%. Personal income, earnings of production workers, wage rates and capitol investment were all proportionately higher in the 19 right-to-work states.

It is claimed that non-union members in a union shop receive the benefits of contracts won by the union; that these people are "free riders" on collective bargaining efforts for which they share none of the cost. An excellent rebuttal of this superficially appealing argument is provided by Prof. Sylvester Petro of the New York University School of Law. First of all, one may be sure that the unions exert no additional effort for non-member employees in a bargaining unit. Whatever non-union men get is an incidental result of the union's efforts to secure benefits for its membership. Second is the fact that unions produce nothing. They cannot exact more that fair-market wages without recourse to coersive and, not infrequently, violent conduct. Workers who do not wish to abet such conduct ought not to be compelled to do so. Third, that section of federal law which codifies the principle of exclusive bargaining — that which grants to the union the prerogative of representation for all the employees in a shop where a simple majority has chosen to unionize — is one which the unions fought vigorously to gain. To cut off the "free riders," union have but to reverse themselves and repudiate the prerogative of exclusive bargaining. Of course they will not — the considerable power to negotiate for all workers is too dear to the hearts and purses of union leaders. Those of the minority opposing union representation are denied the right to negotiate autonomously. It has been wrenched from them and exercised by the union independent of their approval and without regard to their wishes. These, I remind you, are the individuals villified as "free riders." More accurately they are "captive passengers."

The numerous arguments against compulsory unionism are so fundamental that they should require no elucidation. They are so obvious that even the super-liberal New York Times, in a rare display of editorial honesty, has supported the retention of 14(b).

Workers may decline union membership because of their religious beliefs, political convictions or personal stubbornness. They may object to union corruption, radical leadership or political activities.

Yet many congressmen labor daily to deprive a considerable portion of the working force of its right to seek and hold employment without tribute to one or another trade union. These are those same "liberals" who last November never tired of telling us what friendship, nay, devotion they felt for the working man. Again the electorate seems to have been suckered into sending an army of self-seeking politicians to Washington, more than happy to axe any number of freedoms to perpetuate themselves in office. Those of us who were paralyzed by the semi-intellectual drivel provided in quantity by the frantic leftists (ADA variety) are finding out with the movement to repeal 14(b) that libertarian liberals are playing second fiddle in Congress. The shots are being called by Big Labor and Papa Johnson and we had best prepare ourselves for another large dose of regimentation.

Letter To The Editor

Campus Radio Blasted As Unneeded Expense

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The controversy over the proposed Campus Carrier Current Radio System which reduced the final sessions of last semester's Student Legislature to befuddled chaos has finally been tossed into the lap of the student body as a whole. Popular consensus will undoubtedly set the Legislature's guidelines for acceptance or rejection of the proposal.

Passage of the Campus Radio bill would allocate an initial $23,200 from the Student Government general surplus fund for the establishment of the Carrier Current Radio System. Thereafter an annual appropriation of $11,628 operating expense would be necessary. This would bring the first year operating cost to $34,828.

A primary ten watt FM signal would be broadcast from Swain Hall, affording FM reception within a radius of five miles. Special equipment placed in each dorm would receive the FM signal, convert it to AM, and rebroadcast it using the electrical wiring in each building as a radiator. The secondary AM signal would be receivable by all standard AM broadcast radios operating in the immediate (fifty feet) dorm area.

Programming is planned to graviate around student tastes with a probable emphasis on current and past Top 40 hits and coverage of campus news and sports.

Proponents of the Campus Radio bill justify the proposal and the costs involved as (1) filling the need of entertainment and diversion now lacking because of poor night reception from nearby radio stations, and (2) serving to enhance student body cohesion and campus "spirit" by the operation of a truly student radio station presenting campus events and catering to campus tastes.

The first point is pure fiction. The second point is perhaps a valid and sincere expression of a genuine campus need. However, it is my opinion that campus radio per se is an impractical solution, and since I worked as a broadcast announcer for two years, I feel myself a competent judge of the capabilities of the broadcast media.

The question is whether it is worthwhile to invest $34,828 for the privilege of hearing campus news events reported on the spot. The answer of course is a resounding NO. The need for rapid reporting of the few really significant campus events is already admirably taken care of by Chapel Hill's radio station WCHL.

As for musical programming, the proposed radio system can not offer anything which is not already given gratis by the multitude of surrounding commercial radio stations.

Many advocates of the Carrier Current Radio System would like to tell us that the initial $34,828 investment is not really important since it would come out of the Student Government surplus fund. They would have us believe that the money students paid yesterday is not really money at all and not subject to the same considerations as the fees students will be paying tomorrow. Would we squander tomorrow's money for the radio programming that is already ours free today? With the hundreds of legitamate campus needs crying out, have we no better use for $34,828 than to throw it away?

Homer J. Moore, Jr.
332 Craige

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Anyone at the first Di-Phi debate on campus radio would have been alarmed at the closeness of the vote and surprised that such a program would be taken seriously. Just as a little boy loves spending money for candy, so do a group of people on this campus who have a penchant for novelties.

It is true that the radios that are now listened to provide only sports information on such minor events as the UNC-Ohio State game, plus world news and a wide selection of music. It is argued that we could have campus election coverage by radio. During elections progapanda would constantly bombard us not only by newspaper, but also by air. But there is a great need for campus radio, the greatest being that we must provide jobs for those with such a rabid interest in a radio career that they are willing to risk our money and practice on us. Let's vote for their need and not for our greed.

A View from The Hill

CHAPEL HILL — Miss Emily Proudbottom is the recipient of the 1965 Carrie Nation Cup for Clean Living, officials of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Housemothers (BPOH) announced yesterday.

Miss Proudbottom, a housemother in Frumply Dormitory, received the award for her "courageous enforcement of the Peeker Span Law," a coed regulation that prohibits the wearing of slacks and Bermuda shorts "without the modest protection of a long outer garment."

The incident which precipitated the award occurred last Friday when coed Mary Agnes Entwistle fell from her window on the fourth floor of Frumply.

Miss Entwistle was wearing Bermuda shorts at the time.

A storm of protests was soon to follow, spearheaded by Miss Proudbottom and the BPOH.

"There is no place for toreadors and Bermudas at a seat of learning," declared the outspoken housemother. "No event, whether it be social, athletic or accidental, can justify the donning of these distasteful garments."

Miss Entwistle's fall occurred when she leaned too far out of her window to attend to some Venus Fly Traps that were growing in a window box.

Miss Proudbottom dismissed this information as irrelevant.

"The fact still remains that the incident occurred. Mary Agnes should have had the presence of mind to put on a raincoat before mulching her Venus Fly Trap. Try as we might, we can not avoid the fact that Mary Agnes left the dormitory while clad in Bermuda shorts."

This same steadfast determination has been exhibited by Housemother Proudbottom on numerous occasions in the past. The most conspicuous of these instances occurred in 1958 when she led an enthusiastic, but fruitless, fund-raising campaign to furnish the girl's gym with 2,000 London Fog raincoats.

"It was the only decent thing I could do," said Miss Proudbottom humbly.

As dedicated as she is, the kindly housemother's fervor is tempered with tolerance and understanding. These qualities were evident in the statement that she issued to the DTH yesterday:

"We of the BPOH have tried to be reasonable. We have tried to overlook the possibility that many male students may have observed Miss Entwistle, not only during, but after her tasteless plummet from the fourth floor of Frumply. We have tried to overlook the fact that this young lady displayed very little composure and discretion during the entire matter.

"With these things in mind, we have prepared a very generous, 'slap-on-the-wrist' reprimand that has been signed by all of the members of the BPOH."

This statement, according to Miss Proudbottom, will be entered on Miss Entwistle's permanent record and read at her funeral next Tuesday.

NAACP Won't Test Fraternity Discrimination

UNC NAACP will not support a test rush on campus fraternities and sororities, chapter officials told the DTH yesterday.

In a statement prepared by the executive committee of UNC NAACP it was stated that the idea for test rush discussed at the group's Thursday night meeting was rejected.

"We do advocate that Negroes who are interested in fraternities and sorotities seek admission to them as would any student," the statement said.

Want to be a big hero? Then look for big challenges!
Come to General Electric.where the young men are important men.
Important responsibilities come to you early at G.E.
You could find yourself on the team responsible for marketing a new appliance. Or you could be in India, installing a nuclear power plant. Or in a laboratory, looking for applications for a remarkable new "artificial gill" that lets mammals breathe under water.
This is a worldwide company that makes over 200,000 different products, from jet engines and weather satellites to computers and color TV. In this kind of company, you have to be very good to get very far.

Basketball coach Dean Smith is a bubble buster. You see, he recruited this guy Rusty Clark who is 6-11 and who is the tallest boy ever signed to play basketball for UNC.

Only Clark is not 6-11 and he's really only the second tallest Tar Heel.

You can tell that Smith has no fisherman in him because he actually measured his catch. He says Clark is only 6-10½. Bubble buster.

The sports quote of the week came out of yesterday's cross country meet with South Carolina. The 3.1 mile run was supposed to have been not only a test of Tar Heel team strength but a red-hot duel between Carolina Captain Jim Meade and defending ACC champ Bob Crombie.

Well, Meade finished first, which wasn't unexpected but Crombie didn't come in second. He wasn't third either, nor fourth or fifth.

Jim could have gone in, showered, and met Crombie at the finish line in his street clothes if he had wanted, because the ACC king was dead last

"I think," UNC Coach Joe Hilton said, "that Crombie was out of shape." And he said it with a straight face.

Meade-Crombie Duel Fizzles

Harriers Win No. 1

By BOB ORR

DTH Sports Writer

The Tar Heel varsity cross country team opened its '65 season yesterday with a 22-37 victory over South Carolina.

It was a surprising day for both teams. The expected duel between UNC's Jim Meade and the Gamecocks' Bob Crombie never materialized. Mead won easily with a time of 15:41.1 over the abbreviated three mile plus UNC course. Crombie, the defending ACC cross country champion, finished dead last.

Janowitz and Kurth, both of whom had been well back in practice, indicated that they can be counted on as front liners.

The real shocker was the Meade - Crombie race. The Tar Heel captain indicated before the meet that he was in the best shape ever for an opening meet. Evidently Crombie wasn't.

Meade took the lead from the start, led by 100 yards at the mile mark, and finished over a quarter of a mile in front of the nearest challenger, USC's Bob Taylor.

The Tar Heels run at Maryland next Friday in what will probably be their toughest meet. The Terps are defending ACC champs.

The freshman distance runners opened their season yesterday with an 8 to 13 win over the USC frosh.

Leading the way for the Tar Heels was Jim Hotelling. The Chapel Hill native won easily with a time of 9:38.8 over a two mile course. For Hotelling, the victory clearly labels him as a bright distance prospect. In the varsity - freshman meet last week he finished second to Jim Meade.

USC managed to grab second place, but after that the Carolina frosh completely dominated the scoring. They took the next four places, gave up seventh place to USC, then swamped the Gamecock frosh by placing the next five men.

Also looking impressive for UNC were Truett Goodwin, Joe Lasich, Tom Greer, and Steve Williams.

VARSITY FINISHERS: 1. Meade (UNC), 2. Taylor (USC), 3. Williams (UNC), 4. McGuinness (USC), 5. Janowitz (UNC), 6. Kurth (UNC),7. McCall (UNC, 8. Mithchum (USC), 9. Worley (UNC), 10. Putnam (UNC), 11. Bassett (UNC), 12. Mathews (UNC), 13. Daw (UNC), 14. Poulles (USC), 15. Whitt (USC), 16. Crombie (USC). Winning time: 15:41.1.

1. Hotelling (UNC), 2. Hillgrove (USC), 3. Goodwin (UNC), 4. Lasich (UNC), 5. Greer (UNC), 6. Williams (UNC), 7. Smith (USC), 8. Smith R. (UNC), 9. Franklin (UNC), 10. Autry (UNC), 11. Harris (UNC), 12. Locke (UNC), 13. Gunderson (USC), 14. Moorehouse (UNC). Winning time: 9:38.8.

The Tar Heels had quite a show at Kenan Stadium Saturday. The first and second acts were quite impressive. The final two killed the entire production.

Over 35,000 fans watched the Tar Heels ring up two easy touchdowns against the visiting Virginia Cavaliers.

"Just what we expected" thought some as a field goal padded the margin to 17-0.

But the Tar Heel show had a surprise ending — an Alfred Hitchcock twist you might say. The Cavaliers took charge of the dramatics in the second half and completely ran the show.

Virginia quarterback Tom Hodges was the director and "How To Score Three Easy Touchdowns" was the theme.

Tar Heel fans did not like the show. The Production received very bad reviews. Here are some of the opinions:

"I though the Tar Heels played excellent football in the first quarter," said junior Norman Shearin from Rocky Mount. "They just didn't measure up in the last three. I guess it was desire they were lacking.

"After they scored their second touchdown," said senior Clyde Thompson from Raleigh, "I guess they thought they had the game in the bag. They stopped trying then and Virginia stomped 'em."

Bill Anderson, a sophomore from Rocky Mount, had a different approach.

"Talbott played a good game—he tried real hard. Some others did their best, too. But I guess they thought they had the game made in the second half—they just sat on their cans.

"I was disappointed," he concluded. "I though we had a chance for a good record after the Ohio State victory."

Others had similar opinions:

"They played good ball the first quarter then gave up," said Cramerton senior Jim Carpenter.

"They looked like a high school team the last three quarters," said Hunter Robinson from Charlottesville, Va.

Top Ten

Texas and Nebraska were solid 1-2 choices in this week's AP college football poll.

Texas took the top spot for the second week in a row by defeating Indiana, 27-12 for its third straight victory.

The Georgia Bulldogs made the largest gain in this week's poll. They jumpted from 10th to fourth after handing Michigan its first defeat of the season 15-7.

Duke was the only ACC club receiving votes.

1. Texas
2. Nebraska
3. Arkansas
4. Georgia
5. Michigan State
6. Purdue
7. Notre Dame
8. Southern Calif.
9. Miss. State
10. Florida

Playboys Tangle In Intramural Tilt

Who are the better Playboys, Alexander or Joyner? If you go by tag football results the answer is easily Alexander.

Alexander's Playboys whipped the Joyner Playboys on Monday, 30-0. Sonny Lackey led the way with two touchdowns.

Maverick C No. 2 crushed Maverick B No. 3, 50-4. Oliver Melvin and Chris Hodhes scored twice and Ozie Faison, Mike Williams and Charles Parsons tallied once.

The Everett Trojans won their second straight game by beating the Graham Crackers, 12-6.

Two touchdowns each by Doug Wilkinson and Jay Lacklen led Ehringhaus B-6 over Ehringhaus A-2, 31-6.

The Med School Blues trip ped the Navy Sea Bats, 9-6. Bill Wilson's TD and Jim Powers' PAT was the winning margin for Med School, which also scored a safety.

Tar Heel Booters Off To Play East Carolina

The Tar Heel booters, fresh from an impressive 4-0 opening-match win over Air Force last Friday, will be pitted against a club which is in its first season of intercollegiate soccer competition.

"I have no idea of the strength or ability of East Carolina," said Allen yesterday as he sent his club through a spirited workout on Fetzer Field. "We'll just have to play it by ear."

Allen expressed again his pleasure with last week's match. UNC got a terrific team effort led by Bronson VanWyck, Jim Johnston, Jim Hammer, Gordy Cadwgan, John Loud and Tom Roberts.

Allen will go with the same lineup he used Friday.

Carolina's next home match will be Friday, against American University of the District of Columbia.

'Clutch' Dodgers Hit Series

By BILL ROLLINS

DTH Sports Writer

In the heat of the very hot National League pennant race, rookie Cincinnati Manager Dick Sisler said that the Los Angeles Dodgers would be the first to drop back, and first-year San Francisco pilot Herman Franks was shouting that his Giants wouldn't fall from first again.

But 12-year veteran Manager Walt Alston of Los Angeles remained tranquil in the midst of it all, and now his Dodgers are headed for a World Series engagement with the Minnesota Twins tomorrow.

Fighting to stay in contention with the hot Giants who rolled to a 4 1-2 - game lead in the middle of September, Los Angeles launched a 13 game winning streak which finally brought it league lead. The Angelenos took 15 of their last 16 — while the Giants cooled to 8-8 — and thus earned their second pennant in the last three years.

The Dodgers had no power, but they came up with clutch hits just often enough to blend perfectly with the base-running of Maury Wills (94 steals, 18 winning runs scored), and a superb pitching staff.

Rookie Jim Lefebvre batted in 69 runs with only a .250 average, and plated the winning tally 16 times — three in the last nine wins. Ron Fairly had 70 RBI, and Lou Johnson (58 RBI) filled in for seasonal - long injured Tommy Davis, and was a stellar clutch performer. Willie Davis put together a 17-game hitting streak to spur the club in August.

Sandy Koufax, baseball's premier pitcher, was fabulous. He led the league with 26 wins, a 2.01 ERA, 336 innings pitched, and set a major league strikeout record of 382. And, he pitched a perfect game, making it four seasons in succession in which he has hurled a no - hitter. Five of his last six wins were shutouts.

Don Drysdale (23-12) won his last five starts to pace LA in the tough going, refusing to yield an earned run in his final three starts. The other regular starter, Claude Osteen (15-15), won 4 of his last 5 decisions.

Ron Perranoski gave up only two earned runs in the last month of the season, and there is ample relief support behind him in Bob Miller, Jim Brewer, Howie Reed and John Purdin.

In a short series of seven games, pitching makes the Dodgers the toughest club the NL has to offer.

Students Endorse Carrier Current 3,301 To 1,099

In Election Computed By IBM Machine, Every District Turns Out For Radio

By ANDY MYERS
DTH Staff Writer

It's all over but the legislation.

Campus radio was endorsed by the student body yesterday, with 3,301 voting for and 1,099 voting against the system.

Voting on IBM cards instead of ballots, the 4,400 students passed their mass judgment, on something the Student Legislature has been sitting on for a semester.

Although the tallying of votes was supposed to be simplified by the computerized cards, returns were no known until after 10 p.m. last night.

Graham Memorial received numerous calls from students wishing to know the "instant" results, but a delay in processing the cards took over two hours to correct.

Hugh Blackwell said yesterday that the campus radio bill will be approved by the finance committee as soon as possible.

After that, it will pass to the floor of the Student Legislature to be voted on.

Campus radio will take $34,848 from the general surplus of the SL this first year. Some $11,000 of that will go for operating costs, and the rest will be for setting up the facility.

From studios on campus, a signal will be sent via telephone wires over to Swain Hall where there is an FM transmitter.

A signal will be broadcast over a range of five miles from Swain. It will be FM.

Each dormitory will be provided with a special FM receiver to change the signal to AM. The signal will be fed into the electrical wiring of the dormitory, but the wires will act only as short-range antennas.

Any radio, including ransistors, within 50 feet from the dormitory will be able to receive the signal. The station will be somewhere on the lower end of the radio dial.

Programming will be entirely by UNC students. Some suggested shows include "Top 40," Oldie-Goldie shows, jazz, classical and folk music.

In addition, intensive sports coverage of intramurals as well as varsity events will be featured. John Stupak, chairman of the campus radio committee, said pre-game warm-ups and game wrap-ups will probably be used.

News, weather and commentary at regular intervals and campus news hows have been suggested. Stupak said that one unique aspect of the campus radio will be an absence of advertisements.

He said that unlike most popular radio stations in the area, which cater to the subteen and teen set, the campus radio will appeal only to the UNC student.

Quiz promptings, panel discussions and emergency announcements will be a valuable service of the campus radio.

The carrier current system has grown to be popular on the American college campus Both N. C. State and Duke have carrier current systems.

While many campus radio systems are limited, the system at UNC will be "quite mobile" according to Stupak. He said on-the-spot coverage of campus news events will most likely be popular.

"Suppose there was a rally in Y-Court like the Students for Teachers one last year," he said. "We could bring our microphones to the spot and get instant coverage."

Voting by district went as follows:

Men's District I: Victory Village and out of tow students, 437 for, 46 against.

Men's District II: Town students, 70 for, 74 against.

Men's Distrcit IV: town students, 61 for, 28 against.

Men's District V: Carr, Old East, Old West, Battle-Vance-Pettigrew, 136 for, 56 against.

Men's District VII: Aycock, Graham, Stacy, Everett, Lewis, 384 for, 127 against.

Women's District I: Sororities, Victory Village, town, 49 for, 28 against.

Women's District II: Alderman, McIver, 98 for, 33 against.

Women's District V: East and West Cobb, 126 for, 28 against.

Women's District VI: Winston, 54 for, 20 against.

Association Complies

College Group Is Unhappy

The Southern Association of Colleges and Schools is complying with Secretary of State Thad Eure's request that they file for domestication in North Carolina.

But association officials said Monday they are not happy about it and are filing under protest.

Acting Director Donald C. Agnew said he has sent Eure the completed forms and a $45 check to cover the filing fee.

"We are including a statement to make it clear that, while we are complying with the request, we do not feel we should have been asked to domesticate in North Carolina. We just don't feel this is necessary," Agnew said.

Eure replied to Agnew's statement saying, "I wouldn't say one word or fail to say one word that I wouldn't say about any other foreign corporation. There's absolutely no distinction."

The statement will not be released until it arrives in Eure's office.

Officials of the Association met in Atlanta Monday to confer on the situation before the letter was drafted.

The Southern Association is a regional accrediting agency which has figured prominently in the controversy over the speaker ban.

Dean Emmett B. Fields of Vanderbilt, chairman of its Commission on Colleges, said at the August ban hearings that the law is "an infringement on the trustee administration of the University."

Agnew said last week that Eure's request was a "red herring" growing out of the association's threat to withdraw accreditation of State-supported schools because of the Speaker Ban Law.

Eure wrote the 1963 law which outlaws Communists and Fifth Amendment pleaders from speaking on State-supported campuses.

Deputy Atty. Gen. Ralph Moody wrote an opinion on whether the association should be required to domesticate in North Carolina at the request of Eure.

President Faces Operation Friday

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Johnson announced personally yesterday he will enter Bethesda Naval Hospital Thursday night for removal of a poorly functioning gall bladder.

Johnson, reading a statement to reporters in the White House cabinet room, said "doctors expect there will be a minimal time during which I will not be conducting business as usual."

The chief executive emphasized that, should presidential action or decisions be required at a time when he could not personally carry them out, Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey will act for him.

The one-to-two-hour operation will be performed Friday morning at the naval hospital in suburban Bethesda, Md., where Johnson was a patient last January with a heavy cold.

The President said his doctors have diagnosed his condition as "a poorly functioning gall bladder with stones."

He said the physicians decided it should be removed.

Johnson reported that he first experienced difficulty on Sept. 7 while on his Texas ranch.

Felt Pains

"I felt some pains in my stomach which seemed to be the result of something I had eaten," he related.

Johnson went on to say that the White House physician, Vice Adm. George G. Burkley, suspected gall bladder trouble and that further examinations confirmed that tentative diagnosis.

The operation will be performed by Dr. George A. Hallenbeck, 50, who heads a section on General surgery and the section of surgical research at the Mayo Clinic, Rochester, Minn.

Dr. Hallenbeck, who met with newsmen after the President made his statement, said that the risk involved in the operation is minimal.

Dr. J. Willis Hurst of Atlanta, who has been Johnson's heart specialist since the chief executive's 1955 heart attack, also was present and said that Johnson is as able to stand the operation as anyone his age who never had a heart attack.

10 To 14 Days

In response to a question, Press Secretary Bill D. Moyers said the doctors expect Johnson will remain in the hospital 10 to 14 days.

Hallenbeck said that after the President leaves the hospital, "a reduced schedule would probably be necessary for a few weeks." During that time, he said, Johnson might "become tired more quickly than he normally would."

When Johnson finished reading his own statement a large gathering of reporters started to walk smiling from the room, the newsmen called out, "Good luck Mr. President." He seemed visibly affected by this expression.

Humphrey made a brief statement after Johnson's departure, saying that:

"The President has fully discussed the situation with me and with the cabinet and we are clear as to the procedures to be followed during his short absence if necessity arises."

Youthful Newsmen Beware: Get Set For Tough Work

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

The managing editor of Newsday told a group of journalism students Monday night to prepare for irregular hours, unglamorous beginning work and demanding bosses.

William F. McIlwain also explained why the syndicate owned by the Long Island Daily no longer distributes novelist John O'Hara's columns.

McIlwain himself professionally entered the newspaper business after an education at Wake Forest College. Before he came to Newsday, he had worked on the Charlotte Observer and other North Carolina papers.

Throughout his talk, McIlwain kept the audience entertained with tales of successes and failures in his paper's city room.

One Newsday staffer became known as "the hot lunch man," the managing editor said, because he thought he could always stop working at a fixed hour so his wife could serve him a hot dinner.

The "hot lunch man" didn't last long at Newsday.

Another young journalist — "a beautiful girl" — was not even hired after she declined to work from 7 p.m. to 2:30 a.m. The staff hated to see that one go, McIlwain said.

Newcomers, he explained, should not expect to become U. N. correspondents, famous political writers, columnists and dramatics critics — at least not immediately.

In fact, McIlwain remarked they shouldn't even expect to do a lot of feature writing. "Everybody should get a whack at it," he commented. Besides, he went on, reporters need to master both "hard" and "soft" news. Feature writers frequently have better working schedules than their colleagues and sometimes write articles covering nearly half a newspaper page.

Then McIlwain told of a young reporter who went so far as to try specifying before he got hired the exact percentage of feature work he would do. Like the beautiful girl and the "hot lunch man," he soon left the Newsday city room.

Newcomers, the managing editor warned the audience, should be able to "dig up" their own stories. He said many gruff city editors have a tendency to send them out on difficult assignments to test their ability and their enthusiasm.

McIlwain thinks one of the best ways to move up in newspaper work is to have a desk job, though a competent reporter can also advance.

O'Hara was hired as a Newsday columnist because of his reputation, McIlwain said, commenting that the famous novelist got "a handsome fee" and nobody tampered with his columns.

But, McIlwain continued, editors across the country still didn't like the product, so Newsday had to lower O'Hara's salary. And when the paper lowered it, the best-selling writer decided to become "an unemployed newspaperman" for the tenth time.

Asked if he agrees with Art Buchwald that editors shy away from political humor, McIlwain said:

"I think there's some truth in that . . . Some papers are pretty jittery . . . (but) readers sometimes frighten you by taking things too literally."

Newsday, a tabloid with a circulation of about 400,000, was started less than 30 years ago. UNC journalism professor Kenneth Byerley believes its success is largely due to its stressing the "local angle" in news stories.

Grid Player Hit, Robbed

Tar Heel fullback Leon Fonville, a junior from Tabor City, was robbed of $1 Monday night, after being knocked unconscious from behind with a "huge stone," police said.

Fonville was hit with a five or six pound chunk of large concrete pipe, police said. He said he remembers nothing but hearing footsteps behind him before being attacked, which took place near the south east corner of Kenan Stadium.

Campus Police Chief Arthur Beaumont said Fonville had left Woollen Gym about 8:30 p.m. and turned up in the emergency room at the infirmary at p.m.

"He must have been out for 15 minutes," Beaumont said. "We got some bloody fingerprints on the rock and there are some distinctive footprints in the area."

Beaumont said Fonville reported seeing a man walking a collie dog a few hundred feet in front of him before he was attacked. If the man were located he might give police some clue to his assailant.

"If that man could be located he might tell us if he noticed anyone hanging around the fieldhouse in Kenan Stadium," Beaumont said.

Fonville was kept in the infirmary Monday night for observation, and released Tuesday afternoon.

Chuck Erickson, athletic director said that most likely Fonville will be ready for Saturday's game with State, if he is needed.

When he woke up, Fonville said his wallet was lying beside him. The dollar was gone, but some money in his pocket was untouched.

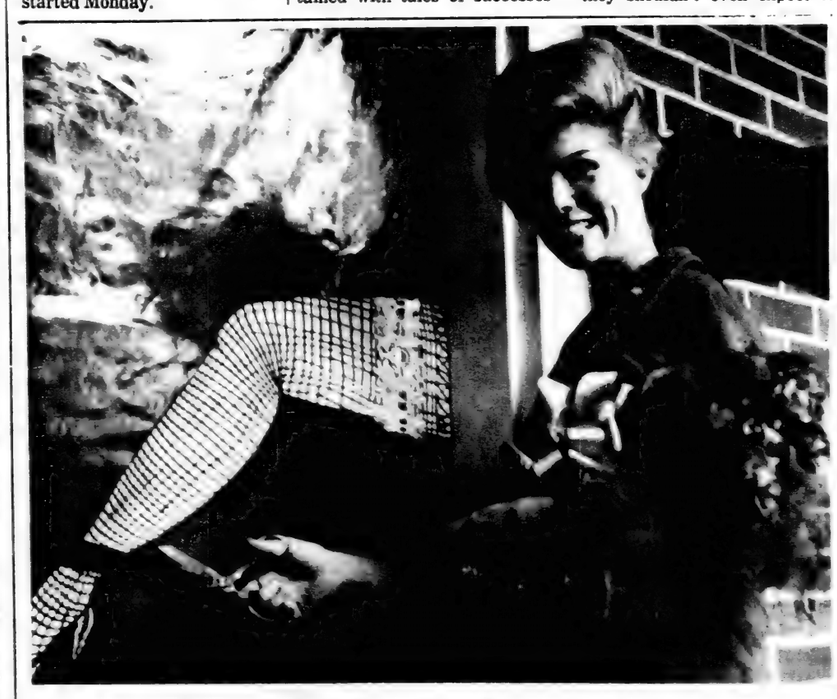
Beaumont said the footprints at the scene resembled those of boots or crepe soled shoes. No plaster impression was made because of the rough ground.

Captain B. E. Durham, of the Chapel Hill police, and detectives are investigating.

Informal Rush

The scurry of Formal rush is ended, but the round of social life began again this week with informal rush. Informal rush is a smaller version of the parties and the introduction to sorority life on the campus. The rushees are invited to the houses for a meal and a friendly evening of chitchat.

All women who participated in formal rush and dropped out, or failed to receive bids are automatically place on the rush list. All other interested women are eligible, provided they have a 2.0 average. They should sign up in the Dean of Women's office as soon as possible, as rush started Monday.



WHAT'S A NICE GIRL LIKE PATSY doing in a place like this? Performing a ribbon-cutting ceremony, that's what. Patsy Puckett, Miss Mississippi first runner-up to the Miss America contest and recent visitor to campus, officially opens the "Red Garter Room" at Maverick House. The room is the newest edition to the Craige Residence Hall night Club.

Yarbrough Sings Here Next Week

The lyric tenor voice of Glenn Yarbrough will bathe the walls of Carmichael Auditorium Tuesday as Graham Memorial presents the singer as a grand finale to University Day.

All UNC Students, dates and staff will be admitted free to the performance which begins at 9 p.m.

Yarbrough, former lead singer of the reknowned Limelighters Trio is one of the few popular singers who concentrates on melody and not on beat.

He is not interested in being branded as a folk singer. "I just try to do good songs, I don't care where they come from." he said. He wants to branch out beyond the strict confines of folk music.

He is a former student of St. John's College in Annapolis and later studied classical Greek and pre-Socratic philosphy at Mexico City College. He went to New York to work and due to a chance meeting became acquainted with Lou Gottlieb and Alex Hassilev of the Limelighters.

Some Flies On That Poll

A University of North Carolina graduate who has gained considerable recognition for the pertinence and accuracy of his national polls of public opinion has recently demonstrated that sometimes his findings have flies on them.

Louis Harris put this question to what he called a "carefully drawn cross section of the adult public": "America has many different types of people in it, but we would like to know whether you think each of these different types of people is more helpful or more harmful to American life, or don't they help or harm things much one way or the other?"

The results, he said, show that the United States may no longer be a nation of "rugged individualists" where each man can "hold his own views and go his own way."

We aren't so sure.

The poll seemed to confuse "tolerance" and "approval." The distinction is vital enough to warrant a re-evaluation of the entire survey.

These are his statistics:

TOLERANCE OF NON-CONFORMITY

	More Harmful	More Helpful	Doesn't Mater
Political or professional behavior:
American Communist party members	89	1	10
People who don't believe in God	72	1	27
Anti-Viet Nam war pickets	68	5	27
Civil rights demonstrators	68	16	16
Student demonstrators at colleges	65	7	28
College professors active in unpopular causes	58	6	36
Working career women with young children	50	8	42
Members of the John Birch Society	48	4	48
Lawyers who defend notorious criminals	34	18	48
Social behavior:
Homosexuals	70	1	29
Prostitutes	70	4	26
Women who gossip all the time	65	1	34
Beatniks	52	1	47
Young men with beards and long hair	52	1	47
High school students more interested in athletics than studies	45	8	47
Women who wear bikini bathing suits	36	5	59
Young people who like rock 'n' roll	10	8	82
Young people who read books most of the time	10	47	43

It is pretty obvious to everyone that many people are not pleased by the sight of a dirty, sandaled, bearded picketer who is demonstrating — whether it be for "filthy speech" or against American involvement in Viet Nam.

And nobody has ever had much use for "women who gossip all the time," but the poll's conclusion that "it is perfectly apparent that American beliefs in the right to be different are not nearly as firm as some have claimed" is a superficial assumption.

It will take more than these statistics to convince us that the belief in the right to be different is less strong than disapproval of those who exercise that right.

The rather frivolous use of the words "harmful" and "helpful," applied in the same context to Communists, women who wear bikinis and young people who read books, raises further doubts about the usefulness of the report.

The issue at stake is not "do you think it is harmful for someone to do this," but "would you stop them if it were within your power."

Conservatives are usually identified with those in the "conformist" camp. But James Jackson Kilpatrick, conservative spokesman and editor of the Richmond News-Leader, has said, "A free society that suppresses bad taste, exhibitionism and protest is no free society at all . . . Though a student may have a right to grow a beard, he has no right to attend a particular institution . . .

"It is a terrible dilemma. The typical conservative gazes upon these unkempt undergraduates with something close to revulsion. Gad sir! The beards offend against his tidy world. Yet he acknowledges with a sigh, that it is the very essence of conservatism that some right to be untidy must forever be preserved."

Some might use the Harris survey to say that tolerance in America is dying. If it is, then America is dying too.

Letters To The Editor

Somebody Out There Likes Us

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Occasionally I have the privilege of speaking with students of the University who seriously think about ways of improving their life and opportunities as they study there; they regard themselves, these of whom I speak, as responsible citizens of an academic community.

Looking back on my own four years of study at Chapel Hill, I see a few student organizations which are particularly deserving of praise for the noble work they do, for their own members as well as for the University as a whole.

The Daily Tar Heel, bumbling and slipshod as it often seems, is nonetheless a monument to student responsibility; for it faithfully produces a daily paper for a vast student body. It safeguards the institution against rumor and ignorance in the situations that arise on campus, and against capricious actions by teachers or administrators. Moreover, it reminds a vast collection of students and scholars in many fields, that they are there together, with certain important interests in common.

The student government, overladen with political squabbling and with many vague-talking, glib-thinking would-be politicians, nevertheless does some excellent things. To identify and act upon the difficult student problems of an expanding University, will require this year a maximum of their talent and intelligence. It is within their power (and awesome budget extracted from every student's fees) to support some very worthy projects. They are to be commended for every good work they do.

I regard the Di and Phi Societies as a phenomenon in the University which is of great value and potential. I mean that they represent an open forum for public discussion, and this is vitally needed in such a large gathering of cultures and backgrounds and different opinions; for however much the students may differ from each other, they must be the future's enlightened leaders, and they must be arriving at some common truths, for successful actions in the world; at some understanding of the nature of each other's viewpoints, for realism and stability in the world. These debating socieities, as a public forum, ought to be supported and strengthened. They possess a history as old as the University itself, and as facinating. Every student should attend them, and do his part to restore them to a place of rightful prominence in a modern campus.

In the enlarging University there is a crying need for interested and sincere leadership from the students. Any student who will step out and take action on some worthy effort in any area, will help a vast university in a vast way. I salute the University and its students.

UNC's Puritans

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

It was just one of the standard harangues so many feel compelled to issue lately: Dickson "has endangered the respect for Student Government and in particular the Campus Code and Honor Code."

I must take issue with this flood of righteous garbage. Does not the effective, impartial functioning of the Code engender respect for them? Who among those who defame Dickson has led such a laundered life as to be free from any taint of indiscretion? Who would qualify for office if each code infringement (no necessarily conviction) meant disqualification. If getting caught is the only wrong that can be done, why have a code at all?

As I understand the Campus Code, it was not instituted to set up a Puritanical enclave. It was not a means to force us unerringly down the primrose path of virtue. It was set up as a model of responsible behavior. Infringements on this guide are expected. Indeed, transcendence of the Campus Code is often necessary in the establishment of the individual's personal code. Let us stop this hypocritical tirade and put Dickson's indiscretion in its proper perspective.

Let us prove to the people of North Carolina our integrity, our maturity, and our honor by giving our president's legislative program just consideration, and by giving our president respite from these self-righteous spiels.

Chase Cafeteria

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The consensus of opinion has been in the past, and is at the present time, that Chase Cafeteria is not "the best place to eat." It seems to me, however, that the cafeteria has undergone a considerable change since it first opened its doors last week. No longer are we hampered by an "ice spitting machine" that spits out ice flakes one at a time. No longer are we annoyed by a coffee machine that delivers tea. And not once in the past three days have I heard of anyone receiving hairs in his applesauce.

Most people's sentiments, upon their first visit to Chase are, in effect: "I wonder why they didn't make another food line? Such a big building—and only two food lines!" What most of them don't realize is that the law of diminishing returns makes another service line impractical. It would cost more money to operate than it could restore in profit.

Future improvements? Yes, Chase Cafeteria can be improved I would suggest:

1. The placement of 192 potted palm trees throughout the building
2. The addition of 237 cashiers
3. The importation of 710 Japanese Geisha girls to serve as waitresses

Maybe Chase isn't the best place to eat in North Carolina. Maybe it isn't even the best place to eat on campus. But, fella, you tell that to my aching feet.

Only Eastern North Carolina To Go, And Then . . . Peace?

Intrigued by my experiences on the Carolina campus of 1995, the associate editor sent me back on a special assignment.

I was to find if the SPU was still in existence.

Indeed it was. It had even achieved the status of a major political party. It had changed its name, since its membership w's no longer predominantly student.

It was called the Militant Pacifist Party.

Mertram Bussell, Carolina MPP president, told me at South Building headquarters that the party had met with great success in its campaigns for peace.

"Through our efforts," said Bussell, "99.6 per cent of the globe is now at peace."

"Why, that's a startling statistic! Could you tell me how your party caused mankind to have a change of heart?"

"I think that can best be done by giving you a quick historical overview, beginning with your era.

"In 1970, when our party achieved a majority in both houses of Congress, we finally got our boys out of Viet Nam."

"But, didn't the communists take over the country?"

"The people took over the country."

"But didn't—weren't the communists—"

"Aren't the communists people?", said Bussell, thrusting his face toward mine.

"Of course, but—"

"Well, then, your terms are meaningless.

"In 1979 our Get Out of Hawaii campaign met with smashing success in less than a year. From that time on, our party has prevented the loss of countless American lives." He sat taller as he spoke.

"You must be very proud," I said.

"Yes," he whispered.

I heard a great commotion outside. I looked out the window and saw hundreds of students marching and singing below us on Columbia Street. Many of them were carrying large posters. The posters were labeled "Get Our of W-S."

"What does that mean?", I asked slowly.

"That's our latest campaign: we're going to get our boys out of Winston-Salem."

"What!", I roared.

"Success seems imminent. Our forces are being driven back at every turn."

We heard a faint whistling noise in the distance. A hush seemed to seize the campus. The noise got closer and became so shrill that I covered my ears.

The building suddenly convolsed and I was catapulted across the room and into a wall.

When I came to, Bussell was staring out the window. He turned toward me as I got to my feet.

"We're lucky," he said. "It hit on the west side of Carrboro. Come on, we've got to get out of here."

"Where are we going?"

East—that's the only place left to go now. We'll set up a new headquarters in Fayetteville to carry on the fight for peace."

I stumbled down the stairs after him. We hurried to a waiting car and got in. Hundreds of people were running through the streets. We finally made it to the Raleigh Road.

The shock was wearing off. Suddenly angry, I turned to Bussell.

"I thought you said the world was at peace."

"I said 99.96 per cent of the world was at peace. Only .04 per cent to go." He had a dreamy look in his eyes. "Only eastern North Carolina to go, and then—perfect peace."

"You must be very proud," I sneered.

"I am," he whispered.

Coeds Not Dated Through October

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

As four Carolina Coeds we would like an explanation of the satirical cartoons and comments appearing in The Daily Tar Heel on September 24 and 26 concerning the reputation of the Carolina Coed. Five of the twenty-five girls on our hall are either pinned or going steady. The remaining twenty, however, are not dated through October, nor do many of them have dates for this weekend.

As for the cartoon in the Sunday DTH, we feel that the insinuation is demoralizing. It is not fair for you to judge all of us by the actions of a few. The current attitude of the gentlemen students on this campus toward the coeds is one of ridicule and rudeness. True, there may be some reasons for this behavior, but with the wide variety of girls studying here, no general classification of all of us should be made. Just as all Carolina gentlemen are not bad, neither are all the coeds. Respect for both sexes should be encouraged and greater harmony strived for among all students. Such cartoons as those mentioned above only aid in destroying any image we try to build or improve upon. As the student newspaper, the DTH should be striving to represent all the coeds, not just a few.

Carson Blasted

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I wonder if Don Carson is as courageous about making statements as to the "irresponsibility" in Student Government in public as he is in the sanctuary of his own party meeting. It seems strange that when Craige Dorm held a debate on the Dickson issue Tuesday night, unsuccessful candidate for President Don Carson couldn't arrange his affairs so that he could meet Dickson face to face, especially since Carson resides in Craige. In fact, there was no debate since none of Dickson's opposition made themselves known.

The complete irony of this episode is fulfilled in the front page report of Monday's UP meeting in Wednesday's Duly Tar Heel. Carson spared no rhetoric in personally blasting Dickson under the guise of "setting the record straight." The record was set straight enough when Britt Gordon pronounced thusly, "I stand ready to give all I have . . . in the defense of the honor of the University and the integrity of this Student Government." Presumably, Gordon means that he is ready to take over for Dickson if someone finds a way to force Dickson out.

The tragic humor was heightened when party chairman, Jim Hubbard, uttered these immortal words, "This party will never lower itself to the point that its committment to this campus is to criticize or slander." He's kidding no one but himself

New Fraternity

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Fred Powledge is really good. He found out a lot about his subject matter before venturing to describe it. There are few writers dealing with the "New Student Left" from the outside who do not resort to verbal abuse of those things that make them personally uncomfortable, regardless of issues. I am very glad to see that there is an exception—1957-58 must have been a good year for the DTH.

The Noisiest Tar Heels Of Them All

Jane Dankworth: "Gimme A 'C' "

In the old days, they depended entirely on megaphones and the power of their vocal chords. Now they use microphones and stereo amplifiers.

But the purpose is still the same — to let the eleven men on the Tar Heel team know that they have eleven thousand fans in the stands pulling for them all the way.

What would a football Saturday in Kenan Stadium be without the team spirit and jovial atmosphere of the Carolina cheerleading squad?

Those attending the game, who know nothing about football, only have to watch the soaring megaphones and frisky skirts at the edge of the field to know when to yell and when to moan.

WHICH WAY IS YOUR PERSONALITY WARPED?

Don't jump to any quick conclusions! Capitol Records has thoughtfully provided you a foolproof method for answering this question and two equally burning issues:

Is Our Society Going To Pot? and Are You Ready To Hear

ART BUCHWALD?

Pictured here is the first and only record made by nationally-syndicated columnist Art Buchwald. You may or may not know of this fellow. No matter. Buchwald is either:

a) "The most comic American since Mark Twain"

b) "Nothing more than a writer of unadulterated rot"

Now with that in mind, you can see why we're afraid this album could fall into the wrong hands. To prevent that possibility, we've designed the little quiz you are about to take. DO NOT DIVULGE YOUR SCORE!

	TRUE	FALSE
1) The Russians scramble every third word of Mr. Buchwald's column to confuse the C.I.A.
2) The Louvre can be run in under six minutes.
3) Arthritis is unavailable in Palm Beach, Florida.
4) The best reason for contributing to charity is getting your picture taken.
5) There is a drastic shortage of Communists in the U.S.
6) Every American city should have a resident Communist.
7) J. Edgar Hoover is a fictional character appearing in the Reader's Digest.
8) The majority of college men believe in chastity.
9) College girls don't respect boys who "give in."
10) A Harvard boy wouldn't think of "going all the way" with a girl; besides, he wouldn't even know what it meant.

SCORING: Give yourself 5 points for every TRUE; give yourself 0 for every false.
INTERPRETATION: A score of 0 indicates you can't be fooled by stupid questions. Don't waste your time on Art Buchwald.
A score of 100 indicates you're sick; so sick you'd better hear Art Buchwald right away.
Any score in between indicates "tilt"; take the test again!

Liberal Arts Majors

Announcing the Professional Qualification Test for outstanding career appointments to

National Security Agency

Registration Deadline: Wednesday, October 13

If you expect to receive a liberal arts degree before September 1966, don't miss this opportunity to qualify for a rewarding career with the National Security Agency. All liberal arts applicants must take the Professional Qualification Test (PQT) as a prerequisite to NSA interviews for employment.

THE DEADLINE FOR TEST REGISTRATION IS WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 13 . . . THE TEST ITSELF WILL BE GIVEN ON CAMPUS ON SATURDAY, OCTOBER 23.

Challenging Career Program Areas

A unique agency functioning within the Department of Defense, NSA has a critical need for imaginative people. You can make immediate use of your college-acquired capabilities without first accumulating years of "experience." Your specific academic major is of secondary consequence as long as you relish and meet the challenge of extremely complex research problems that frequently will take you beyond the known and accepted boundaries of knowledge.

You will work on programs of national importance, in such areas as:

- Cryptography . . . the making of codes and ciphers
- Analytic research
- Language research
- Data systems design and programming
- Administrative management (finance and accounting, personnel, training, engineering administration)

The PQT Bulletin at your Placement Office outlines these areas further.

Advancement, Training and Educational Opportunities

NSA promotes from within and emphasizes orderly career development, awarding substantial salary increases as you assume greater responsibility. The environment is academic, and NSA stimulates professional and intellectual growth in many ways, including intensive formal and on-the-job training in new disciplines and methodology. Advanced study at any of seven area universities is partially or wholly reimbursed through NSA Fellowships and other assistance programs.

Attractive Location and Other Advantages

Located between Washington and Baltimore, NSA is also near the Chesapeake Bay, ocean beaches, ski resorts and other popular summer and winter recreation areas. The location permits your choice of city, suburban or country living.

Policies relating to vacations, insurance and retirement are fair and liberal—you enjoy the benefits of Federal employment without the necessity of Civil Service certification.

Where to go...What to do

First, pick up a PQT Bulletin at your Placement Office, the sooner the better. It contains a brief registration form which must be received in Princeton, N. J. by October 13. You will then be mailed a ticket admitting you to the Test on October 23.

Taking and passing the Professional Qualification Test in no way commits or obligates you to anything. But we urge you—even if you are not fully certain of your career interests—to investigate NSA opportunities now. The Test will be followed by on-campus interviews with NSA representatives.

Please note: You must be a U. S. citizen, subject to a character and loyalty check.

Gals Dominate Sex Bowl; Patriots Top Gorillas, 8-0

By ED FREAKLEY
DTH Staff Writer

The Thad Eure Super Patriots shut out the Green Gorillas 8-0 in yesterday afternoon's Sex Bowl.

The gold - clad Patrios strong defense downed a Gorilla back in the end zone early in the game for a two point safety and then scored on a five yard pass late in the first half. The conversion attempt was missed.

Over 200 enthusastic athletic suppporters turned out for the game on Alexander-Winston Play Field.

Both teams were made up of coeds from Winston and men from Alexander. The gals dominated most of the play and were outstanding all the way around.

Good Football Weather

Most fans said they thought the crisp weather was just right for what turned out to be a hot game.

Defense was the key to both Patriots scores. A busting tackle broke through the Gorilla forward wall to drop the quarterback in the end zone for the safety and the one touchdown was set up by an interception on the Gorilla 10 yard line.

From there the Patriot offense showed a fine display—of running — and crossed the goal line in two plays.

Don't Touch

There were several penalities called against the males of both teams — illegal use of hands on defense and offense hugging, er holding.

The Gorillas played well despite a weak secondary that wasn't quite as tough as the Patriots.

Both clubs concentrated on the attacks, air attacks. Passes, both forward and otherwise, were defended fairly well by both defenses, although a few were completed by expert throwers.

No Commies

The coach of the Patriots attributed the winning formula to his banning-out the Gorillas. "We didn't have even one communist on our team. Not ever a red head," he said.

In truth it was all good fun. Both the coeds and men enjoyed their afternoon and provided entertainment for many on what would have been a dull day.

Kick the dull driving habit. Step out in a lively Dodge Coronet.

Isn't it time you joined the Dodge Rebellion?

Forget all you've seen and heard about '66 cars. Because Coronet is here . . . sharp, smart and sassy, the greatest thing from Dodge since Year One. Loaded with luxury the higher-priced cars haven't caught onto yet. With a choice of five engines, each one designed to make the walls of Dullsville come tumbling down. And with a whole slew of standard equipment that used to cost extra. Like an outside rear view mirror. A padded dash for extra safety. Variable-speed electric windshield wipers and washers. Backup lights. Turn signals. Seat belts, two front and two rear. And, as some extra frosting on the Coronet cake, a 5-year or 50,000-mile warranty.*

Enough said to get you really tempted? Now let's get away from the look-alike, drive-alike, first-cousin cars with Coronet, a car with a lively personality all its own.

DODGE DIVISION CHRYSLER MOTORS CORPORATION '66 Dodge Coronet

*HERE'S HOW DODGE'S 5-YEAR, 50,000-MILE ENGINE AND DRIVE TRAIN WARRANTY PROTECTS YOU: Chrysler Corporation confidently warrants all of the following vital parts of its 1966 cars for 5 years or 50,000 miles, whichever comes first, during which time any such parts that prove defective in material and workmanship will be replaced or repaired at a Chrysler Motors Corporation Authorized Dealer's place of business without charge for such parts or labor: engine block, head and internal parts; intake manifold; water pump; transmission case and internal parts (excepting manual clutch); torque converter; drive shaft; universal joints; rear axle and differential; and rear wheel bearings.

REQUIRED MAINTENANCE: The following maintenance services are required under the warranty—change engine oil every 3 months or 4,000 miles, whichever comes first; replace oil filter every second oil change; clean carburetor air filter every 6 months and replace it every 2 years; and every 6 months furnish evidence of this required service to a Chrysler Motors Corporation Authorized Dealer and request him to certify receipt of such evidence and your car's mileage. Simple enough for such important protection.

Join the Dodge Rebellion at your Dodge Dealer's.

DTH Review By Peter Range

No Souls Cleansed Or Demons Purged; 'Darling' Leaves You Just Plain Pooped

A great movie often leaves one physically exhausted and emotionally drained. The soul is cleansed and the heart's demons cathartically purged. John Schlesinger's "Darling," an all-English product with Joe Levine's money behind it (of course!), leaves you just plain tired.

Shown last week at the Northgate Theater in Durham, "Darling" has the earmarks of turning into a fine film built around a tragic person and an intense idea during its first twenty minutes. But then we are led in an almost picturesque style through a series bf stock and repetitive episodes which never probe beneath the outer surface of our heroine's character.

Diana Scott (Julie Christie is well-chosen for the role, but poor direction makes ill use of her talents) is a beautiful young woman chasing a vision of joy and a hope of peace through her checkered young life. ("Happiness should be so very easy, but it isn't.") She is one of those tragic human beings torn between the celestial and the mundane, between the attempt to fly with the ecstacy of the stars and the necessity of living a rather normal life among normal people on earth.

They Fall In Love

She meets Robert Gold, writer and noted television interviewer, they throw rocks into the Thames together, fall in love, and leave their respective spouses. When their union conceives a child, Diana at first jumps for joy but soon has an abortion instead and leaves Robert temporarily. She eventually betrays him in her boredom while he has to work, this time with London's version of Hugh Hefner's philosophy writ large. Laurence Harvey plays the rich, despicable playboy, the most one - dimensional character I have seen in a long time. Robert calls her a whore in one of the film's good scenes, shot on the escalators in the city's tube system, and leaves her.

The playboy at least turns Diana to filming and modeling in the process, even if only for TV candy commercials. A filming job in Italy brings her into the life of a widower prince. She turns him down for interludes with insignificant boyfriends on Capri, but later rushes back to him, becoming Italy's newest princess as his bride.

Bored Princess

The cliches fall heavier and heavier now as we struggle into the fourth half-hour of the film — Diana is soon bored with being a princess, maliciously suspects her prince (the most noble character imaginable) of infidelity in Rome, experiences neurotic loneliness in her huge palace peopled by pussy-footing servants, and, after an absurdly melodramatic clothes-ripping scene at her bedroom balcony, takes the next plane for London.

In London, true, blue Robert (Dirk Bogarde puts in an honest performance as an honest guy) meets her at the airport, takes her home and loves her. Next morning, to Diana's great disbelief, he packs her off for Rome. She thought she had at long last "returned home". Good ol' Robert knows better, he does. The character of this blond creature of the demons of love and hate is finally clear and the painful rejection must be made. And whole melodrama ends melodramatically with a shot of an urchin singing her saddest at Picadilly Circus (or was it Trafalgar Square?) and then looking to the camera with eagerness for her pay afterwards.

Fails At Tragedy

The film is trying to deal with an essentially tragic character, one that many of us know. But it never attains tragedy, never touches pathos. The plot is superficial and horizontal, rather than vertical and probing. The whole question of Diana's character remains undiscussed, reflected only on the bare surface. There seems to have been a clear attempt to make an English Jeanne Moreau out of Julie Christie and to copy the magnificently tragic life of Katherine in Truffaut's "Jules and Jim" with the character of Diana.

The cinematics reveal occasional flashes of originality packed in between the heavy-handed and obviously copied shots. And, sin of sins, all flaws are compounded by the 120-minute running time of this sad flick, which thereby flogs, flails, and finally beats to death a great theme.

If you have a chance, see it anyway.

UNC basketballer Rusty Clark stands tall — 6-11 to be exact.

In a recent interview Clark draped himself over a wooden table in the canteen of Avery Hall and described what it was like being a foot taller than almost everyone else.

"My height is something that I gradually adjusted to," he said. A lot of people have the same sense of humor. They walk up to me and ask questions like, 'How's the weather up there?' You have to let these comments roll right by. You can't let them bother you."

"Last year Wilt Chamberlain wrote an article for Sports Illustrated. He received an awful lot of criticism for it. The article was really great. If you're tall it was easy to understand."

Clothes Trouble

"Ever since the ninth grade I've had trouble buying clothes. People love to give other people clothes for birthdays and on Christmas. There are only three things they could give me. Socks, jocks, and ties."

"When I graduated from Fayetteville I was given 25 ties. All were too short."

"I received one in the mail only last week. It was from a man who I'd never met. The card said, 'Good luck. Glad you're at Carolina.' "

Rusty took a sip out of his coffee and said, "I think I'm glad that I'm tall."

Clark's 6-11 frame made him a natural for the game of basketball. His fine hands and natural coordination made his basketball exceptional.

Last year he arched his body high into the air and plunged the ball down and through the strings for a countless number of points.

Fayetteville Star

He led the Fayetteville High School team to the class 4A title. In doing so he received both the recognition of the High School All America Committee and bids from colleges and universities throughout the nation.

The decision of where to continue his education and his basketball was a tough one for Clark to make.

"It would take a good three hours to explain all the reasons why I chose Carolina." But Rusty singled out three big ones.

First, he has always been familiar with Chapel Hill and its atmosphere.

"My father is a big Carolina man. He took me to watch the Tar Heels play football ever since I was knee high to a grasshopper. My older brother is studying in the law school here."

Coach's Friend

Dean Smith was Rusty Clark's second big drawing card. He spent two summers at Smith's basketball camp. He grew to know the coach, and to respect him.

Last, but certainly not least, Clark was awarded a Morehead Scholarship for his academic merit.

"I only had one reservation about coming here. This is a large university and I was afraid that I might get lost and spend four years as only a number. This has turned out not to be true. I guess it's because of the orientation program. I see the boys who play basketball most of the time, but I have found other friends also."

A lot of people expect a lot of things out of the tall boy from Fayetteville. The kindness and best wishes of hundreds of old grads is greatly appreciated by him. But it also puts on the pressure.

Two Goals

"I share the same two goals as any boy facing four years of college basketball. The first is to be a part of an undefeated freshman team. And someday I'd like to help Carolina become national champions."

UNC has the coaches, the players, and the combined desire of the two to bring these dreams out of the realms of impossibility. And with an amiable giant named Rusty Clark wearing a Carolina blue uniform they might even become a reality.

The Kid: Going Up

By PAT STITH
DTH Sports Editor

RALEIGH — Billy Cunningham, the Brooklyn southpaw who made it very big as a North Carolina basketball player, will make it very big as a pro — that is, if Dolph Schayes knows talent when he sees it.

And he ought to. Schayes was Mr. Big himself a few years ago. At one time he held the record for most points scored during a career.

Now he coaches the Philadelphia 76'ers, the team with whom Billy is trying to break into pro basketball.

During Cunningham's reign as king of basketball in the ACC sports writers wore themselves out trying to describe his talent for going up first, getting up highest, and staying up longest.

They said he had steel springs for legs, they said he defied the laws of gravity. And so they called him the Kangaroo Kid.

Schayes agreed there is indeed something special about Billy's jump.

"He reminds me a lot of Elgin Baylor," he said. "He can go up in the air and just hang there, like he's on a hook or something. And while he's hanging up there that boy can show you some moves."

Billy, who is only 6-5, owns every UNC rebounding record on the books—game, season, and career.

"Cunningham will start for us tonight at guard," Schayes said, "although I intend to move him to forward sometime in the future.

Cunningham and teammate Wilt Chamberlain will be matched against the world champion Boston Celtics tonight at 9:30 in Reynolds Coliseum.

The St. Louis Hawks and the Baltimore Bullets face off in the first half of the double header at 7:30.

"Billy's drawback at guard is his inability to bring the ball up court under a press," Schayes said. "But he can play at forward. He's really not big enough but he makes up for that because he jumps like a 6-8 man.

"Billy has all the shots — all the equipment," he said. "It won't be long before he'll be one of the bit stars in our league."

So the jumpingest Tar Heel of all time still seems like a man on his way up.

Favored Dodgers, Twins Open Series

A World Series which sets the speed and pitching of the slightly favored Los Angeles Dodgers against the speed and power of the Minnesota Twins opens today in Bloomington, Minnesota.

The feature of this first round will be a duel between two of the best right-handed pitchers in baseball.

LA's Don Drysdale (23-12) will oppose Jim Grant (21-7), the American League's top winner. Drysdale gets the starting nod because lefty Sandy Koufax, generally considered the best pitcher in baseball, is Jewish and is observing a religious holy day. Koufax (26-8) will pitch for LA against the Twins' portsider Jim Kaat (18-11) tomorrow.

One interesting aspect of the game is to see how well Twins' Manager Sam Mele's "brake" plan on Dodger base-stealer Maury Wills will work. Of course, Wills may not reach base, because Grant says he isn't worried about him.

The Daily Tar Heel SPORTS

Gene Rector

ASSISTANT DTH SPORTS EDITOR

RALEIGH — The "battle of the beatens" will be reeled off Saturday in Raleigh's Riddick Stadium.

The Wolfpack of N. C. State will be howling for their second victory in four games. The Tar Heels hope to rebound after last Saturday's Virginia letdown.

"It should be another slam-bang affair," said UNC coach Jim Hickey, speaking at Tuesday's press conference in Raleigh.

"I have all the respect in the world for State," he continued. "Sure, they've lost two games (Clemson and South Carolina), but they could have easily won both of them — they were close."

Hickey sees no number one problems against the Wolfpack.

"There isn't a number one problem against State — or any one else for that matter," he said. "Our main problem will be to stop them and move the ball ourselves.

Hickey labeled last Saturday's loss to Virginia "past history," but he did have some final comments.

"We played good ball for eight minutes," said Hickey. "Then we got fat and happy—just sat there and looked at our lead.

"In our opening games with Michigan and Ohio State," he said, "we had close to total effort. We thought we might have a letdown for Virginia, so we worked on that point all week. When we scored two quick touchdowns, we thought we had the problem licked. Then we stopped playing ball.

"We did have some bright spots," Hickey continued. "Some individuals played well. We kicked and covered well except for one time we didn't want to down the ball on the four — so we knocked it into the end zone.

"But I don't want to take anything away from Virginia's performance," he added. "Virginia hung in there and got stronger all the time—we went the other way.

"We stopped their running game pretty well," he said. "But you can stop anybody's running game and still lose if you can't stop the long pass. We simply were not hungry enough to take the game—it was there for us."

Hickey denied Virginia was better conditioned than the Tar Heels.

It's Unofficial: Dodgers Will Win

The DTH sports staff made an unscientific and, who knows, maybe even inaccurate survey of opinion on the World Series yesterday. People are saying the Bums are going to win.

But let them tell you:

Harry Weiler, a political science major smiled and shook his head. He asked simply, "Who is playing?"

We swallowed hard and turned to Sheri O'Donnel.

"As long as the Yankees aren't playing," she said "I'm rooting for the Dodgers."

Our confidence in the appreciation of the game soared only to be completely destroyed five minutes later by Elizabeth Eagle, the secretary to the dean of student affairs.

She looked up from her typewriter and said with a British accent, "I know nothing of this World Series. I've never been to a football game in my life."

We ran from her office and took several deep breaths of the cool afternoon air outside South Building.

Officer Sparrow, of the campus police, turned his attention away from the traffic and backed the Dodgers. "They'll take it in four straight."

Then everyone we went up to stuck with the L. A. Bums.

The history majors remained loyal to their field.

"The Twins are too young," they said. "The Dodgers are experienced professionals. Only they can stand up under World Series pressure."

Freshman baseball coach Bill Lovingood says the key is pitching.

"The pitching of the Twins won't hold up. It has been staggering all year." The coach grinned and said, "You're pretty sure of winning if you have a Koufax and a Drysdale."

HOPE NOT ENOUGH

"He who has health, has hope; and he who has hope, has everything," is an old Abrabian proverb. But don't just hope that your heart is in good condition, have a medical checkup to make sure. Hope for hearts depends on you, says the North Carolina Heart Association.

New Nine Romps Over Navy ROTC In Football

By BILL HASS
DTH Sports Writer

An independent team, the New Nine, put together 26 points in each half to blast the NROTC Dolphins, 52-0 in tag football yesterday.

Joe Kampf and Toby Webb scored two touchdowns each and John Hubble, Kit Austin, Bill Harrison and Ted DuBose added one each in the scoring parade.

Zete II triumphed over the Phi Gam Whiteowls, 14-0 in a battle of unbeaten teams. Jack Dunn and Mayo Gravett scored touchdowns in the Zete's second straight win.

SAE Blue I also registered its second victory in a row with a 12-6 win over ATO Blue II. John Pope's touchdown plus some safeties made winners of the SAE's.

Law School IV had little trouble in disposing of the Med School Reds, 30-6. Richard Vinroot and Rich Harris tallied twice and Ray Farris, former Tar Heel quarterback, added the fifth score.

ATO Blue I scored a touchdown in each half to blank the Sigma Nu A team, 12-0.

Sigma Chi B forfeited to TEP-B, PiLamb defaulted to SAE Blue No. 2 and TEP-A defeaulted to DKE Blue. A forfeit is one team not showing up; a default is one team letting the other know in advance it will not be there.

The University Golf Tournament will start play sometime next week, probably on Monday. Three flights of eight players each will be arranged.

Writer, Heath Score Big In Soccer Rout Of ECC

GREENVILLE — Carolina's hot soccermen gave East Carolina College's booters a rude welcome into the world of intercollagiate competition yesterday, whipping the Pirates 13-1.

The match, played here on the East Carolina campus, was the first ever for the home team, and it proved to be a very inauspicious beginning.

The Tar Heels spurted to a 3-0 first - quarter lead and held complete command with a halftime score of 7-1. In the final two periods, all members of the team saw extensive action, but the Big Blue continued to pour it on.

John Loud, regular junior inside left, drove home a pair of markers in an overall fine performance, and soph inside right Willem Polack also tallied twice.

The win left Coach Marvin Allen six short of the career century mark.

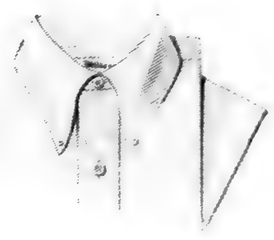
ALL THAT'S MAGIC IN A SHIRT
Is Wrapped Up In Milton's Own M2



A Milton M2 is a perfect roll button-down shirt with a slightly higher collar for added comfort and smartness under a jacket with just the right taper for trim effect. This shirt is so different that even our whites are unlike anyone else's. A white M2 starts with the 330 count Greenwood fine combed oxford found in some quality whites but this is where the similarity ends. A Milton shirt is treated with a special parchment finish, special shade No. 99, to give it an English creamy white look, a wanted departure from the white white. Our shirts are tailored with the fabric on the right side for added lustre. In our authentic single needle shirt you can count twenty stitches to the inch, and the pocket margins are lock-stitched. To this add lock-stitch buttons from Pochester Button Co. that will not chip or break. The final pressing is done by hand for a smart flat package. All these details comprise 57 different operations plus three sewing room and two pressing inspections. These meticulous touches make our M2 the most wanted wardrobe additive. Finest white oxfords. $5.95

After trying our fabulous M2's you'll know why Miltons became the fashion leader in all the land.

SL Meeting

Student Legislature will meet tonight at 7:30 on the top floor of New East. Some of the 28 bills introduced in the last session by the Dickson administration and the Student Party will be discussed.

'Sealab II' Observers Say Man Can Live Under Ocean

"It's not being Buck Rogers to expect that our next family of antibiotics will come from the sea," a UNC doctor who participated as an observer in the Sealab II experiment said here yesterday.

Dr. William Wood, assistant professor of medicine at the UNC School of Medicine and Dr. Ivan Brown, professor of surgery at the Duke University Medical Center spoke on some of the medical aspects of the Sealab experiment at a news conference in the N. C. Heart Association Building.

Brown predicted that in the next five years the exploration of the sea will begin to overshadow the current importance of the exploration of outer space.

Brown predicted that a sea exploration agency similar to the National Aeronautics and Space Agency would be established in the near future.

The Duke doctor also said that there is a distinct possibility that the sea will become the "breadbasket of the future."

Wood, whose specialty is hyperbaric oxygenation (breathing under pressure) came to the Sealab project with an extensive background in submarines.

He reported that the participants in the experiment did not encounter any significant problems in their pulmonary systems either while under the sea or during decompression.

Wood said that while the complete data from the experiment has not yet been analyzed, the project seemed to prove that men can live under the sea at depths of at least 200 feet for at least 30 days.

Both Wood and Brown were aboard the surface support ship for the experiment. Neither of the men went below the surface, but they did stay in constant communication with the submerged lab, and Wood observed the men during decompression.

The experiment is being carried out off the California coast, and one phase of the program is still in progress at this time.

Wood said that while it is impossible to predict the exact course of the future exploration of the ocean, "Ten years from now we will look back on this (Sealab II) and say that it was a very crude effort."

The Sealab program is now in the second year of a projected five - year study.

Wood emphasized the importance of man in this exploration saying that machines could not deal with unexpected situations and phenomena.

Capt. George Bond, medical director of the project will be in Durham November 19 to moderate a panel discussion on deep sea living at the third International Conference on Hyperbaric Oxygenation at the Duke University Medical School.

Pressure aboard the Sealab during most phases of the just-concluded experiment was approximately seven times that found at sea level.

Brown pointed out that information gained from these experiments is also useful for certain types of heart surgery which are performed in pressure chambers, since conditions encountered are similar.

Duke is one of several medical centers in the country that now have hyperbaric units for such operations.

Large Voter Turnout Surprising; Stupak Asks For Legislative OK

By ED FREAKLEY
DTH Staff Writer

Most campus leaders expressed surprise at the turnout for the campus radio referendum Tuesday which carried by 2,202 votes.

When all the counting was over 3,301 voted in favor of the radio while 1,099 were against it.

John Stupak, chairman of the campus radio committee, said he was very surprised and pleased at the turnout.

"I feel sure that the former hesitant members of Student Legislature are now satisfied that a significant number of students want campus radio," Stupak said.

Stupak was referring to last Spring when the bill was tied up in the Finance Committee which argued against the high initial cost of the faculty.

It would cost $34,848 to set up the station and operate it the first year. The annual operating costs would total nearly $11,000.

The referendum was set up by the Student Legislature to determine whether or not students were interested in having a campus radio. The referendum is not binding on the legislature.

Stupak said, "The only objection the legislators had last spring was that they didn't know what their constituents thought about the bill. Now they know, so there shouldn't be any further delay."

"I hope the bill will be passed just the way we sent it in," Stupak said.

Hugh Blackwell, chairman of the Finance Committee, said the bill should be reported favorably or unfavorably out of his committee in a few weeks.

"I'd say its chances were from good to excellent," Blackwell said.

"The only thing that might slow it up is that it will probably require an increase in student fees to finance the measure."

Blackwell said his real concern was over whether or not people will listen to the station or not. He said most stations of this type were unsuccessful.

Brit Gordon, vice president of the student body and speaker of the legislature said he was pleased with students showing interest in the matter and expressing their views.

"I hope the legislature will get on with this bill and give it the due consideration it deserves," Gordon said.

Stupak said the station could be in operation by march or April if it was passed in the next few weeks.

Before the station opens, if the bill is passed, there will be an opinion poll to determine what type of programming the students want.

It is not known where the station will be located at first. But the Graham Memorial Board of Directors voted Tuesday to provide space in the new student union building which should be completed within two years for the station.

NSA Representatives Give National Congress Report

By JOHN GREENBACKER
DTH Political Writer

Editor's Note — A 36 - page report written by the 12 UNC delegates to the National Student Association's annual congress, held last August in Madison, Wis., was made available to the public yesterday by NSA Coordinator Eric Van Loon.

This is the first of a series of three articles on the NSA report and the congress.)

The National Student Association is an organization of representatives from nearly 300 American colleges and universities.

The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill has been affiliated with NSA for 18 years, and a UNC student was one of the original founders of the association.

Through the efforts of its permanent staff and national congresses, NSA has formulated many student aid programs, including low cost student accident insurance and travel discount plans and suggestions for the improvement of student government activities.

The history of NSA on this campus has been a stormy one, particularly during the past two years.

Conservative elements here and at NSA - affiliated schools in the South and Southwest have waged active campaigns against NSA because of the association's liberal stands and activities in the fields of civil rights and international affairs.

Last year the name of UNC at Chapel Hill was almost added to a long list of schools in these areas of the nation which have disaffiliated with the NSA, but students voted to continue membership in a referendum last fall.

Last summer UNC's 12 delegates attended the NSA national congress as usual, but student leaders were careful last spring to select or nominate delegates from all points of the political spectrum.

More than half of the delegates were sceptical about the congress and its value before they attended, according to NSA Coordinator Eric Van Loon.

At the congress, the delegates were assigned to committees and subcommittees of the congress dealing with student government involvement in the general areas of education, social problems, student freedom, participation in the university community, and international affairs.

For an entire week, they participated in seminars, committee discussion and plenary debate on resolutions and bills.

According to Van Loon, every delegate, liberal, conservative or moderate, returned to Chapel Hill convinced that UNC should not get out of NSA.

Tomorrow: The issues at the 1965 NSA congress.

Thirty Students Chosen For Toronto Exchange

Thirty UNC students have been selected to go to Toronto as part of the exchange program with the University of Toronto. The group, chosen by the selections committee of the Toronto Exchange from over 150 applicants, will visit Canada over semester break. Toronto students come here the weekend of Nov. 20.

Girls named for the trip are: Elaine Carson, Jane Crews, Shelly Chairman, Madeline Gray, Diana Foote, Judith Lacky, Betsy Ross Morris, Sandra Peabody, Sharon Rose, Bet Taylor, Becky Tatum, Gusty Russel, Melanie Wise, Eileen Zwerin, and Joan Woodworth.

Alternates picked are Jean Baxter, Linda McCutcheon, Jean Winter, Jim Little, Lanny Shuff, and Ty Beatty.

First "Operation"

By LYNNE HARVEL
DTH Staff Writer

"Operation Match" has now been introduced to the UNC campus. Miss Patsy Puckett and UNC sophomore Morrie Sills were matched through preference cards submitted to Cambridge, Mass. Their first date was a rather rushed and public affair, but a successful one.

When asked his ideas on his "blind date," Morrie replied "She is genuinely sincere and very close to what I ordered from the computer."

Although their busy schedule of events prevented any close relationship, Morrie found that they have many interests in common, and the computer had matched them in several important aspects, such as religion and politics, as well as social ideas.

When asked his reaction to the news that he was to date Miss Puckett, Morrie said, "I was quite shocked! I thought someone was playing a joke on me. It didn't seem possible that I would be dating Miss Mississippi."

But date her he did, and it was no joke. He already had a date for the Virginia game, and could not contact her himself. He had to relay the message through a friend.

The big weekend started with a meeting and pictures at the Kappa Sigma house. After dinner there, the well matched pair attended the football game. At half time, the stunning Miss Puckett met Miss North Carolina, Penny Clark.

MORRIE SILLS

A reception at Maverick House, where the couple took part in the opening of a new social room, the Red Garter, followed the game activities. Dinner at the Blair house and a reception at the Pi Kappa Phi fraternity at Duke brought an end to the computer weekend.

Morrie Sills, a tired but happy Carolina Gentleman, left his better than usual date at 12 o'clock Saturday night. Asked if he would see her again, he commented, "I would like to, but Mississippi is a long way off. It is fun to think about."

Morrie has not yet signed up for further computer dates, but he did show enthusiasm about his other four dates to come from this match.

Local Police Investigate Break-Ins

Investigations began Tuesday in two local break - ins, according to Chapel Hill Police.

An estimated $500 was stolen from the home of Bill Demeritte Monday evening.

Demeritte told Capt. D. E. Durham that he and his wife returned home about 7:45 p.m. to find two young men there.

Demeritte reportedly chased the two, but failed to apprehend them. He told police that the house had been left unlocked.

The second break-in took place at Umstead Recreation Center sometime Monday night but was not discovered until Tuesday afternoon.

The building was apparently entered through rear windows. The discovery was made when someone went to use a telephone extension and found it missing.

Nothing else was reported stolen.

Horseman Talks

Jim Crowley, one of Notre Dame's legendary Four Horsemen, will be the featured speaker at the annual Loyalty Dinner of St. Thomas More Parish Sunday beginning at 1:30 p.m.

Catholic students who have not made reservations for the dinner may call the Catholic Rectory, 942-1129, before 5 p.m. Thursday. Tickets will be $1, payable at the door. The dinner will be held in the St. Thomas More School Auditorium.

Mr. Crowley, known in his college days as Sleepy Jim, played at Notre Dame in the '20's under the late Knute Rockne. He later became a renowned coach himself at Michigan State and Fordham. He is presently an attorney and serves as Industrial Commissioner in Scranton, Pa.

Placement Service Will Be Explained

Assistance for students seeking jobs after graduation will be the topic of a meeting tonight conducted by the University Placement Service. J. F. Galloway, a director of the Placement Service, will explain how his office aids students in starting their careers in business, government, and teaching.

The meeting for all seniors and graduate students will be held in Hill Hall at 7:30. It is sponsored by Alpha Kappa Psi and Delta Sigma Pi fraternities.

Donald M. Cook, corporate manager of college relations for the Radio Corporation of America, will be the guest speaker. Currently in charge of college recruiting for RCA, Cook was formerly head of the Placement Office at Penn State. He is active in the Middle Atlantic Placement Association and the College Placement Council.

All men and women students seeking jobs following graduation or completion of military service are urged by the Placement Service to attend this meeting. Any student who has satisfacotirly completed two semesters of work at UNC is eligible to register with the Service.

Students should register early in order to participate in the employment interviews conducted from mid-October through April. Job counseling and career information are also available to students. Permanent personnel files are maintained for every individual registered with the office.

See UNC-NCS Ball Game Free

Students who do not have tickets for Saturday's UNC - N. C. State football game can watch the contest, free of charge, on two large theatre-type screens by way of closed circuit television in Reynolds Coliseum in Raleigh as part of Consolidated University Day.

Students from all campuses of the University will be admitted starting at 12:30 p.m. Saturday.

Adding a bright spot to the gridiron conflict, UNC coeds Zakki Murphey and Mary King will be among eight finalists — two from each UNC campus — from which Miss Consolidated University will be held in the Coliseum.

At 8 p.m. there will be a combo party in the Coliseum. Again admission will be by semester registration cards.

GM Series Slates Rockin' Folk Show

"Hootennanny-A-Go-Go" will be the theme of the entertainment provided in Graham Memorial Friday night. Vocalist Nancy Rhoades and the "We Three Folk and ME" folksingers — Jim Opton, Rik Whitfield, John Buck Malcolm, and Mary Elser — will be the two features of the hootenanny, and will begin the evening's program at 8 p.m. in the Graham Memorial lounge.

Beginning at 9 will be a discotheque with "go-go girls" to provide entertainment downstairs in the Rendezvous Room. Both events are casual and no admission will be charged.

"Ballads ane Blues of Folk Music" is the album recorded by the UNC freshman Nancy Rhoades, who will sing some original songs, plus older, and more recent popular folk music. She has been singing folk music and playing the martin guitar for two years, and has entertained in coffee houses, and on TV and radio in the South and West.

Miss Rhoades' favorite recording artists are Donovan, O'Detta, and Joan Baez. When asked how she first got interested in folk music, Miss Rhoades replied, "At first I didn't realize that folk music is what it is, and after finding out that it is in a world of its own, I wanted to become a part of it."

UNC students Jim Opton, Rik Whitfield, John Buck Malcolm, and Mary Elser perform together as "We Three Three Folk and ME." They avoid the stereotype of folk music and specialize in original arrangements such as the adaptation of poetry to music — "Little Boy Blue" for example.

"Go-go" girls in "go-go" costumes will entertain at the discotheque in the Rendezvous Room. Featured also will be the Graham Memorial's new discotheque equipment — 18 speakers attached to the juke box. The entertainment and refreshments will be free.

University Day Issue

Ten major articles about the University of North Carolina will be published in a special pre-University Day edition of the Daily Tar Heel on Monday.

The Tar Heel will herald the formal University Day activities for 1965 which will be held Tuesday.

The 10 articles, illustrated, include features on outstanding faculty members of the University in days gone by and today; history of the University at Chapel Hill; development of student government; the changing architecture on the campus; prominent graduates in art, writing, drama and other cultural spheres; achievements of alumni; service to the people of the state, and other facets of UNC operations and stature.

Chancellor Sharp will speak at a convocation beginning at 2 p.m.

It will be the first time Carmichael auditorium is used.

"Open House" at dormitories, fraternities and sororities will be held from 4:00 to 5:30 p.m.

A dutch barbecue, at Emerson Field, begins at 6 p.m. and will last until 7:30 p.m.

Firewords will be seen and heard at 8 p.m.

A combo will play from 6 to 8.

Campus Briefs

The UNC chapter of the Young Democrats Club has announced plans for a comprehensive membership drive.

Henry Babb and Phil Baddour, undergraduate and graduate vice presidents of the local YDC, will head the drive.

The membership program will include a series of talks by prominant North Carolina Democrats, trips to State-wide YDC rallies and social gatherings with YDC chapters from local girls' schools.

The YDC will also send personal mailings to all members informing them of each YDC program.

The following companies will recruit on campus next week:

October 13 — Texaco, Inc. (also summer for juniors); E. I. DuPont de Nemours & Co. (summer work for graduate students in physics; will also interview women).

October 15 — U. S. Information Agency; General Electric Co. (will interview women).

Students desiring interviews with the company representatives should contact the Placement Service, 211 Gardner Hall.

MAN'S FAVORITE SPORT? Not so say these coeds from Spencer. They enjoyed watching the World Series on television just as much as the boys did. Sleeping On The Job

The other day the administration said it will no longer "accept or enforce 'dual standard' decisions — those in which students guilty of the same offense receive penalties varying widely in severity."

We have waited for some student reaction to this pronouncement and we have finally concluded that the student body is sleeping during working hours. How can the significance of this be overlooked?

A close look at that policy statement is in order.

"For a number of years the University has become increasingly concerned about 'dual standard' judicial decisions rendered by student judicial bodies," the statement said. Dean of Men William G. Long made the comments in a letter to the attorney general and chairmen of the Men's and Women's Honor councils.

"I know that this concern has been shared by many student government leaders. The most common form of the phenomenon is to be found when a man and woman student are each charged with Campus Code offenses based upon action that was common to both, and the disciplinary sentences imposed are widely disparate."

Let's not fool ourselves. The administration might have been "concerned for a number of years" about dual standard decisions but it did not feel compelled to say anything about it until state newspapers began to editorialize on the "inequity of the Paul Dickson case."

Last August Dickson and a coed spent the night in a fraternity house when they shouldn't have been there at all. The girl, a visiting student from the University in Greensboro, was charged with staying out without permission and entering an off-limits fraternity. She was found guilty of both offenses and suspended from school here. Dickson was charged with helping her break both rules. He was convicted of helping her enter the house, and was given the rather inconsequential sentence of official reprimand. A note will be put on his school record saying he's been a naughty boy.

There is really nothing extraordinary about this case — the same thing has happened many times before. But Dickson is president of the student body.

That fact is pertinent because it is directly responsible for the furor being created across the state — and it is being created.

The question we want to consider now, however, eclipses this individual case because it concerns every one of us — and the future of our self-government.

Long's letter said, ". . . as of this date (August 26) the University will not accept or enforce dual standard' decisions . . ." If the scope of this statement has not been noticed before, let it not be overlooked now.

With regard to the dual standard, the Raleigh Times said, "This is a dreadful way to administer justice. Two persons who participate equally in any transgression of any law are equally guilty and should receive equal punishment. In fact, they should be tried by the same court, not by separate courts."

This is what the administration meant when it issued that policy statement and editorials in the Durham Morning Herald, the Raleigh News and Observer, the News of Orange County and on WRAL-TV have expressed similar sentiments.

What they all have conveniently forgot is the fact that men and women students do not live under the same rules. At one time or another probably every girl on this campus has felt as if she couldn't get a drink of water without signing a permission slip. A handbook called "Regulations for Women Students" has 24 pages filled with restrictions on coed activity

The only thing a male student has to do is "conduct myself as a gentleman."

All this hullabaloo over double standards just doesn't ring true. Of course there is a double standard here. What obligation does the Men's Honor Council have to try men by women's rules?

So long as there is a great disparity between rules governing men and women, the honor councils have no choice but to render disparate verdicts.

For the sake of example, let us consider the controversial Dickson case again. The girl broke two specific regulations. Her punishment was virtually spelled out. Dickson's obligation was to be a "gentleman." The honor council apparently thought he had not been sufficiently "ungentlemanly" to rate more than a tsk-tsk.

But, under the system as it exists, we find it impossible to agree that justice has not been done.

A single court for men and women is a laudable idea, but how can anyone expect one body to work under two sets of laws?

The system is overdue for an overhaul.

Predicts Great Change In Speech Reporting

Pads and pencils for journalists may soon be a thing of the past.

A newspaperman without his stenographer's pad and trusty copy pencil?

Who, what, why, when where and how? Impossible!

But that's the way things looked in Howell Hall Monday evening.

Six tape recorders whirled while some 40 journalism students heard the managing editor of Newsday, the Long Island Daily, give his listeners tips on keeping newspaper jobs.

The only question is: Will they keep them?

Those delightful little transistorized contraptions may save a lot of pencil lead and wrist twisting, but they have a nasty habit of conking out at the wrong times, especially when the journalist is reported the speech of somebody who didn't give him a transcript.

Journalism Prof. Kenneth Byerly agrees with me. In fact, any "J" students whose machine failed him Monday probably got hell. (Of course, if amiable Byerly was the one who gave it to him, at least the unfortunate heard the former politician apologize to the ladies in his class.)

Anyway here's what happened in 1975 when Newsday editor William F. McIlwain returned to the Carolina campus for another lecture:

Before the talk, students ran to the platform so that they could be the one whose microphone was closest to the speaker.

They found McIlwain's remarks very interesting, particularly his suggestions on tape editing: "As young journalists," he said, "you should be careful to give both sides of an issue an equal amount of footage.

"Also remember that certain papers use 7 1-2 i.p.s. tapes and other use 3 3-4. It's all a matter of style, though the better papers use the higher speed since it gives them better high-fidelity reproduction. Accuracy, you know, is the most important element of good journalism."

McIlwain was interrupted every twenty minutes by members of his audience. They asked if he could pause while they changed their tapes.

"It's nice," he remarked, "not to have to listen to the clatter of teletype in the newsroom. Now we merely subscribe to the UPI audio service.

Speaking of troubles with the printer's unions, McIlwain said they once resented being given tape directly from press services. "The solution to this problem was to hire our own announcers," he said.

"Naturally, newspapers must keep up to date. So last week we installed a computer so we could switch to FM.

"Yes — we think we have the best publishing facilities on Long Island. You oughta see our new tower."

McIlwain also told his audience how he increased Newsday's circulation. "We raised our broadcasting power," he explained.

Another innovation made under his management was the addition of stereo equipment. "That change means we can publish color photos," McIlwain said.

"In the future," he predicted, "we'll use the offset printing process. But first we've got to see if we can get everything cleared with the Federal Communications Commission."

Newsday may be heard at 6 o'clock every evening over WNBC radio.

Letters To The Editor

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I am a transfer student to Carolina and this weekend I observed a phenomenon which puzzled me.

If the Old Well is so much the symbol of our University, why isn't it illuminated at night and particularly on weekend nights when we have so many visitors to Chapel Hill?

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

David Rothman's column about Ralph Moody in the September 30 issue of the DTH was technically saved from containing thirteen paragraphs of lies by the two words, "I dreamed." The dreamed-up quotations which followed were cleverly written in such a way that the impressionable reader forgot those two saving words and felt as if he were reading an account of an actual interview, since Rothman never again mentioned that the thirteen paragraphs of ridicule were sheer fantasy.

Even the reader who did keep the hallucinary nature of the column in mind could not, without prior knowledge of Moody's views, judge the extent of the misrepresentation. If David Rothman had wished to write an honest column, he could have interviewed Moody in Raleigh rather than spending his time inventing malicious composition.

The device used in the September 30 column is an example of intellectual dishonesty and, more bluntly speaking, a smear.

In my mind, the liberties taken by Rothman do not fall within the realm of the intellectual freedom so vigorously advocated in Chapel Hill.

Ah-Ha! By The Time A Child Is Five....

You are leaving your dorm early in the morning. It is a miserable cold rainy day and you had to wear an undershirt you were so cold when you got out of bed this morning. The grass is slippery and wet.

After stepping on a soft spot, your feet head for the grey sky and you tumble into Kenan Stadium and find the Carolina football team working out for next Saturday. Wearing tennis shoes and short pants, they toss a beach ball around in a large circle.

You stroll past the back of Lenoir Hall and watch two blue-uniformed cooks scraping the cafeteria's garbage cans for the day's stew.

You pass by South Building when the campus is faced with a grave crisis and you see a silhouette on the shade that resembles Chancellor Sharp flipping a coin.

You stumble into a closed meeting of the SPU and see a box containing fake beards and moustaches with a sign on it: "Free, take one."

You see Otelia Connor walking down Franklin Street using her umbrella to protect herself from the rain.

You sit down by the Davie Poplar to get out of the rain and hear noises inside. It turns out to be the secret headquarters of Secretary of State Thad Eure, where he gains all his "inside" information about UNC.

You amble downtown and by mistake go into the back door of the Post Office and see the clerks playing a game of "package soccer."

You cross over to Kemp's record store just in time to see Kemp unloading his latest shipment of new records from The Record Bar.

You are hungry so you head for Harry's to grab a Harryburger. When the waiter flies out the door from the kitchen with your order you are sure you see a crowd of identical men in the back — looking just like Harry.

You go to class and when the professor hands back the term papers you seem to remember seeing him standing at the door of the class building tossing something up the stairs. Some curve!

In a daze, you head for a bar (you have to be in a daze to do it in this state) and get there just in time to see the big brawny Hollywood star pass you by and ask your kid brother for a dance.

Coming back to the dormitory you wander through the basement until you bump into a room marked "Keep Out." Going in, you see a gigantic machine labeled: "Noise-maker, turn on one week before exams.

You hear Gov. Dan Moore is holding a press conference, so you decide to get there early. You find Dan dictating a speech to his secretary from the back of a Rice Chex box.

Then you head for a drug store just in time to see the surgeon general buying a carton of Luckies.

Walking past the Bell Tower, you see an industrial plant. You go in and the sign says: "Parked Car Manufacturers, Inc."

You pass by the Student Government offices in GM at the right moment to see Paul Dickson, Bob Wilson and Arthur Hays playing jacks.

You stroll past the Dean of Women's office soon after your nap and see Kitty Carmichael passing out little black date books free to coeds. Names are filled in a month in advance, however.

You pass by the history department and political science offices and see the deans reading Batman comics.

Over at Fraternity Court you see a bunch of giggling brothers running around with a can of black paint and an axe

Finally, you collapse in a heap, half out of your senses. Three days later you wake up and the sun is shining, the dogs are chasing squirrels. You pick youself up and hurry off to your Psychology class, child development.

The professor opens the lecture with the remark: "By the time a child is five years old he has formed a personality that will change very little for the rest of his life. . ."

Faculty "Show Of Solidarity" On University Day Scheduled As An Event "Not To Miss"

The word is already out among the faculty that this year's University Day is the one not to miss. For a rather significant segment of the faculty, the academic regalia will come out of mothballs for the first time in several years.

As a matter of fact, for many of the professors, October 12 of this year will mark the first time they have attended a University Day convocation since the late President John F. Kennedy spoke here four years ago.

Then, as has been the tradition for the occasion, the major attraction was a national figure who spoke on some current topic.

On that sunny October day in 1961, John F. Kennedy spoke about the state of the world, as most of the other University Day speakers have done in the years before and the years since.

But despite the seriousness of the topic, there was no lack of humor, as when the President referred to Harvard University as "a small land-grant college."

Last year Secretary of State Dean Rusk filled the keynoted spot, speaking on our foreign policy. He, too, though speaking on a serious subject, opened on a light note, saying that he had not come to the University "with a tiger in his tank."

But on their announced topics, both men had something to say—

Kennedy: "We are all destined to live most of our lives in uncertainty and challenge . . . and peril."

Rusk: "Great dangers still surround us and difficult challenges lie ahead. But we are making progress."

Both of these statements could easily be made again at this year's University Day. Though the statements were made about the course of the country in general, they apply equally well to the University in particular.

This year there will be no outside speaker; this year the topic will not be foreign policy.

This week, the topic is the University

The featured speaker in Tuesday's convocation will be the chancellor of this campus, Dr. Paul F. Sharp.

Though no advance copies of the chancellor's text as available yet, both the topic and the tone of his talk are almost certain. Unless the chancellor goes drastically against all expectations, the topic will be the issues facing the University. And this time there will probably be no jokes to introduce the topic.

"The underlying crisis of our times arises from two fundamentally conflicting concepts of organizing the affairs of men." These were Dean Rusk's words last year.

Replace the word "men with the word "University," and the above sentence could well serve as the topic of this convocation.

The parallels in the previous speeches are many. Kennedy spoke about the increasing importance of this University.

Both spoke about challenges and perils; and the University has enough of these for the present.

Yes, the word is out about this year's convocation. The professors are coming and they are talking about a "show of solidarity."

It would be a rather sad comment if the faculty came, but the students didn't

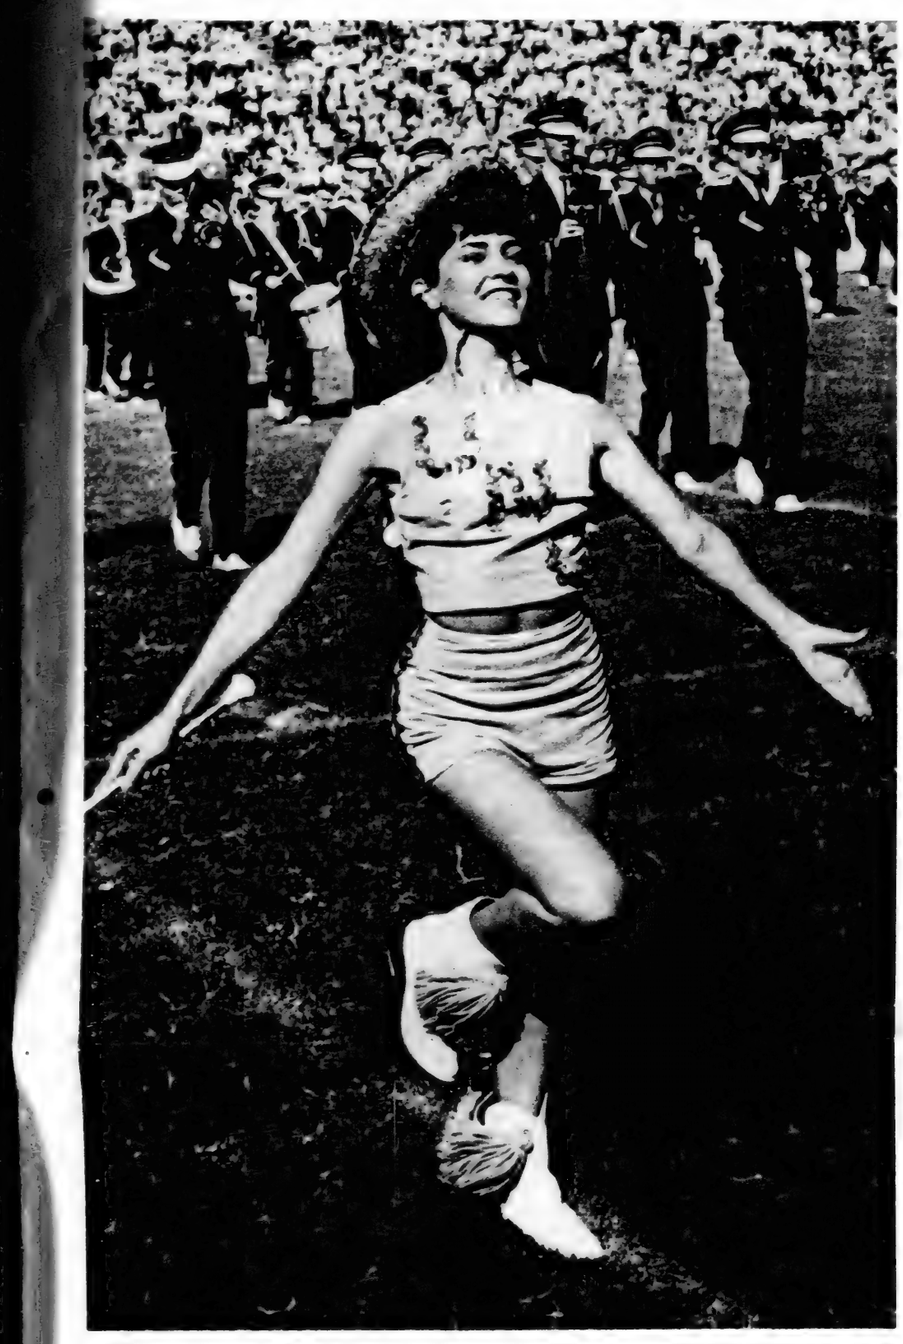
Dickson Recall Demanded By SP Legislator



'NEAT'—A SPECIAL WORD FOR A SPECIAL GIRL

'Sport' Magazine Features Nita Wilkinson – Twirler

By ERNEST ROBL
DTH Staff Writer

Anita Wilkinson, now in her second year as a UNC majorette, reserves the adjective "neat" for very special things.

And the way Nita described the Miss Football U.S.A. Contest in which she participated last week was exactly that way — "a neat contest."

One of 10 contestants who had been specially screened to participate in the contest, the fine arts major from Durham placed third in the competition.

Nothing New

For Nita, who has been twirling a baton for more than 15 years now, the experience of participating in a beauty contest was nothing new. In addition to holding a long string of baton and beauty titles, she is a former Miss Durham and was named Miss Congeniality in the 1964 Miss North Carolina Competition.

Back from the week - long Miss Football U.S.A. competition in Norman, Okla., Nita noted that she was having "to do a lot of catching up" on her academic work, but she talked enthusiastically about the trip.

This month the beautiful UNC coed is featured in yet another way. The October issue of Sport magazine presented a special photo essay on her.

One of Five

She will be one of five contestants in that magazine's Miss Campus Queen competition which will be decided next March. She was entered in the contest by the UNC sports publicity office.

In talking about the Miss Football U.S.A. Contest, the majorette commented that it was more of an enjoyable tour than a competiton.

Included on the itenerary were a meeting with the governor of Oklahoma, a television appearance, and a guided tour of the state of Oklahoma. During a special ceremony, the participants were made official citizens of Oklahoma City.

The University of Oklahoma, represented by a hostess queen, was the site of most of the activity in the contest.

The contest itself, sponsored by the Norman Jaycees, was judged in several parts: a civic reception, a fashion show, a television interview show, and finals night.

Talked About UNC

Finals night, included among other things, a talent presentation and a talk by each contestant about her campus. UNC's representative gave an informal talk about the University in which she said she wished she could give everyone present a tour of the Carolina campus to show them what it was really like.

Nita emphasized that because of the small number of contestants, it was possible to get to know all of them well during the week of the contest. "I feel like I really gained nine new friends during the contest," she said.

"All in all, it was really a neat trip," she repeated.

Other campuses represented in the competition in addition to UNC and the hosting University of Oklahoma, included the University of Iowa, the University of Maryland, the University of South Dakota, the University of South Carolina, Auburn University, the University of Mississippi, Wichita State University, and Oklahoma State.

'Summer Tree' Tryouts Set

Five male and five female parts will be up for grabs Monday at 4 at 7:30 p.m. for the Carolina Playmakers' second production of the year, "The Summer Tree."

Penned by UNC's Schubert Fellow in Playwriting, Randolph Umberger, the play is reminiscent of the works of Tennessee Williams and Erskine Caldwell.

The drama is set in Raleigh in 1919 and concerns the "loss of innocence of a 16-year-old girl."

Tryouts are open to all students, faculty and townspeople and to anyone within a commuting distance of Chapel Hill.

Scripts are available in the reserve reading room of Louis Round Wilson Library or at 307 Bynum Hall.

John W. Parker, Business Manager of the Playmakers, has announced that season tickets for the five major productions of the current season, as well as single reserved seat tickets for "The Mikado," are still available at 214 Abernathy Hall.

NSA: Second In A Series

'Political Activism'

Editor's Note — This is the second of a series of three articles on the National Student Association and its eighteenth annual congress, held last August in Madison, Wisc.)

When UNC's 12 delegates arrived at the national congress, they were surprised by the extreme degree of political activism present.

The congress got underway with addresses by Vice President Hubert Humphrey and other high government officials, and the student delegates quickly classified themselves into one of three main categories.

About 50 delegates formed the conservative caucus, nearly 100 formed the liberal caucus, and the rest of the 430 delegates comprised the undifferentiated middle.

According to the UNC delegates, nearly one - fourth of the strong liberal caucus was composed of conservatives and moderates who sought to tone the liberals down.

Floor Fights

Though all the delegates agreed the committee and seminar sessions were informative, the preparation of resolutions and plenary floor fights were the most exciting aspect of the congress.

A resolution supporting last year's demonstrations at the University of California at Berkeley was passed with little opposition from the congress.

The resolution noted that when all reasonable attempts to voice student complaints have failed, "NSA recognizes the need for students to use non - violent, extraordinary measures to secure the minimal standards of student involvement in the college community."

Members of the liberal caucus criticized the NSA leadership for not involving itself in the Berkeley crisis.

"We have warned that a university which treats its students as something less than people will discover that its students will treat the institution as something less than a university," one liberal said.

The congress passed another resolution supporting U.S. presence in Viet Nam, but calling for an end to our "Offensive acts as a step towards a cease fire agreement.

Getting the liberals to accept the clause supporting U. S. presence in Viet Nam was one of the biggest moderate achievements of the congress, according to NSA Coordinator Eric Van Loon.

The congress also passed resolutions calling for:

— Unconditional condemnation of U. S. intervention in the Dominican Republic.

— U. S. sponsorship of Red China's admission into the United Nations.

— Support for the concept of free public higher education.

— Opposition to tax credits for families with children in college.

— Endorsement of rent strikes, school boycotts and sit-ins to oppose slum conditions in the North.

Throughout the proceedings, the strength and preparedness of the liberal caucuses proved most effective, and its influence on those undecided was apparent.

Beyond the congress's basically liberal pronouncements on many areas, all the delegates remarked after the meeting that students across the nation were becoming more active in all aspects of national and international affairs.

Swedish Diplomats Make Visit On Campus Today

A party of top flight Swedish diplomats will be visiting here today as the guests of the School of Business Administration and the Department of Economics of UNC.

Sweden's Minister of Commerce, Dr. Gunnar Lange, and First Secretary Olof Lofberg of the Swedish Embassy will lead the group. Dr. Lange's wife, and also his Personal Aide, Mr. Beckius, will be in the party. Dr. Lange, who was once Assistant Professor of Agricultural and Political Economics at N. C. State University from 1941 to 1943, will be the first speaker in UNC-CH's Business School Seminars in Economics and Business. The talk will be made in the Faculty Seminar Room in Carroll Hall at 4 o'clock and will be about "International Trade Problems."

After a short trip to the N.C. State campus in Raleigh on Friday morning, the party will former Governor Luther Hodg-Gill, and Vice - Chancellor Sitterson of UNC-CH. Governor Hodges and Minister Lange became friends while Hodges was Secretary of Commerce for the United States.

Besides holding the post of Minister of Commerce, which he has now occupied for 10 years, Dr. Lange has been a member of the Swedish Senate for 13 years. He has served twice as Chairman of the Council of the European Trade Association, once in 1959 - 60, and again in 1963-64. He is often called upon as a delegate to the meetings of the World Bank, as well as to those of the International Monetary Fund.

Dr. Lange also worked for the U. S. Department of Agriculture. He had previously obtained experience in dealing with farm problems by working part-time for the Swedish Ministry of Agriculture.

Twins Win, 5-1

MINNEAPOLIS - ST. PAUL — The fighting Minnesota Twins completed their mop up of Los Angeles' two ace pitchers Thursday defeating the Dodgers and Sandy Koufax 5-1 and taking a two-game lead in the World Series.

Koufax, whose 26 victories were the most in the majors during the regular season, was roughed up as the Twins snapped a scoreless tie with two runs in the sixth inning. Minnesota battered Don Drysdale in their 8-2, opening-game triumph yesterday.

Jim Kaat scattered seven hits and climaxed the Twins' scoring with a two-run single in the eight inning.

The teams take a day off today, then move to Los Angeles for three games, if all three are needed, starting Saturday. Only four teams have come back to win the series after losing the first two.

The Dodgers are expected to open their attempted comeback with Claude Osteen, 15-15, pitching against Camilo Pascual, 9-3, Saturday.

Kaat and Kaat battled evenly until the sixth inning today. But Ziolo Versalles, who drove in four runs yesterday, opened the sixth by hitting a hard smash that got past third baseman Jim Gilliam for a two-base error.

Tony Oliva doubled home Versalles and raced across himself as Harmon Killebrew singled.

Versalles tripled with two out in the seventh and darted home as relief pitcher Ron Perranoski uncorked a wild pitch.

Move Surprises President; Refuses To Make Comment

By JOHN GREENBACKER
DTH Political Writer

Sharon Rose, a Student Party member of Student Legislature, demanded the recall of Student Body President Paul Dickson before SL last night in New East hall.

Miss Rose, a member of Dickson's party and a student legislator since last year, spoke on privilege before the body at the beginning of the session.

The body adjourned immediately after she finished.

Dickson refused t ocomment last night on Miss Rose's remarks.

"I find what I have to say to be extremely difficult," she said, "but it is even more difficult for me to stand idly by while this student government faces the gravest crisis in its history and while this university is being attacked by every major newspaper in the state of North Carolina.

Dickson has been criticized by University administrators, faculty and members of the student body for staying in office as student body president since his conviction for a campus code violation last summer.

Official Reprimand

He was given an official reprimand by the Men's Council for taking a coed into a closed fraternity house.

The coed was suspended from the University by the Women's Council for staying out all night from her residence hall without permission.

"Our presence here tonight under the pretense of normality and business as usual is but a prologue to a farce and a tragedy," Miss Rose said.

She said that although many "have admired the many qualities which he has exemplified," Dickson's continuance in office "has done irreparable damage to the reputation of this student community."

"If we fail to rise to this occasion," she said, "the University can never forgive us, the state can never forgive us, and in years to come we will never forgive ourselves."

Miss Rose read to the legislature a recent editorial which appeared in the Durham Morning Herald calling for Dickson's resignation.

She said some state newspapers "have gone a great deal further.

Recall Asked

"Since reason and persuasion have failed to show Paul Dickson what honor demands," she said, "I call upon this legislature and the student body at large to assume the responsibility which is inherent in the rights we have worked so hard to preserve."

Calling for bi - partisan support on the issue, Miss Rose said, "I am compelled to ask for the recall of Paul Dickson as President of the Student Body."

She said the power and authority of Student Government "will inevitably and relentlessly erode away" if there is no recall.

Miss Rose said she was prompted to make her statement after 75 per cent of her constituents voiced their approval of a recall election.

Immediately after Miss Rose finished her statement, Roger Davis, an independent legislator from Craige Residence Hall, called for the meeting's adjournment.

The meeting was adjourned in a flurry of "ayes" from the body.

No other business was transacted by the body, and SP legislative leaders had no comment on the speech immediately.

WUNC U-Day

WUNC-TV, Channel 4, will present live coverage of Tuesday's University Day ceremonies, beginning at 2 p.m. Featured will be a faculty cap-and-gown procession from Bell Tower to the new Carmichael Auditorium and an address at the Auditorium by Chancellor Paul F. Sharp, who is being honored in this year's exercises. The University Glee Clubs and Choral Club will provide music.

The telecast will be repeated on video-tape Wednesday night at 10.

Wake Forest To Invite Red Speaker

WINSTON - SALEM, N. C. AP — In a move aimed at showing opposition to the Speaker Ban Law, the student government at Wake Forest College plans to invite a well-known communist to the campus sometime this year.

Jerry Partney, president of the student body, announced during chapel exercises Thursday that the student legislature unanimously passed a resolution in opposition to the law. The speaker was not identified.

Partney, a senior from Miami, Fla., said having a communist speaker on campus would show North Carolina and its people in it Wake Forest's opposition to the ban and that it "still has a belief and faith in free and open discussion."

The law prohibits communists and those who have pleaded the Fifth Amendment from speaking on state - supported campuses.

Pakistan: Background Of News

By LYNNE SIZEMORE
DTH Staff Writer

India and Pakistan are once again at each other's throats. To those who keep a close watch on international situations this is nothing new, but what of the average individual?

He does not understand the situation, so he either ignores the crisis or blindly follows the lead of newspaper, government and diplomatic personnel.

This is due to the fact that little background information is given to the people of the United States. Dr. William Aycock, former chancellor of the University, is of this opinion. During an interview with the DTH he gave information on the Kashmir crisis which should prove helpful to students and faculty in trying to understand the causes of the rift between Indian and Pakistan.

In March 1951 the UN passed a resolution to implement the resolutions agreed upon by India and Pakistan in 1948 and 1949. This resolution called for the demilitarization of Kashmir.

Dr. Frank Graham was appointed UN Representative to India and Pakistan with Aycock serving as personal assitant. The purpose of the mission, which consisted of military personnel, secretaries, and political advisors, was to meet with the heads of the two counties to reestablish agreements set up in the 1948 and 1949 resolutions.

Old Agreements

In 1948 and 1949 the UN secured two agreements which included a cease fire, withdrawal of troops, establishing a UN force to insure the cease fire, and a plebiscite (a vote by the people).

The cease fire was for the most part observed, but when Graham and Aycock arrived they found themselves sitting on a powder keg. Blackouts had been instituted in West Pakistan and neither India nor Pakistan would get together for talks. Time was spent flying back and forth between capitals talking to the various leaders.

After India received her freedom from Great Britain, two opposing forces were established in the Indian government. It was due to one of these forces, the Moslem League, that the split between India and Pakistan occurred.

The sections of the country which are now West Pakistan and East Pakistan were dominated by Moslems, while the rest of India consisted mainly of Hindus. A majority of the Moslems wanted a nation of their own.

After the partition there was a great movement of people. Hindus in West Pakistan espe- cially migrated to India and millions of Moslems in India crossed the borders into Pakistan. Riots and killings began which widened the gulf between the two countries.

WILLIAM B. AYCOCK

Water Problem

Another factor which caused tension was the problem of water. Most of the water used by West Pakistan came from rivers whose headwaters were in Kashmir, an Indian-claimed state.

States in India were declared independent in 1947 with the right to chose either Pakistan or India. Kashmir, primarily a Moslem country, was ruled by a Hindu Maharajah. He hesitated in his decision as to what country to join.

Fighting broke out between the local residents in Kashmir and the Maharajah was forced to flee. Before he left he sent a telegram to India stating that Kashmir would accede to India.

Troops to Kashmir

At this point Pakistan sent in troops to protect the Moslems and India sent troops to Kashmir. Kashmir then became the symbol of all the differences which grew out of the partition of British India.

No agreement was reached to effectuate the agreement to withdraw troops, but Graham felt confident that the two countries would come to some kind of settlement. A restless peace came over the countries and a defacto partition has existed in Kashmir until recently when trouble once more arose.

Each side began to cross the cease fire lines and troops from each side crossed national borders. The situation was further agitated by China's demands on Sikkim.

Pakistan is interested in a plebiscite but India won't agree, for she still claims Kashmir as her own and demands that Pakistan remove its troops. Aycock said that prospect for a settlement in Kashmir question is not promising. A return to the defacto position of Kashmir is a likely temporary solution.

Another suggestion offered was that some outside force, China the UN or financial problems might cause Pakistan and India to ultimately reach a more permanent settlement of the Kashmir question.

The Sugar Cane Curtain

The Sugar Cane Curtain seemed to part a bit last week when Fidel Castro took the speaker's platform for a couple of his marathon harangues.

Speaking in Havana's Revolution Plaza to 50,000 comrades, he undoubtedly startled many of them when he casually told them that any who want to go to America will be welcome to leave. He said he was even willing to give a couple of boats to help out, and set up two free plane flights a day.

Castro has been in power more than six and a half years. During that time more than 20 per cent of Cuba's population has left the country, making their escapes as best they can.

"The American imperialists closed the ports," the Bearded One said. But in their desperation, Cubans have risked their lives to get out of those ports "closed by Americans," some of them actually making the crossing to Florida in inner tubes. They come at a rate of 2,000 per year, and small boats filled with bloody bodies offer grisly and frequent evidence that many of those who try to leave don't make it alive.

So now Castro offers free exit to his loyal subjects. We are just waiting to see where the strings are attached.

The other statement which has caused the raising of an eyebrow or two is Castro's "revelation" of what has happened to Ernesto 'Che" Guevara. Che, former second-in-command of the revolutionary government, has not been seen or heard for seven months. He has been on the outs with Fidel for some time and was known to disapprove of Cuba's Moscow - oriented ideology. His name is not included in the new Cuban hierarchy.

Speculation is that Che has been sent off to stir up trouble in other parts of Latin America, shipped off to exile or just plain bumped off.

Despite Castro's statement which "explains everything," the last two possibilities appear to be more likely.

"I have fulfilled the part of my duty that bound me to the revolution in your territory," Che said according to Fidel.

"My only mistake of any seriousness was not to have confided more in you (Castro) since the first moments of the Sierra Maestra (where the Castro revolt started), and not having sufficiently understood your qualities as director and as revolutionary . . .

"I liberate Cuba from any responsibility . . . In the new battlefields I shall carry on . . . the obligation to fight against imperialism wherever it may be."

The letter concluded with the hope that the Cuban people will take care of his family. Che's wife was at the rally where the statement was read. She was dressed in black and appeared near tears.

Yes, everything is explained. Unless something was lost in the translation, we would say this letter sounds more like something written by a man with a gun at his head.

Perhaps the Sugar Cane Curtain parted a bit — but it didn't show anything.

Ride A Horse To Class

A group of University of Texas sociology students is having a great time experimenting to see what normal reaction is to unorthodox behavior.

One fellow walked up to a table where some people were eating breakfast and drank their tomato juice. A girl rode a horse to class. Another poured soap in a swimming pool and washed her clothes in it. Students danced in a department store.

Things have been kept in hand, however, by their professor, who told them they didn't have a license "to do all the wicked things you've always dreamed about doing."

So far the students have found that most people are just bewildered and don't try to do anything about their odd behavior.

Chapel Hill is supposed to be a pretty enlightened and liberal place where 'most everything is taken in stride, but it might be interesting to try this experiment here.

We'd like to see the reaction to: Maintenance men who don't mow the grass during peak class hours. Cars that stop for pedestrians at those Franklin Street crosswalks. Y-Building when nobody was waiting in line to cash a check. A Carolina Coed standing on Silent Sam's pedestal, soliciting dates.

Letters To The Editor

University Day Is Solemn Occasion

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

University Day ceremonies in the past have been solemn commemorations of the founding of the first state university in the country.

Famous men have come to Chapel Hill to deliver addresses and receive honorary degrees. The late president John F. Kennedy came here three years ago, and North Carolina writer Paul Green spoke here two years ago. Secretary of State Dean Rusk received an honorary degree here last year.

There will be pomp and splendor as the highest-ranking professors and administration officials march into the ceremony. Their robes will present a colorful, beautiful picture. And freshmen will nudge each other and whisper proudly, "That's my English teacher," or groan cynically, "That's my math instructor?!"

The speeches by the University's leaders and the stirring songs of the glee club will be as adrenalin for the audience's thumping hearts, as all sing Carolina's praises.

However, unfortunately, the audience will be small this year, but not due to the absence of world figures such as Kennedy, who spoke in Kenan Stadium, or Rusk, who drew a capacity crowd to Memorial Hall.

The audience will be small because many students will not be there. They will be boycotting the ceremonies in protest to an administration which recently has been attempting to serve also as student government.

First the administration urged Paul Dickson to resign as president of the student body for a minor violation of the Campus Code. Then it demanded his resignation, threatening to try his case before the Faculty Review Board—an un-traditional, un-constitutional procedure.

Although it renounced such ultimatums, the administration on Wednesday delivered the unkindest cut of all; it refused Dickson the traditional invitation to University Day ceremonies.

This act is not only rude and ridiculous, but also immature. Such acts serve to reduce the prestige of the president, which the adminitsration claims to be so concerned over retaining. The act will not cause Dickson to resign, of course; it will only re-enforce his refusals to quit in the face of administation water-balloons.

There is nothing wrong with John Harmon as president of the senior class. He is a smart student and a good football player, but his position completely lacks the prestige of any president of the student body — no matter how criticized the current president is.

Yes, the crowd will be small, because students would prefer not to attend the moving ceremonies with a bitter taste in their mouths for the administration. You never can tell, there might even be pickets at the ceremonies — in Brooks Brothers suits.

Odds And Ends In Dreamsville

The administration says it will no longer tolerate the double standard. Wait till the legislature hears that one.

* * *

How does Craige get the inside track on everything? What other institution in America could arrange visits from both Jayne Masnfield and Patsy Puckett, throw year-long beer parties in the face of the MRC's wrath and win the Best Dorm on Campus Award every year?

Let's call in the CIA.

Or the FBI.

You know the FBI has a computer that can give the identity of a wanted person when it is fed a list of his characteristics?

But does it give phone numbers?

Here's one for the machine:

Suspicious looking person
Female
Blue eyes
Dimples
Cute
Sweet
Twinkling eyes
Voice smooth as silk

No machine could give me a name from that list, unless a heart thumped inside.

* * *

The Operation Match machine has no heart. It even violates the American system of free enterprise. If fellows like me can't be free to shop around above our bracket—well, we may as well go jump in Schroeder Swamp.

* * *

I didn't realize this fact until I learned that 13 Morrison residents have been missing for more than a week.

I put two and two together.

Imagine the gratitude of UNC anthropologists 2,000 years hence. When Schroeder is drained in 3965, there will be 13 perfectly preserved college students from ancient Carolina.

Student Condemns NSA Resolutions

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Following are excerpts from an article appearing in a recent issue of a national news magazine that should be of interest to many UNC students.

"The National Students Association has met again at Madison, Wisconsin in order to renew its habitual demands that the United States accelerate its march toward socialism at home, and neutralism abroad. Specifically, the Convention ruled that the United States owes a) a better living to every American student, (b) more toleration to American (and for that matter, foreign) Communists, and (c) an apology to the Dominican Republic — for saving their country from the Communists. The headline issue was the support the convention gave to the Berkeley sit-ins of last December. These were officially classified as legitimate and responsible' on the grounds that the normal channels of redress had been exhausted.

". . . The resolution endorsing the anarchic activities of the Berkeley sit-ins had a demurral, to wit the clause that 'some students may have acted irresponsibly' in surrounding and imprisoning for 36 hours a police car that had come to the campus to take a demonstrator to jail. The conservatives tried to get it to read 'some students acted irresponsibly,' but that proved too much. Although it is known that a policeman was surrounded for 36 hours, it is not known — the high semanticists of the NSA inform us — that any student in fact acted irresponsibly. There is a very rigid hierarchy of disapproval in the glossary of the NSA. When the disapproval is really swinging, one 'condemns' — as, for instance, one 'condemns' the House Committee on Un-American Activities. Next to that, one 'deplores' — as, for instance, the landing of the Marines in the Dominican Republic. Still further down, one 'regrets' — as, for example, one might 'regret' the excesses of Fidel Castro. And, finally, one 'does not condone' the students who 'may have acted irresponsibly' in imprisoning a policeman sent out to imprison someone else. On these distinctions, worlds hand at lively conventions.

"The other point that brings relief is not very widely known, namely, that the National Students Association does not speak for the student body of the United States . . . (for) the majority of students have no political views. They are content to let the minority fight the political wars. Every now and then there is a rumble of protest at the NSA's widespread acceptance as the Voice of the American campus. And sometimes, rising in wrath, a student body will kick the NSA out of the campus. But by and large, the students simply ignore the NSA, and rather wonder why the adult world doesn't also."

It is hard to believe that the students of the University of North Carolina pay hundreds of dollars each year to maintain its membership in such an organization.

Dickson Support

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Since the news of Paul Dickson being asked to resign, the DTH has failed to distinguish itself as a non - partisan newspaper. The paper has a perfect right to editorize (sic) on the issue, but the editorials of the paper should be limited to the editorial page. It is regretful that this has not been the case with the DTH. News of criticism of Paul Dickson has been given headlines while news of support receives little or no space. For example, when Chancellor Sharpe (sic) gave his opinions concerning Paul Dickson, the DTH gave him front page headlines but advice given to Dickson by several members of the faculty urging him to remain in office receives no attention in the paper. When Don Carson slandered Paul Dickson, Mike Lawler, and the Student Party, he received front page headlines, but when the Di-Phi Senate unanimously passed a resolution supporting Paul Dickson's decision to remain in office and when the Student Party overwhelmingly supported this resolution by a standing ovation, the news seemed to be of less importance than the announcement that owners of "T Sticker" parking permits would be given a $2.50 refund. The news of a refund may be of more importance to a few people, but to the whole student body? Come now. Because you disagree with the Di - Phi concerning Dickson's decision, it gives you no right, as our campus newspaper to mishandle the news. Isn't it about time our campus newspaper limits its editorializing to its editorial page?

Undated Nurses

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I must leap to your defense. In regard to the letter you printed in the October 6th issue from the four little freshmen of the Nurse's dormitory, I must support the belief that there is both rhyme AND reason for the lack of dates among some of our illustrious coeds.

As a recent transfer from the University of Texas, I was appalled by the consuming time some of our Freshmen Nurses spend in their activities with the American Kennel Association. I have found numerous girls who do not carry broomsticks at such dormitories as Winston, West Cobb, and Smith Dormitory. I have met lovelies at Duke, W. C., and G. C. Alas, perhaps the problem those 20 undated nurses have can be found in the mirror of personality. Do unto others as you would have them do unto you. And you know what they've done on us!

'Chateau Chase'

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Last Sunday six boys walked over to Chase Cafeteria, better known as "Chateau Chase," to eat what we expected to be a fine supper. We ordered something we thought was chop suey on rice. We may have made a mistake.

Returning to the dorm after Monday morning classes and all of us had that pale, haggard look. Our heads hung low, our arms dangled at our sides, and our feet dragged the floor as we moped around the suite. We began to question each other about our health. We made a surprising discovery. All of us had that infamous disease: diarrhea. Because we enjoyed our meal so much, we are asking the manager of "Chateau Chase" to give us exclusive rights to the recipe. This may seem selfish, but believe us, we are doing this for the entire student body.

Police Raid Cars

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Well, they did it again. With the speed and deadly precision of a well organized team of experts, they struck fast, furious, and efficiently. Gone are our most valued possessions, our ultra mode of travel, our poor defenseless cars.

How beautifully timed was the attack from the infamous Chapel Hill Police Dept. Now half the members of the 'big fraternity court' and a large number of UVa. students (they weren't warned that 200 cars have to fit into spaces for 60) are out searching for their cars. At no other time are these fearless ones from Rosemary Street so victorious, be it after little old ladies jaywalking, speeders, robbers, or a coed-killer.

"Take 'em all away," is their cry as they swoop down unmercifully and tow off all cars in sight which are even a fraction of an inch past the undefined and imaginary borders of the insufficient spaces alloted. And what is their reply when asked where one should park? Simply, "There are lots of parking spaces around. Hell, all you have to do is go down that street there, take a right, make a left at the third light, two more rights, another left and you're right there — just hundreds of spots. Of course the walk might take you a while and you might have to walk through a few secluded spots . . . But you look like you can fend off any attackers."

And as we drive off down route 86 looking for a place to park, or as we search for our cars to the next morning, we remember the policeman's parting remark. "Can't wait 'til next year when the university cuts down on more parking spaces; then we'll really make a haul. This sure beats our usual job of watching for jaywalkers."

Rhodes Deadline Nov. 1

The deadline for 1965 Rhodes Scholarship applications will be November 1, prospective candidates were reminded today.

In North Carolina both inquiries and completed application forms for the 63-year-old scholarships, which provide for two or three years' study at Oxford University, England, should be directed to the state secretary, Edwin M. Yoder, Jr., associate editor, Greensboro Daily News.

Conditions of eligibility, it was pointed out, are simple: Candidates should be unmarried male citizens of the U. S. between the ages of 18 and 24 at the time of application, with at least junior standing in a recognized, degree - granting college or university.

A candidate may apply either through his state of residence or through the state in which he has attended at least two years of college.

Regulations for selection, laid down for selections committees by the will of the late Cecil J. Rhodes, include: "Literary and scholastic attainments . . . exhibition of moral force of character . . . (and) physical vigor, as shown by fondness for the success in sports."

Final selections will be made by an interviewing committee December 15, after which two North Carolina nominees will compete in the final district selections in Atlanta. Four Rhodes Scholars will be selected from among nominees from North and South Carolina, Virginia, Georgia, Tennessee and Florida.

Chancellor (on leave) Otis Singletary of the University of North Carolina at Greensboro, now director of the U. S. Job Corps, will be chairman of the North Carolina selection committee this year, as last.

A man's sanity will be at stake when North Carolina and State settle their football differences over in Raleigh Saturday.

If the Tar Heels fumble away a game they are a slight favorite to win, Charlotte News columnist John Kilgo (UNC '57), who has been put through a mental wringer daily now for a year by an unknown State fan, might fall off his rocker.

This Kilgo fellow — they call him Killer and we may as well too — lives and dies with his Tar Heels. Some say he is a fanatic. And in a way they are right — he is fanatically loyal.

Killer is not a fair weather follower. His devotion increases proportionally to the square of Carolina defeats. The harder his team is hit, the harder he pulls for them.

And when they win, oh lordy, when North Carolina wins Kilgo makes life unbearable for those outside the Tar Heel cult.

John will want to win this game more than any in the past — maybe more than all of them wrapped up together — and for good reason.

Because his sanity is threatened.

Let me explain. If you knew Killer you would know how he basked in the Tar Heel's Gator Bowl year in 1963.

He was ready for more of the same when Carolina opened here against State last fall — and he said so. He told Wolfpack fans his boys would eat 'em alive. Boy, he put it to them.

But State outplayed UNC and won the ball game 14-13 — a fact of which John Kilgo has been keenly aware ever since.

For each day in his mail there is a postcard. Its message, in big block red letters, is always the same. It reads:

N. C. STATE 14
U.N.C. 13

There is no return address and no signature. And every day it comes to remind Killer anew of the cost of thinking aloud with his heart instead of his head.

At first he laughed at his daily reminder and then he tried to shrug it off. Finally he developed a hard, wait-'till-next-year attitude.

But the cards continued to come and lately they have been getting to Killer. I saw him just last Saturday after the Virginia game. His laugh sounded hollow and his smile has creacked around the edge.

He is worried that his Tar Heels may duplicate last week's performance and that every day for another year that anonymous jerk will rub salt in his wound.

No doubt today's Charlotte News will find Kilgo perched in his old spot — out on a limb pulling for his Tar Heels. He really rates a medal of some sort because if his boys blow it tomorrow, it is going to be a long way to the ground.

Unbeaten Booters Shoot For Third Straight Win

By BILL ROLLINS
Dth Sports Writer

UNC's unbeaten soccer club goes after its third win of the season when it plays host to American University of the District of Columbia at 3 p.m. today on Fetzer Field.

The club has looked impressive in rolling to victories over Air Force (4-0) and East Carolina (13-1), an indication that this could be the best of Coach Marvin Allen's 19 seasons here.

But today's match is expected to be one of the toughest on the schedule, and the Tar Heels' showing should be an accurate yardstick of their ability.

American posted a 5-3-1 record in the Mason - Dixon Conference last fall, and has split two decisions thus far in the present campaign.

Towson College carried off a 4-1 triumph in the opener but the Eagles rebounded with a come-from-behind 3-1 conquest of Roanoke College.

Like USAFA, American boasts one of the top goalies in the nation with Art Brodsky. He registered four shutouts last year and allowed only 15 goals as AU dropped several close, low - scoring matches. He is averaging 32 saves per game this season.

The biggest satisfaction to Coach Allen in Tuesday's big win at ECC was the fact that the second group booted six goals in the second half when he played his entire squad.

Leading the team thus far in scoring have been Jackie Writer and Larry Heath with four goals, Jim Johnson (3), John Loud (2), and Willem Polack (2).

Besides the scorers, Allen has expressed special pleasure at the performances of goalie Tom Roberts, Bronson VanWyck, Gordon Cadwgan, and Eddie Belmont.

Harriers Run Maryland

Coach Joe Hilton's cross country team faces its toughest challenge today at Maryland.

Last fall the harriers won eight of nine meets, losing only to Maryland. The Terps went on to capture the ACC title at the conference championships, breaking a four year Tar Heel reign.

Maryland is favored to win again today since its championship squad last fall was predominantly sophomore.

Carolina captain Jim Meade, who finished second to USC's Bob Crombie for individual honors last year, should win the race.

UNC will depend heavily on the performance of two sophomores, Mike Williams of Tarpon Springs, Fla., and Bill Bassett of Oaks, Pa.

The harriers defeated USC 22-37 in their opening meeting last Monday. Meade won that one going away, followed by Williams, senior Bill Janowitz, Franc Kurth and Fred McCall, another top-notch sophomore from Greensboro.

Bassett finished a disappointing 8th for UNC and 11th in the race. He ran with a cold that day, however, a cold from which Coach Hilton hopes he has fully recovered.

Tar Heel travellers need "get up and go." When you are traveling, whether by car or bus, plane or train, try to do a little walking every half hour or so, advises the North Carolina Heart Association.

NSA: Third In A Series

Criticism, Defense Of NSA

(Ed. Note — This is the last in a series of articles by DTH Political Writer John Greenbacker on the NSA congress, held last August in Madison, Wis.)

Last fall students at this university were involved in a campus-wide controversy over UNC's affiliation with the National Student Association.

Local opponents of NSA criticized the national student group for its public stands on controversies in national and international affairs.

Most of the resolutions passed by previous congresses of NSA had been of an extremely liberal nature, and therefore conservative groups have worked on many campuses to disaffiliate member schools from the organization.

The UNC campus voted in a referendum last fall to continue University affiliation with NSA, but the critics of the Association would still like to see NSA concern itself with the betterment of student life rather than national or international issues.

UNC's delegates to the NSA national congress held last August were both liberal and conservative in their political philosophies, and their impressions of the congress are significant in light of the pro and anti-NSA controversy.

Bob Powell, a junior from Thomasville and a political moderate, praised the congress for the "tremendously maturing and elightning experience" it offered him.

"It is noteworthy that the UNC delegation was quite active and prevailing in moderating the congress," he said.

Bill Scott, a senior from Nashville, Tennessee, criticized the congress for its pronouncements on the Viet Nam situation.

"I don't see how the NSA position on Viet Nam, as passed by the congress, is going to help the Carolina student," he said.

He did, however, state his "firm belief" that UNC remain affiliated with NSA.

"Our delegation was the leading factor in diluting and defeating powerful liberal proposals," he said.

"NSA was chaos buttressed by radicalism, with an 'open forum' thrown in as a fringe benefit," conservative Sandra Burden said. "Such were my first impressions of NSA.

"The radicals want NSA to be heard," she said. "Carolina wants NSA to be listened to; Carolina must not back down from this stand.

"We must strengthen our stand and the position of NSA by encouraging new 'conservative' schools to join and member schools to stay in," she said.

Possibly the most significant perspective of the congress came from senior Wright Doyle, a member of the small conservative caucus at the NSA congress.

Doyle said that although he disagreed with much of the legislation passed by the congress, he does not advocate withdrawal of UNC from NSA.

"Moderate liberals and conservatives are not active in student politics and have generally not been interested in NSA," he said.

Urging moderates and conservatives "not to quit when the going gets rough," Doyle said, "It behooves all of us to take an interest in and try to improve NSA.

"We must not concede the battle before it has been fought," he said, "and we can't allow the presitge of NSA to be used by those with whom we do not agree."

'Fink' Rules Bring Protest

AMHERST (CPS) — Students at Amherst College are protesting a new set of parietal rules, including a so-called "rat-fink" clause which makes all residents in each dormitory responsible for reporting violations of the social code.

Student protest has taken the form of college-wide discussions and letters to the student paper. About 100 students have not handed in signed honor code cards, by which a student indicates he is willing to abide by the social code, ing the "rat - fink" clause.

The student council is organizing a poll of all students on the social hours issue and is encouraging all dormitories to elect representatives to a student inter-dormitory council, which is in charge of formulating the social code.

Along with the exclusion of the "rat-fink" clause, students are demanding an extension of the hours during which women are allowed to visit the dormitories.

He Leads Three Lives

If you had to appear calm and unfazed on your own radio program, fight a fire and then study for a zoology quiz all in the space of 24 hours, do you think you could do it?

Win Donat — student, fireman and radio announcer— does. The three jobs are all in a day's work for him.

The last two roles are assumed as ways of earning money to put himself through the University of North Carolina here. But they're also work he thoroughly enjoys for itself.

First and most important, of course, Donat is a student. A tall, slender guy with a deep resonant voice, he's a junior and majors not as might be expected in radio-tv or in speech, but in zoology.

That field might seem alien to his other two interests, but, he says, "Both jobs are enjoyable. They vary my outlook. I meet people constantly and this is something I need. It's better than living in just one world."

The Raleigh native takes a full - course load at UNC and hopes to enter graduate school.

In his second world — that of fire - fighter — Donat sometimes dashes off to as many as three blazes in one night. Then again he may not be called upon for a week.

In between the trips, Donat uses his evenings to study. For his work as a fireman, he gets a free room in the modern Chapel Hill firehouse.

The position as radio announcer is a pretty varied one in itself. In charge of the 4 p.m. until sundown hours of a local radio station's time, Donat finds himself spinning records, reading advertisements, doing his own engineering and programming and sometimes doing field work.

His program — a smooth and easy show of the best in popular music and show tunes — calls upon him "to obliterate everything else from my mind and be as pleasant as possible."

His mature voice has led his listeners to think of him as older than he is and Donat admits that he pays extra attention to articulation while he's on the air.

So far no disasterous bloopers have occurred in his radio career, and Donat feels his job isn't terribly tense or demanding.

The rather reserved young man doesn't think his schedule is particularly fast or unusual.

"The things that I do regulate my time," he says. "They really help me to be organized."

Queens Needed For Homecoming

Getting ready for it — It happens to be Homecoming Weekend, about the biggest thing to hit the campus in the fall. What it comes down to is Jubilee in the Fall.

Preparations for the weekend are already underway. Rick Kramer, president of the Carolina Athletic Association, said earlier this week that entrants for the Homecoming Queen contest are now being accepted.

The contest will be held in the Rams Club Room of Kenan Fieldhouse Oct. 20. Four judges will select eight coeds as finalists.

These beauties will make up the Homecoming Court and will have their pictures in the Daily Tar Heel.

The Queen will be selected from this group by campus-wide balloting on Oct. 27 and 28.

Zacki Murphy, last year's Homecoming Queen, will crown this year's winner during halftime ceremonies.

Any organization may sponsor as many contestants as it wishes. Each entry must be accompanied by $5 and turned into the Graham Memorial information desk by Oct. 18 at 6 p.m.

Kramer also said that a pep rally and fireworks display will be held the night before the game.

On Saturday morning the judging of the Homecoming Display Contest will be conducted.

Trophies will be awarded to the best all - campus display, best fraternity, best sorority, best men's resident hall and best women's resident hall.

Judging is based on beauty and originality.

Then of course the ball game will commence at 1:30 against the Georgia Bulldogs, currently ranked number four in the top ten.

Georgia beat Michigan 15-7. The Tar Heels lost to the Wolverines 31-24.

The Bulldogs' dropped Carolina 24-8 last year in Athens. Georgia holds the lead in the series, 13-12-2.

Special Art Exhibit Opens In Ackland Center Today

Ackland Art Center is now exhibiting a special collection of new works in honor of University Day. The display will run until Oct. 31.

Prints, drawings, paintings, sculptures and other arts, many of which have not been shown in university art galleries form the exhibition.

The new works include gifts as well as purchases. Among them are four paintings and a Louis Comfort Tiffany lamp, gift of the John Motley Morehead Foundation.

Cdr. and Mrs. L. E. Stahl have given two prints and a painting in memory of the late Charles E. Kistler, of Fayetteville.

The art center has also purchased many new paintings. Artists who are featured in the show include: Durer, Wenzell Hollar, Domenico Tiepolo, Thomas Gainsborough, Theodore Chasseriau, Jongkind, Daumier, Gabriel Decamps, H. Flandrin, Emile Nolde and Dean Meeker.

The Ackland museum is open to the public Tuesday through Saturday from 10 to 5 and Sunday from 2 to 6. The galleries are closed Monday.

Combo Party Saturday Night

N. C. State University will sponsor a combo party at its student union Saturday night after the UNC - State football game and UNC students will be admitted free, according to Consolidated University Student Council member Faryl Sims.

Closed circuit television of the game and the Rooftop Singers will be featured at Raleigh's Reynolds Coliseum.

Student Body President Paul Dickson has warned students to avoid unpleasant incidents before, during and after this year's game.

Get His Goat

Pittsburg, Kan.—(AP)—Police Sgt. Lowell Forbes wishes someone would get his goat.

Forbes recently answered a call that a goat had climbed onto the roof of a home to get away from a dog.

He lassoed the goat, took it home and waited for the owner to call for it. He's still waiting.

Petition Demands Vote By Oct. 19

By ANDY MYERS and ED FREAKLEY
DTH Staff Writers

A petition began circulating yesterday demanding a recall election for the office of President of the Student Body.

The petition followed a speech Thursday night in the Student Legislature by Sharon Rose, a member of Dickson's party, the SP. The recall demand began circulating in women's residence halls late yesterday.

The petition reads:

TO PAUL DICKSON III, PRESIDENT OF THE STUDENT BODY:

"We the undersigned hereby petition you to direct the elections board to hold a recall election for the office of President of the Student Body. We further petition that this election be held on or before Tuesday, Oct. 19, 1965."

President Dickson will be required to direct the elections board to hold the election if the petition is successful. At least 15 per cent of the total student body must sign the petition for the recall to be conducted.

About 1,900 names will be required.

Immediately after Miss Rose's demand for a recall Thursday, the Student Legislature was adjourned. There was no discussion.

Rebuttal Due Sunday

Since that event, Dickson has not commented on the speech or the recall petition but Student Party leaders are preparing a rebuttal statement which will appear in Sunday's DTH.

It was reported that the circulation of the petition was concentrated in Spencer, Alderman and Nurses residence halls.

Last week Dickson's decision to remain in office received unanimous support of the Di-Phi Senate during a closed executive session.

That body passed a resolution which supported Dickson, tion's interference in the Dickson matter and urged student leaders to work with Dickson during the coming year.

Part of the resolution read: "We do support the decision of Paul Dickson in choosing to remain as President of the Student Body. We urgently request the administration to cease and refrain from any further interference in this particular question and to work with President Dickson in the fullest spirit of cooperation during the coming year.

Miss Rose, the legislator who proposed the recall, was unavailable for comment yesterday.

Earlier Action

The Dickson flare up began last month when eight student leaders presented a petition to the president asking him to resign.

The leaders said they felt they could not function in their various duties if Dickson remained in office.

Dickson had been given an official reprimand by the Men's Honor Council this summer for a Campus Code violation. The charge against him was helping a coed enter a closed fraternity house.

The University administration threatened to reopen Dickson's case if he didn't resign. Later, after taking with student leaders, they withdrew their ultimatum.

Dickson issued a statement after being presented with the petition by the student leaders saying he felt he had not betrayed the student's trust and that he would not resign under outside pressure.

First Petition

A few days later three students circulated another petition asking Dickson to resign in the interest of the student body.

They presented the request to the president with almost 1,500 names on it.

Dickson thanked them for their effort but said, "I will only leave office through recall or impeachment."

The chancellor released a letter dated Aug. 26 saying the administration would no longer "except or inforce the dual standard" decisions of the honor council.

Dean of Student Affairs, C. O. Cathey, said the letter was released to reply to statewide criticism concerning the administrations' role in handling the matter.

Two weeks ago the faculty committee planning University Day said Dickson would not represent the Student Body at the program. Senior Class President, John Harmon, was selected instead.

Tryouts Tomorrow For Summer Tree

Five male and five female parts will be up for grabs tomorrow at 4 and 7:30 p.m. in Playmakers Theatre for the Carolina Playmakers second production of the year, "The Summer Tree," written by UNC's Schubert Fellow in Playwriting, Randolph Umberger.

Mr. Umberger has been heralded by Tom Patterson, director of the production and Professor of Playwriting at UNC, as one of the finest young playwrights ever to come out of this area.

Reminiscent of the plays of Tennessee Williams and Erskine Caldwell, "The Summer Tree," which is set in Raleigh in 1919, concerns the "loss of innocence of a 16 year old girl." Tryouts are open to all students, faculty and townspeople, and to anyone within a commuting distance of Chapel Hill.

Scripts are available in the reserve reading room of the library or at 307 Bynum Hall.

State, Carolina Meet In Raleigh

By PAT STITH
DTH Sports Editor

If North Carolina players are superstitious then it's a good thing that today's game with N. C. State isn't their first of the year.

If it were the 21,000 who will jam their way into State's Riddick Stadium could expect the Wolfpack to come out ahead, regardless of who the experts tab as the team to beat.

Over the past ten years North Carolina has opened with her sister institution in Raleigh seven times — and the Wolfpack won six of those ball games.

UNC, on the other hand, won all three non-openers, including a 31-10 victory here in 1963. In last year's opener State stunned Carolina 14-13 and put its season into a tail spin before it got off the ground.

It doesn't mean anything really, but North Carolina reigns as a one touchdown favorite to break State's eight game home winning streak, dating back to 1962.

Both teams have 1-2 records.

North Carolina looked impressive in a 31-24 loss to Big Ten defending champ Michigan in its opener and then played excellent ball in a 14-3 win over Ohio State. But the Tar Heels dived head first off their pinnacle of success in a 21-17 loss to Virginia here last week.

N. C. State, the defending ACC champion, lost 21-7 to Celmson, whipped Wake Forest 13-11 at home, and then lost to South Carolina 13-11 last week.

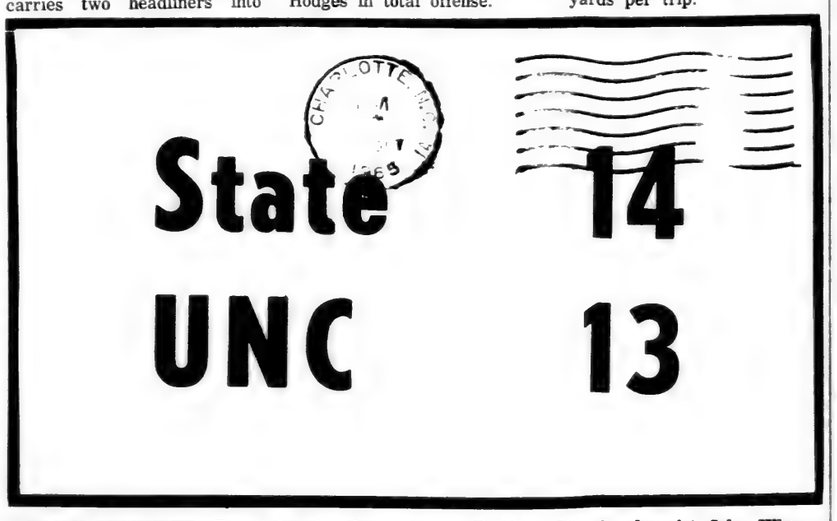
If past performance means anything, it ought to be a free wheeling ball game — if State passes and North Carolina runs. UNC ranks seventh in the conference in pass defense and State ranks at the bottom of the list in rushing defense.

Over the past two games North Carolina's defensive line has been rougher than a file on enemy backs — Ohio State managed only 66 yards on 47 carries and Virginia got just 60 yards on 44 attempts.

North Carolina's secondary, however, has looked like a hunk of Swiss cheese. Virginia's Tom Hodges hit 14 consecutive passes against the Tar Heels last Saturday to beat them in the dying minutes of the game.

Offensively North Carolina carries two headliners into the game. Quarterback Danny Talbott leads the conference in passing with 40 completions and ranks second behind Hodges in total offense.

Running back Max Chapman is the conference's top rusher with 236 yards on 42 carries, an average of 5.6 yards per trip.



DAILY REMINDER—Every day for the past year Charlotte News' columnist John Kilgo has received a post card like this one from an anonymous State fan. Kilgo will be at the game today hoping—praying even—that his Tar Heels will put an end to this nonsense.

Placement Service Says 'Register Now,' Seniors

"Now is the time to register with the Placement Service to make best use of it," Director J. F. Galloway told senior and graduate students who filled Hill Hall's auditorium Thursday night.

He told students to register "tomorrow morning" because:

1. Faculty members know you best now.

2. If you are not seeking employment now, the bureau will have your permanent record for future reference, perhaps after military service.

3. Companies will be recruiting on campus for administrative and managerial personnel.

"Companies will begin interviews here in one week," he said and expressed optimism about opportunities to be offered this year.

He introduced guest speaker Donald M. Cook, corporate manager of college relations for the Radio Corporation of America, as one well qualified for discussing securing employment because he has seen it from both sides.

Cook began by saying, "I was recently on the Ohio State University campus and the students there asked to be remembered to you."

Then he told the audience what the adult world thinks of college students, according to research analysis: College students have gained in knowledge and curiosity. They have more concern for the present than the future, greater desire to be with a crowd, less respect for their elders. They are more cynical about the world and society and differentiate more between social classes. They are frank, open, unsuspicious, self - centered, passive, cooperative and more anxious to get ahead. They grow old before their age, reaching middle age in the teens, but they are ignorant of the economy in which they live. They are smarter than the preceeding generation, but many are in debt. They find it difficult to communicate with their parents and other adults. Finally, they have the facts, the education, but they don't know what to do with it.

The Daily Tar Heel

Opinions of the Daily Tar Heel are expressed in its editorials. Letters and columns, covering a wide range of views, reflect the personal opinions of their authors.

Commies At Wake Forest

The student legislature at Wake Forest says it's going to bring a communist speaker on campus—sort of a protest in sympathy for us state-supported schools.

The president of the student body, Jerry Partney, said, "I hope it will help to demonstrate that the logic behind the (speaker ban) law is fallacious, that the Communists are not superhuman persuaders, as some people think.

"We're not afraid of what the Communist has to say. If we become afraid of different viewpoints, we are indeed in bad shape," he said.

There is nothing new in his logic or approach. Students have been saying this since the law was passed more than two years ago. And it is still just as true now as then.

On the surface it appears that Wake students are risking nothing in this action because the law does not affect private schools. Hardly any school in the state, however, has been meddled with more than this Baptist-supported institution. The concern which its trustees—and nearly all "good Baptists"—have had for the morality and character of Wake students has been evidenced by such petty things as an on-campus dance ban.

It is not illogical to think that some of those protectors of innocence will be upset about the flaunting of Communists about the campus.

Whether they do anything about it is another matter.

Actually the person everyone should feel kinda sorry for is that yet-to-be-selected representative from the Communist party's speaker bureau. Those folks at Wake will give him hell.

A New Vocabulary Phrase

A new phrase has been added to the American vocabulary—"Alabama justice." It refers to decisions in race murders in the South.

It can best be illustrated by these examples:

On March 25, 1965, Mrs. Viola Liuzzo, a 39-year-old housewife from Detroit, was carrying demonstrators back to Selma, Ala., after the march to Birmingham. She was shot in her car. One of the three men charged with her death has been tried. His case ended in a hung jury.

On June 12, 1963, Medgar Evers, Negro field representative for the Mississippi NAACP, was killed by a sniper as he got out of his car at home. The trials of his accused murderer, Byron De La Beckwith, have twice ended with hung juries.

On Sept. 15, 1963, a teenaged Negro, Virgil Ware, was killed after the Birmingham riots following the bombings of a Negro church. Two white boys convicted of manslaughter in the case are free on probation.

On April 23, 1963, William Moore, a white Baltimore postman was shot and killed during his "freedom walk" from Chattanooga, Tenn., to Jackson, Miss. No one has been charged with the murder.

On June 21, 1964, two white and one Negro civil rights workers were killed and buried by a bulldozer near Philadelphia, Miss. The U. S. Supreme Court is waiting to hear the case.

On March 23, 1964, Mrs. Johnnie Mae Chappel, a Negro woman with 11 children, was killed in Jacksonville, Fla., after a racial demonstration. A white man was sentenced to 10 years in prison for manslaughter, but charges were dropped against three others.

On July 11, 1964, a car pulled alongside one being driven by Negro Reserve lieutenant colonel Lemuel Penn. He was killed by shotgun blasts from the car. Three men associated with the Ku Klux Klan were charged with the murder—one was not tried and the others were acquitted.

On Aug. 14, 1965, Jonathan M. Daniels, a 26-year-old Episcopal ministerial student, was killed by Tom Coleman, a parttime deputy sheriff, in Haynesville, Ala. A young Catholic priest, the Rev. Richard Morrisoe, was severely wounded in the back. Coleman admitted the shooting, but he was acquitted—"self defense." The verdict was reached in one hour and 29 minutes.

Of course there is another side to "Alabama justice."

On April 23, 1963, a teenaged white boy, Leslie Luttes, was killed after racial disturbances in Augusta, Ga. Six Negroes were sent to prison for terms ranging up to life.

On June 6, 1963—a little closer to home—Fred Link, a white mechanic, was killed during racial trouble in Lexington, N. C. A Negro was convicted of second-degree murder and sentenced to four to seven years.

So long as local courts have jurisdiction over cases of this sort we can expect similar decisions with consistency. Even now the Justice Department is trying to have all racial murders heard in federal courts. When the states shirk their responsibilities they shouldn't be surprised when they lose their rights.

Tutorial Projects Give Undereducated Negro Chance For Self-Help

By TERRY FOWLER

The situation of the Negro 120 years ago is largely responsible for his dismal situation today in American society. And his situation today, unfortunately, must willy-nilly condition his position in the United States tomorrow. For the Negro to become more a part of society, not only must that society change its attitude toward the Negro, but the Negro himself must be changed.

From this perspective, educational projects and community action projects in which Negroes themselves take part hold promise in having as important an impact on the drive to make Negroes members of and contributors to our culture as laws promulgated from above, laws which only suggest rules for legal and economic equality. The fact that racial discrimination has socio - economic ramifications is often lost sight of in the heat of moral arguments, while in fact the socio - economic effects themselves are the best rationale behind the only partially a priori moral grounds against racial discrimination.

How can we help the Negro, or, more appropriately, how can the Negro help himself, psychologically as well as legally, to the opportunities in the United States for the pursuit of happiness? It takes guts to come down to earth and answer this question modestly, "conservatively," if you wish tutorial projects.

Education is obviously a potentially powerful tool to help the Negro, but people have found it difficult to influence the public school system directly. Tutoring centers outside the school have been formed in the last few years, therefore, centers where a child can go and get the personal attention he needs to encourage him substantively and psychologically in his studies, when he does not get this encouragement at home or at school — which is often.

The first tutorial project, sponsored by the Northern Student Movement, was launched in Philadelphia in the summer of 1962. Its huge success was written up, and $60,000 was received to set up programs for the summer of 1963 in eight cities, including Chicago, New York, Boston, Detroit, Hartford, Washington, D. C., and Philadelphia. The parent organization, the NSM, has since become less entranced about tutoring as an idea and has turned to other activities, but several of the centers started under its auspices have continued to thrive.

These projects are characterized by varying philosophies of the role of tutoring in helping the Negro, as well as by varying environments. The people in the Philadelphia project, thoroughly disenchanted with their city's schools, have set up a series of community schools which present a viable alternative to the formal schooling the children might receive in the city schools. The Chicago project on the other hand, considered by some to be the finest project going, has formed study groups of tutors and tutees to examine defects and to suggest remedies in the municipally - finance public education.

Since the summer of 1963, several different types of tutorials have been tried. The more usual project is a creature of out-of-town and even out-of-state college students who have little in common with the local communities in need of help. Of course, many of these are still energetic and exciting programs. For instance, all five colleges in Greensboro have coordinated their tutoring activities into a particularly active central organization; the leader, a charismatic figure himself, has managed to equip his outfit with money from Scarsdale, and with jeeps from the North Carolina Fund to transport children to school.

Another type of project, called "community based," can be run in several ways. At all times trying to reach the goal of maximum adult participation within the community, tutoring projects of this sort are likely to be staffed by people from such sources of manpower as VISTA, or a full-time volunteer of some sort.

One of the more original attempts to start a community - based project is operating in Berkeley: organizers are going around to Negro high schools to encourage students to start tutorial projects in their own community. Those interested are brought to the Berkeley campus, given an orientation course in running a program, and then sent back to start work among people who already know them well.

Even a little tutoring gives the underprivileged child previously unattainable personal attention, the lack of which is one of the greatest barriers to his educational and therefore social advancement. But another serious barrier — lack of cooperation and initiative from the parents and kids themselves — requires more imagination than raw manpower. White middle class college students, no matter how many of them there are, are seldom the ideal bearers of aid (much as they would hate to admit it) when participation by the adult Negro community is so important. The toughest nut for the tutorial projects to crack is, then, developing the skill as well as the zeal to transform or indeed to develop attitudes toward education among those who never perceived it as relevant to their condition.

Letters To The Editor

NAACP Officers 'Dismayed' By News Story Of Meeting

As officers of UNC-NAACP, we wish to express publicly extreme dismay at the coverage of our September 30 meeting by The Daily Tar Heel.

Coverage of the meeting occurred without our knowledge. It is true that the meeting was considered open. We always welcome people to our meetings who are interested in our work in the area of civil rights. We do not welcome irresponsible coverage such as we received by The Daily Tar Heel.

The Daily Tar Heel has made the future of progressive race relations much more difficult on this campus by unnecessarily arousing anti-Negro sentiment. Statements of individuals discussing possible policy of the NAACP were given in The Daily Tar Heel as the actual policy of the NAACP itself. Weighing facetious statements equally with serious discussion of policy, and serious discussion of policy with actual policy is example of the most irresponsible journalism.

The most extreme distortion concerned our interest in fraternities and sororities. We consider the segregation of these institutions which are granted their very existence by the University as an insult to Negroes and all people who consider this University as one supported by the people of North Carolina. We do not advocate test rush of fraternities. In fact, that idea was rejected. We do advocate that Negroes who are interested in fraternities and sororities seek admission to them as would any student.

We ask supporters of the NAACP to disregard most of what they read in The Daily Tar Heel article. We will continue to work for more complete campus integration in ways that we deem responsible.

We wish to extress to University officials that any statements made by Daily Tar Heel reporters concerning our policy were completely unauthorized.

We ask The Daily Tar Heel to print in full this statement. This we feel is the least The Daily Tar Heel can do to counteract the completely unfair image that the NAACP has received as a result of inaccurate, irresponsible news coverage.

(Editor's Note: NAACP members met with the editors on Sunday, October 3 and submitted the above letter. They admitted that the statements in the news story of their meeting were accurate, but they were concerned about the impression which the story as a whole would make. Their principal complaints were that they did not know a member of the press was in the audience, and that statements made at the meeting were quoted and printed without their approval.)

LETTERS

The Daily Tar Heel welcomes letters to the editor on any subject, particularly on matters of local or University interest. Letters should be typed, double spaced and should include the name and address of sender.

Readers' Digest Says That Sex Is Now 'In'

The sex maniacs and the beatniks now represent conformity on the nation's campuses.

At least that's the impression one gets after reading a Readers' Digest article by Dr. Norman Vincent Peale, author of The Power of Positive Thinking.

He even quoted one Radcliffe senior as saying:

"Stealing food from the dorm refrigerator would be more condemned around here than fornicating on the living-room couch."

Maybe Dr. Peale's right. My best friend, a Harvard freshman, sent me newspaper clippings about a doctor who prescribed contraceptive pills for two unmarried coeds, and the only reaction of my buddy — whom I'd considered a fairly moral chap — was: "Whee!!"

Heck, what's the world coming to? And by golly, Koeb Egdelwonk, another friend, writes from a college on the West Coast:

"When I got to the University of Jerkeley, the faculty told me to go along with the crowd and grow a beard. They also said that they were only human and that it was impossible to grade my examinations objectively if I got near them after having combed my hair or taken a bath.

"So I went to all my classes wearing old khaki pants, sweatshirt, sneakers with no socks.

"I thought my fellow students accepted me until one day the president of my class walked up to me and said:

" 'Who do you think you are, big shot — wearing dirty sneakers just so you'll get a better grade in English lit?'

"At that point, I quit trying to impress people.

"I took a bath.

"I wore a shirt and tie and jacket to concerts and plays.

"I got a haircut.

"I went to see a dermatologist about my pimples.

"I refrained from sexual intercourse.

"In other words, I was myself!

"Immediately, everybody began treating me like some sort of social outcast, a filthy, untouchable savage. All my professors gave me poor grades, and time and time again, the girls refused to date me. They said I had a bad reputation.

" 'I'm just sick of being phony,' I told the university psychiatrist. 'This is the way I am.'

"Then I explained that I chose to ignore the squares because I had read Dr. Norman Vincent Peale's Readers' Digest article.

" 'The conformist is in no way a free man,' I quoted Dr. Peale as saying. 'He has to follow the herd.'

" 'Yes,' the psychiatrist answered. 'But society must abide by certain rules; otherwise, man is doomed. We're rich and powerful and prosperous, sure. But moral confusion can mean the decline of civilization.

" 'Koeb,' he continued, 'I know you won't like this, but from now until the end of school I'm putting you on marajuana cigarettes. And while you're at it, how about reading more pornographic literature?'

" ' "Tom Jones" would be a good book,' I said, 'wouldn't it?'

" 'I agree with you,' the psychiatrist replied, 'except that that's a classic, and I might get in trouble with College Students for Decent Lieterature if I assigned it to you.'

" 'How about Playbody Magazine?'

"His eyes brightened. 'Wow!' he exclaimed. 'There's something with proven literary worth! I highly recommend it.

" 'And by the way,' he added, 'now that you've settled your moral crisis, I want you to go out and seduce a few coeds.' "

UNC Booters Win 3-0

High-Stepping Carolina Booter Moves Ball Toward Goal

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

American University was stung by an opening - minute Carolina goal and never recovered as the Tar Heels notched their third straight soccer win of the season, 3-0, yesterday on Fetzer Field.

AU Coach Maung Gyi, due to his small 16 - man squad, requested that Coach Marvin Allen play the game under the which allow only 16 men to participate.

If all goes as scheduled, the touring University of Buenos Aires soccer team will play an exhibition against Carolina next Wednesday afternoon on Fetzer Field.

Coach Marvin Allen of UNC says he has been contacted but plans are not final as of yet.

Allen complied and his men moved quickly to put the Eagles on the defensive.

UNC kicked off and moved swiftly downfield. The ball was booted back and forth for several seconds before outside left Jackie Writer gained possession just to the left of the goalie's box.

Jack maneuvered beautifully to in front of the net and slammed the ball into the green mesh for a 1-0 lead. Less than a minute had elapsed.

Carolina continued to control play — AU got only one shot away during the entire half — and tallied its second goal about halfway through the first quarter.

After taking over in its own territory, Carolina moved quickly downfield to the left base line where Eagle halfback Barry Walter kicked the ball out of bounds.

Down 2-0, Gyi bunched all of his players on defense, sometimes using six men at the goalie's box. This choked off the Tar Heel scoring bids, but did little in the way of putting the Eagles back into the game.

On AU's only first - half scoring bid, center forward Bob Peters broke into the clear and engaged in a one-on-one duel with UNC goalie Tom Roberts. Peters drilled his shot strong and straight, but Roberts dived and blocked the attempt with his body in a tremendous effort.

American opened up a little in the third quarter and began to show more offensive movement, but two - thirds of the way through that stanza the Tar Heels tallied the final goal of the match.

Center halfback Danny Galves let fly with a smash from 20 yards out. The ball was just above the heads of a four - bunched AU players, but one leaped and deflected it out of the reach of goalie Art Brodsky, and UNC had the game wrapped up at 3-0.

Pros Play Sleepy Time Music For 5,000 Fans

By GENE RECTOR

The ticket stub claimed it was professional basketball Wednesday night at Raleigh's Reynolds Coliseum.

The "Battle of the Giants" the headliner said—Wilt Chamberlain (7-1) of the Philadelphia 76ers against Bill Russell (6-10) of the world champion Boston Celtics.

Well, the battle never materialized for the over 5,000 expectant fans. Both teams played like the pay was late this week.

Of course there were other attractions for the local fans. Billy Cunningham of UNC and Jesse Branson of Elon were rookies for the 76'ers while former Wake Forest center Ronnie Watts was a first-year man with the Celtics.

The excitement built to a frenzied peak as the two teams hit the floor—then began to fizzle. The warm-ups went pretty well, but five players and 5,000 fans fell asleep during the game.

Chamberlain woke up in time to control the opening tip from Russell—then went back to slumber land.

Cunningham started at guard for the 76'ers. He had quite a reception from the home folks—just like old times. "Jump, Billy! Shoot, Billy!" they shouted.

But Billy wasn't jumping so well that night. His shooting was off too. The ACC days are over for The Kid from Brooklyn—this was the NBA and Billy was learning abruptly.

The Celtics jumped to a quick lead against the 76'ers. Sam Jones, guard deluxe for the Celtics, hit quite a few from outside to cover for his teammates.

It's hard to describe what the 76'ers were doing. Cunninghnam committed two quick fouls and forgot to dribble a few times while carrying the ball. Chamberlain thought he could play guard as well as center.

The latter stages had all the excitement of football practice wind sprints. Up and down the court they went —grinning at every miscue.

"Five minutes to go," I said to myself at a quarter to twelve.

Cunningham began to hit a couple from the floor. A husband here and there would nudge his sleeping wife and she would raise her head and rub her eyes.

"Three minutes to go," I thought as a Celtic snored past me. That was when Russell called time out, grabbed a towel and headed for the shower. His team was down by three.

and headed for the shower. His team was down by three.

Ah, but enough of this—that is pro basketball, fans.

Oh, by the way, Philadelphia won 103-100.

Tuffs Stomp Navy, 47-0

Warren Bloom and Bob Harris scored three touchdowns each Friday in leading the Town Tuffs over the Navy Op Tars in intramural tag football, 47-0. Jay Schwartz added the other score for the Tuffs.

The Joyner Rams rallied in the second half to defeat the Joyner Heels, 14-6. The Rams, down 6-0 in the first half, came back and scored all their points in the second half.

The Teague Trojans scored 20 points in each half to thump Avery No. 2, 40-0. Mike McLaughlin, Rick Williams, Leslie Shell, John Willardson, Jerry Brake and Tony Almond all scored TD's in the well - balanced attack for the Trojans. Tom Taylor added two safeties.

A touchdown by Clark Harris and safeties by Allan Hicks, Charlie Gold and Bryan Winn led the Aycock Aardvarks over the Lewis Blue team, 12-2.

There were two forfeits, the Alexander Poobahs over the Joyner Straps and Ehringhaus D over Ehringhaus B-2.

The Intramural track meet will be held on Wednesday and Thursday, Oct. 13 and 14. Entries are due by 4 p.m. on Tuesday and none will be taken after that time.

SPORTS

Fauntleroy

The fourth weekend of football's here.
Some teams may be upset.
But don't you worry, faithful friend,
I hold the key, just place your bet.

Yes, football fans, there will be what some call upsets this Saturday. Of course, we know they are not really upsets—since I decide who will win. But we can't tell everyone—it would spoil their fun. (You'd lose money, also—no one would bet with you.)

Speaking of upsets, how about those Minnesota Twins? 'Ol Dodger manager Walt Alston might be singing "How To Lose Your Job In Four Easy Games."

Ah, well—

Getting back to football, did you see the score on the West Virginia - Pittsburgh game last Saturday? — 63-48 in favor of West Virginia.

I decided to let those boys score a few in that game, but I believe they went a little over-board. Either the referees scored a couple or the timer broke his watch. Sixteen touchdowns were scored. They must have left the defensive units at home. I'll have to cool those boys off this weekend.

Oh, I do have something for you Tar Heel fans. Know the difference between culture and agriculture? Give up? It's 30 miles.

O.K. No more jokes. Here are the picks:

GEORGIA vs. CLEMSON: Well, I let ol' Frank Howard have it last week at Georgia Tech. One bad turn deserves another. Pick Georgia to roll.

DUKE vs. PITTSBURGH: Since the Blue Devils are on television, let ol' Bill Murray have this one. We'll get him though—don't worry.

MARYLAND vs. WAKE FOREST: I let Syracuse take the Terps last week. Tom Nugent's 'I' formation should look more like a question mark for the Deacs. Pick the Terps.

TENNESSEE vs. SOUTH CAROLINA: The Gamecocks are improved, but not that much.

Twins Go For Three

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

Before the World Series opened last Wednesday in Bloomington, the Los Angeles Dodgers were favored by many to sweep the thing in the minimum of four games.

Dodger pitching, it was believed, would overcome the power of the opponent. After all, wasn't Sandy Kourfax the best pitcher in baseball?

Yes.

But somewhere in the maze of excitement that builds up before every World Series, someone sneaked into the copy room and changed the script.

It jus' ain't goin' like ever'body said it would.

To begin with, the Minnesota Twins, supposedly LA's helpless victim in the Classic, bombarded big Drysdale and waltzed to an 8-2 rout.

But after the Twins treated Mr. Koufax in a likewise rude manner and took the second game, the only talk you can buy in the Twin Cities is that of the predicted sweep. Only now the shoe is on the other foot.

The most apparent reason the Twins have moved into the favorite's position is the way they have made base hits out of Dodger pitches. They have outhit Los Angeles only 19-17, but their hits have come in bunches — and they have gone over walls and between outfielders.

The Series resumes in Los Angeles today, and if those scratch, peck and pilfer Dodgers don't do more than they did in the Bloomington series, the "Mudcat" could fulfill the "sweep" prediction on Sunday.

Maryland Swamps Harriers, 16-47

COLLEGE PARK MD. — A vastly superior Maryland squad overwhelmed UNC's cross country team Friday 16 to 47. The victory clearly labeled Maryland as a national power in distance running.

Tar Heel captain Jim Meade, considered one of the finest distance runners in the conference, finished fifth. Over all the Terps took nine of the first 10 places leading Carolina the last nine.

Junior George Henry paced the Maryland attack by running the four mile Terp course in a record breaking 19:38.7. Sophomore David Starnes took second, also breaking the old course record of 19:43.

Prior to the meet, Maryland coach "Ace" Keough had expressed confidence in his team.

Keough said in a telephone interview Thursday, "I always have a great deal of respect for a Carolina team. Meade, Williams, and the entire squad are all fine runners."

Meade was the number one man for UNC. His time was 20:04, a half second faster than he has ever run four miles.

Sophomore Mike Williams, 11th in the meet, was the number two man for the Tar Heels. His time was a respectable 21:46.

The defeat is an especially bitter one to the Tar Heels. Between 1960 and 1963 UNC was the ACC's best in cross country.

This fall's Carolina team is a good one but Maryland is great. Out of their first nine runners, the Terps will lose only one man to graduation... their ninth man.

RESULTS: 1. Henry (Md.), 2. Starnes (Md.), 3. Koester (Md.), 4. Harriss (Md.), 5. Meade (UNC), 6. Amoss (Md.), 7. Mathews M. (Md.), 8. Beauchamp (Md.), 9. Middleton (Md.), 10. Arthur (Md.), 11. Williams (UNC), 12. Janowitz (UNC), 13. Worley (UNC), 14. Daw (UNC), 16. Kurth (UNC), 17. McCall (UNC), 18. Putnam (UNC), 19. Mathews S. (UNC).

'Melodrama'–Wilson

SP Leader Blasts Legislative Session

By ANDY MYERS
DTH Staff Writer

Majority Floor Leader Don Wilson charged yesterday that Thursday's session of Student Legislature was a "rehearsed melodrama."

The Student Party leader referred to a speech by Rep. Sharon Rose (of Spencer Dormitory) which called for the recall of Student Body President Paul Dickson.

A petition which began circulating Friday demanding a recall election prompted a rebuttal statement yesterday from Wilson. Dickson is out of town for the weekend.

In a statement to the DTH, Wilson further charged The Daily Tar Heel with holding its news deadline for two hours "in order to have a last minute front page replay of the whole event."

"Shallow Scheme"

He said: "I sincerely believe that honest assessment of all the facts, and the reflection of thoughtful minds will recognize the shallowness of this scheme — and reject it!"

Wilson said he would present a petition this afternoon to Vice President Britt Gordon, the speaker of the legislature, calling for a special session of SL at 7:30 p.m. tomorrow "in order that SL might get back to work at hand."

The recall petition is still circulating around campus, but the number of signatures attached to it is unknown.

Almost 1,900 names will be required to hold a recall election. If it is successful, the petition will force Dickson to have the elections board conduct the election before Oct. 19.

The petition reads:

TO PAUL DICKSON III, PRESIDENT OF THE STUDENT BODY:

"We the undersigned hereby petition you to direct the elections board to hold a recall election for the office of President of the Student Body. We further petition that this election be held on or before Tuesday, Oct. 19, 1965."

Like General Assembly

According to Wilson, last Thursday's session of SL resembled "the General Assembly in the closing session of the spring of 1963," referring to the method of rushing the speaker ban law through without debate.

Wilson accused Miss Rose of making her statement to infer that "President Dickson does not even have the support of his own party."

However, when informed of Wilson's charge, Miss Rose stated, "I made it very clear Thursday night that I did not intend to speak for the Student Party.

"As I said, I spoke only for the constituients of my dormitory, three - fourths of whom signed the petition asking the president to resign."

Miss Rose continued, "If the other legislators would start representing their constituents instead of just their party, we'd get a lot more done."

Wilson said that Gordon, in his "brazen refusal to entertain debate . . . constituted a gross abuse of procedure and prerogatives of the Chair."

He called the procedure "the profaning of due process," regretting that the issue had been opened again.

Miss Rose apologized for the student body for the fact that "certain leaders of my party, in order to disguise their own irresponsibility, have resorted to vicious, scurrilous and personal attacks."

Text Of Statement

This is the full text of the statement released by Student Party Floor Leader Don Wilson:

Last Thursday night the Student Legislature witnessed a rehearsed melodrama which looked like a chapter of the "Thad Eure Guidebook for Passage of A Speaker Ban Law."

The directors of this little theatrical farce even forewarned The Daily Tar Heel which held its news deadline for two hours in order to have a last minute front page replay of the whole event.

With numerous pieces of important legislation already released from committees for floor action, including nearly 200 presidential committee appointments, the Vice President and Speaker of the Student Legislature didn't even bother to prepare an agenda for a session which he knew would never see legislative action.

Following chaplain Bill Purdy's reading of the "fallen man" parable from Job 14: 4-10, the Vice President recognized Rep. Sharon Rose to address a partially unsuspecting body. Her statement, however sincere, opened with a disclaimer of all but altruistic interests and followed with a biting indictment and a plea for "non - partisan" action, reminiscent of countless utterances by Don Carson and other members of the UP heirarchy.

Speaker Britt Gordon then stifled any rebuttal by immediately recognizing Roger Davis, who was not even a member of the body, for a motion to adjourn. Davis's motion to adjourn came after he had moved onto the SP side of the chamber so as to appear to add a second SP voice to the issue

Speaker Gordon called for the "Ayes," and the UP Minority shouted approval. Gordon simultaneously brought down the gavel and adjourned the body without even calling for the Nays."

This brazen refusal to entertain debate, which constituted a gross abuse of procedure and prerogatives of the Chair, ran like a video-tape replay of the action of the General Assembly in the closing session of the spring of 1963. How is it that this student body, whose leaders have steadfastly deplored the disregard for due process and legislative debate among free men by which the Speaker Ban was enacted, now must be subjected to emulation of those tactics by a small, wilful group who find that example expedient?

The intended implication of Rep. Rose's statement is clear. Her statement was designed to indicate that President Dickson does not even have the support of his own party. Miss Rose, though an SP legislator, did not support the SP ticket last spring. The UP did not even run a candidate against Miss Rose when she ran for a legislative seat last spring. In no uncertain terms I want it understood that Rep. Rose does not speak for the Student Party or the Student Party legislative caucus.

My only true regret, outside of the profaning of due process, is the fact that this issue has been reopened. A check of the leading newspapers in the state reveals that this issue has not been mentioned for over a week. The record stands clear as to who placed this issue before the public previously. A complete documentation of what happened Thursday night appeared in the Friday morning Raleigh News and Observer as well as the Charlotte Observer. There has been a deliberate campaign to get the present issue into the state press in order to further inflame the situation. Excuse me if I regard certain pronouncements of concern for state publicity as so much hypocrisy.

The fact that no independent group of students had initiated a recall in three weeks seemed a significant indication of student acceptance of President Dickson's decision. A desire to be about the business of student government for the year ahead appeared to be evident among the major part of the student body.

Part of that business of student government consisted of a major program of progressive legislation which was before the Student Legislature Thursday night, including twenty - eight bills introduced by the Dickson Administration and the Student Party Caucus on September 30. This program has been stifled by raising anew this controversy. Legislation to implement the resounding mandate on Campus Radio was shoved aside in Thursday night's hasty adjournment. Legislation appropriating $6,000 to the Residence Colleges, bills which will eventually provide for color televisions in every residence hall, fraternity, or sorority which takes part in the program, and bills to provide recognition for excellence in teaching, have been relegated to second place in importance so that another full-scale controversy could be forced on the student body at this time.

The eagerness of an ambitious few to take advantage of a situation in the twilight of its importance, is itself an act so irresponsible as to crack through the thin veneer of false morality which has been contrived to gloss over the purposes of this move for public consumption.

I sincerely believe that honest assessment of all the facts, and the reflection of thoughtful minds will recognize the shallowness of this scheme — and reject it!

Tar Heels Win Redemption With Decision Over State

By ED FREAKLEY
DTH Staff Writer

RALEIGH — The Tar Heels redeemed themselves yesterday milking the Cows with a first quarter touchdown and a fourth quarter field goal turning States' cream sour.

Carolina came back into the barnyard following a week in the out house after falling to Virginia 21-17 last Saturday.

The traditional battle between the sister institutions was played before a packed 20,600 people in Riddick pasture.

The game was part of Consolidated University Day. Students from Carolina, State, Greensboro and Charlotte College attended.

Mary King, a beautiful Carolina blond, won the title of Miss Consolidated University. She was given roses and crowned in half time ceremonies. Zacky Murphy, also a Carolina Product, was second runner - up and Julia Lassiter, of State, was first runner-up.

Band Beaten

As it came out Carolina won the ball game and the UNC gals stomped the rest of the Consolidated U. contenders. However, the Tar Heels suffered one loss. State's band was the whole musical show, the marching Tar Heels would have done better if they hadn't gone.

Getting back to the football game, it was a battle of hard knocks. Both defensive units played good ball.

The pads were pounding from one end of the field to the other. Even so there were only two fumbles, one by each team. State recovered theirs and ours.

Offensively UNC clicked on three or four occasions. On the touchdown drive they stayed on the ground most of the way going over tackle and sweeping the ends.

A couple of other drives were halted by the hard play of State's forward wall.

Long March

After the ball game had been tied early in the fourth quarter the Tar Heels took the kick off and marched 67 yards to the State 13. Once again the Cows came up from the pasture and held.

From there scrambling quarterback Danny Talbot, who said early in the season that State was one team Carolina was definitely going to beat, kicked a perfect 30 yard field goal.

The old pig skin went right through the barn doors to bring home the hay.

But the defensive 11 still had there job to do, and do it, they did.

State drove to the Carolina 23 before being slung back into the mud hole. On fourth down they attempted a 39 yard field goal for a tie. It missed, wide to the right.

And so it ended. Carolina has won two games, both on the road, and lost two, both at home.

They played a good ball game yesterday, not great, but good. They didn't quit.

From bums to heros in seven days, from the out house to the palace. But the toughest part of the season lies ahead, Notre Dame and Georgia. And Maryland — Maryland next week in Kenan palace. A place that turns from a palace to an out house mighty quick.

Talbott Kicks FG, Keeps Old Vow

By PAT STITH
DTH Sports Editor

RALEIGH — North Carolina quarterback Danny talbott kept a vow he made 13 months ago here Saturday, leading his team to a 10-7 victory over N. C. State.

He wasn't spectacular — it wasn't that kind of game — but he ran a smart attack, he was the game's top total gainer, he scored Carolina's only touchdown, he booted the extra point and then with just 5:51 left on the clock, he kicked a perfect 30 yard winning field goal.

And in doing so he kept a vow to beat State that he made with himself more than a year ago.

It was this same Wolfpack that picked off Talbott's first varsity pass on opening day last fall and returned it 45 yards for a touchdown. And it was State that intercepted another of his passes late in the game to set up their winning score.

He vowed then that today would be a day or reckoning — and it was.

Both teams played tough, hard-hitting, heads up football. And the game was actually closer than even the three point spread indicated.

Because after Talbott put Carolina ahead and the ball changed hands twice, State launched a desperate drive drive that almost paid off in a tie.

With less than two minutes to go the Wolfpack got the ball on their own 48-yard-line and in five palys moved it to the Carolina 23.

From there Harold Deters, who had kicked two field goals to beat Wake Forest 13-11 two weeks ago, attempted a 39 yarder from an angle to the right — and missed.

That's how close it was.

North Carolina completely dominated the first quarter, rolling up 87 yards to State's minus three and scoring its only touchdown.

The second period was more of the same until quarterback Charlie Noggle burst through the right side of the Carolina line for a 33 yard gain to the State 49, where Mike Horvat nailed him from behind.

From that point on the two teams played on equal terms, with the Wolfpack getting off a 13 play 40 yard drive late in the third quarter for their only score and Carolina coming right back with a 14 play 67 yard march that resulted in Talbott's field goal.

Neither team intercepted a pass and there was but one lost fumble — that break went to State.

Running back Max Chapman, who emerged the game's leading rusher, fumbled on the Carolina 40 yard line after a four yard gain midway in the third period.

State took the ball at that point and drove it on in for its only score.

North Carolina Coach Jim Hickey, who looked like a man who had just emerged from a game of Russian roulette with his head intact, praised both teams.

He called it a typical North Carolina - N. C. State game — hard fought and close. He singled out running back Max Chapman and sophomore fullback Tom Lampman for special praise.

N. C. State actually missed two opportunities for a tie.

The Wolfpack took a short 28 yard punt from Bill Edwards late in the second period and defensive back Fred Combs returned it 14 yards to UNC's 33 yard line. Six plays later their drive stalled on Carolina's 14 and on a fourth State elected to go for broke.

Page Asby's pass to halfback Shelby Mansfield in the end zone was high and the gamble failed.

After the game State Coach Earle Edwards admitted that he wished he had gone for the field goal.

"It's just a feeling you get," he said. "I though we could put a quick one in there and we decided to take that chance."

Gemini Film Monday Nite

"The Four Days of Gemini 4" an NASA film which covers the recent Gemini Flight of Astronauts White and McDivitt, will be shown on Monday evening at 8 p.m., in Carroll Hall auditorium. This is to be an all - campus showing, with the student body and interested townspeople invited to attend.

YDC Executive Committee Endorses Highway Bonds

Governor Dan Moore's road bonds issue gained the support of the UNC Young Democratic Club executive committee Friday. The group voted to actively work towards passage of the issue, which is to be decided by a vote of the people on Nov. 2.

The executive committee discussed program plans for the remainder of the year. Tom Bolch, club president, said that Robert L. Huffman of Monroe, president - elect of the North Carolina YDC, has agreed to present the first program of the year for the Carolina YDC.

Huffman, who was president of the local club when he attended Law School in Chapel Hill, will address the club on Thursday, Oct. 21.

The executive committee also discussed plans for a mixer in Greensboro with members of the UNC-G YDC, to be held in the near future.

Special Patrols Protect Campus

By JOHN H. JENNRICH
Associate Editor

About 1:30 a.m. the night before the State game. I met Chapel Hill Patrolman H. P. Smith half-way between GM and the planetarium.

We stopped and talked for a minute. He was working special duty for the University, trying to keep Cow College boys from painting signs on Carolina buildings or Silent Sam.

Patrolman Smith invited me to join him in his car parked on the sidewalk next to GM. He turned on the heater and I asked him about his job.

This was the third year he had been working special duty, he said, and he sometimes thought the University was spending an awful lot of money on protection. But it was like insurance. The week before the State and Duke games, the University would hire several police to patrol the campus all night. It was cheaper than cleaning paint off buildings.

He said he didn't mind the long hours. He has a wife and four kids and he could use the extra money.

From where we were sitting, we could see Silent Sam, GM, the sun dial and the planetarium — all likely places for the traditional paint splashing that precedes the annual football rivalry.

Painted Campus

Smith said one time two couples came over from the State campus. The car dropped one boy and girl off at the Morehead lot and drove to the Bell Tower. The couple had a small can of paint with them and they strolled past Silent Sam, the Old Well, Wilson library and on over to the Bell Tower. And everywhere they had walked, they left their mark.

Luckily, police had spotted the N. C. State car near the Bell Tower and had noted the license number. Shortly thereafter, the police realized the campus had been hit and they put out a call to look for the State car. Some alert policeman in Glen Lennox spotted the two couples as they were heading back to Raleigh and brought them back to the Chapel Hill police station. They had paint on their hands and egg on their faces.

It was almost 2:30 and the campus was quiet. A car pulled into the Morehead lot, but it was just another policeman bringing Smith some coffee. He offered me a cup and we continued talking.

Last Year

Last year, he said, some students from Ehringhaus saw someone on the water tower near the medical complex. Soon there were 200 screamin' Carolina fans at the base of the tower. Chief Beaumont, the campus police and the Chapel Hill police soon arrived and cleared away the crowd. Some of the police wanted to scale the tower and see who was up there, but Beaumont said it wasn't worth the risk. The police waited over an hour, walking around the tower and shining spotlights at the top. No one saw any sign of movement on the tower and after a while, every one left.

But next morning, there was BEAT CAROLINA splashed across the side of the tower.

Smith said that of course Carolina students did the same thing. "Once we hit Duke on a Thursday night," he said, "and they got us Friday."

It was 3:30. I thanked Smith for the coffee and conversation and started to leave. He got out to walk around the buildings and as we parted, he told me he wished people had a better image of police. He said, "People see an officer doing his duty and call him a dirty name. But police are human, just like everyone else, and they're only doing the job people pay them to do."

Smith had said earlier that he would get off special duty about four and that he had to be back on the street at nine. And he had been working special duty since Wed.

And he was humanly tired, "just like everyone else."

THE LONELY VIGIL — A policeman sits in his patrol car on the UNC campus Friday night. The extra patrols were put on duty to protect the University from possible damage by other students' pranks.

Burn Which Building?

News reports have indicated for some time that the situation in Indonesia is unsettled, what with all those attempted coups and counter-coups, but we didn't know things were quite so confused.

It seems that two days ago thousands of Indonesian youths attacked the Jakarta headquarters of the communist party and burned it to the ground—while shouting "Long live America" and "Kill Aidit." D. N. Aidit is head of the 3.5 million-member Indonesian communist party.

When the United States' new ambassador to Indonesia moved into the embassy there a number of weeks ago, his reception was anything but kind. The "welcome wagon" was an angry anti-U. S. mob.

Now truck loads of demonstrators have passed that same embassy shouting "Long live America." Obviously this is a new tactic designed to get rid of our representatives by shocking them into heart failure.

It'll Never Work

A woman student at Sheffield University in England has come up with a plan to help weak-willed girls with insistent boy friends.

She calls it the Anti-Free Love Society, and it's patterned after Alcoholics Anonymous. This is the way it's supposed to work: When a girl finds she is having trouble resisting sexual advances she calls a special telephone number. Another member of the society answers and gives her "moral support."

If the men of Sheffield have any gumption at all, we predict they will form their own organization — the Society for the Abolition of Telephons.

Setting A Bad Pace

North Carolinians like to think of their state as something of a pacesetter, and the speaker ban law fills the bill because we are the first and only state to have one. To too many Tar Heel's it is just "unfortunate" that most outsiders recognize the law for what it is and give it the "credit" it deserves.

Between the Ku Klux Klan and the gag law, North Carolina has been getting some pretty bad press around the country recently.

At the 4th annual meeting of the American Council on Education in Washington last week, UNC President William C. Friday has been called on by officials from several states to provide weapons they can use back home to head off attempts to pass speaker bans there. Friday, who is chairman of the Council, reported that educators and officials from Alabama, Georgia, Pennsylvania and New Hampshire had consulted with him when attempts were made to pass bans in those states. Gag laws have also been considered in Virginia and South Carolina — and rejected. Reports at the Washington meeting, attended by more than 1,500 of the nation's top educators, indicate that other attempts to pass such laws in other states will be made.

When the only good that can come out of our speaker ban law is the prevention of similar laws in other states, we can only say that North Carolina hasn't exactly covered itself with glory by being a pacesetter this time.

Taft-Hartley Section 14(b)

Repeal Restores Right To Vote

By MARSHALL LICHTENSTEIN

The battle over repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Harley Act—the controversial law which allows individual states to forbid the union shop—is currently raging in the halls of Congress. The public is again being treated to an extraordinarily huge dose of bull by the anti-repeal forces.

Those groups that are most prominently against repeal ought to end their masquerade, and state honestly that they are against the whole idea of labor unions. Right or wrong, at least this would end the hokum that they are losing valuable sleep over the loss of personal freedom.

This is not just an idle claim. There is ample documentation to prove this point. One of the biggest and most expensive lobbying campaigns that this nation has ever seen was launched by the National Right to Work Committee. This group is composed of company presidents, board chairmen, professors, politicians and farmers, who are "concerned" about the loss of individual liberty that workers stand to lose. Curiously, there are no workers represented on this committee even though they are the ones who are directly affected. The viewpoints of those opposed to repeal were amply expressed in hearings held by the House Special Subcommittee on Labor. They were simply for "freedom of choice," said such men as A. D. Davis — who threatened to close one of his Winn-Dixie grocery stores if his employees chose to elect a union; or from Nello J. Teer, whose supervisors had threatened to "tie concrete around an employee's neck and throw him in the canal" unless he refrained from union activity. The classic statement was given by Dr. Fowler of the National Right to Work Committee when he testified that the individual worker had a "moral right" not only to escape union dues obligations but also to work any hours he wanted, to work in an unsafe area, to work for less pay than the minimum wage, and "to be lousy if he wants to." When the wolf adocates Red Riding Hood's right to travel, beware. When groups such as the Right to Work Committee and the National Association of Manufacturers are concerned with the right of the workingman not to join a union, beware.

Though the groups which have led the fight against repeal have been generally discredited, they have succeeded in deceiving a great number of honest people through the use of distorted propaganda. The air should be cleared of these distortions by explaining just what repal of 14(b) would and would not do.

The repeal of 14(b) will restore the right to vote to workers throughout the country. They will regain the freedom to determine whether or not their interests would be best served by a union security clause in their contracts. The reason for wanting a union security clause is simple. The unions properly feel that the worker should pay for the services rendered by the union in collective bargaining since he, though not a member of the union, will get the same benefits from the contract as a union member. It should be pointed out that in a union shop a worker does not become a member of the union. His sole obligation is limited to the giving of dues and fees in payment for services rendered. At present the right to vote on this issue is restricted by so-called right-to-work laws in 19 states, including all southeastern states except Louisiana. It is quite ironic to see conservatives advocating state government interference in the economic process of collective bargaining. A true conservative, the late Senator Robert Taft, co-author of the Taft-Hartley Act, came to see the essential inconsistency and injustice of right-to-work laws:

> "I think it would be a mistale to go the extreme of outlawing a contract which provides for a union shop requiring all employees to join the union, if that arrangement meets with the approval of the employer and meets with the approval of the majority of the employees and is embodied in a written contract."

This is all that the unions request — simply that workers and employers be allowed to bargain for such contracts. Only if a majority of workers in a plant vote for a union shop can this be a bargaining issue. Even then it would still need to be agreed to by the employer. Currently 19 states have interposed themselves in the collective bargaining process and thus denied the right to vote to workers. Gov. George Romney (Rep., Michigan) stated the issue clearly:

> "These laws, whether National or State, are not the answer, because they deny to workers the same organization rights exercised by stockholders. Management and its polices are the result of majority votes by stockholders, and minority stockholders must accept the will of the majority or sell out. In the American economy and political system, workers must have the same rights of organization."

Despite the simplicity of the issue there are a number of deceptive arguments on behalf of 14(b) and the right-to-work laws. I will mention two of the more common ones and their obvious flaws.

One argument is that repeal of 14(b) would infringe on the rights of individuals by forcing them to join unions in order to work. The right to work is defined by opponents of repeal as being equal to the freedom of speech, freedom of religion and other basic civil rights. But such laws do not create any right to work, or even guarantee a chance to work. The only right which opponents of repeal want to protect is "the right of an individual to work at his job without being compelled to join a labor union." Former Secretary of Labor James Mitchell (Republican in Eisenhower administration) recognized these facts when he stated:

> "They call these right-to-work laws, but that is not what they really are. In the first place, they do not create any jobs at all. In the second place, they result in undesirable and unnecessary limitations upon the freedom of working men and women and their employers to bargain collectively and agree upon conditions of work. I oppose such laws categorically."

It is obvious that in states which do not prohibit union shops the right to work exists. In the most strongly unionized state, Illinois, almost 2-3 of the employees in non-agricultural establishments do not belong to unions. Their right to work without joining a union exists without restricting the right to vote of those who want a union shop.

A related thesis of those who support right-to-work laws is that they are necessary to protect a worker's freedom of choice. In actuality, the worker in right-work states has less freedom of choice than do other workers. In those states which do not have a right-to-work law an employee may work in a union shop, either as a member or as an employee who tenders dues and fees for services rendered but is not an active member. He may also work in an open state an employee, even if he wants it, cannot have the protection of a union shop. He must be in a compulsory open shop. Which one has the greater freedom of choice?

The second major fear aroused by the right-to-work forces is that repeal of 14(b) protects the position of powerful unions while suppressing the strength of weak unions. It is not the 31 states where the union shop is allowed, and where labor is big, that are primarily affected by 14(b), which leaves it up to the states to keep or forbid the union shop. Because labor is big there, the union shop cannot be scrapped through local option. Eugene Patterson, editor of the Atlanta Constitution, reiterates this point:

> "The local option business in 14(b) has simply accomplished the predictable. Ineffective in rolling back big labor in states where it is abusing its power, it has simply rolled back weak labor further in the 19 states. . . where it had little power to begin with, and incidentally where per capita income is the lowest in the nation. It is hard to make an argument for a law that exempts the big abusers and crubs only the weak."

There are many good reasons for the repeal of 14(b), but the basic reason is that it is right. It is right to restore to the employees in 19 states the right to vote to determine whether or not they believe a union shop is to their best interest. Who, other than those most affected, should have this freedom of choice?

Chapel Hill Artist

Reichert Recreates 'Personal Vision'

By MARY RICHARD VESTER
DTH STAFF WRITER

"Just a minute," Mrs. Irene Reichert said as she cracked her front door. "I'll have to hold the dog." The door opened again and revealed a black poodle straining at the collar Mrs. Reichert held. The frisky animal pulled his master's small frame about on the slick waxed floor in his effort to be friendly. She attached a leash to the collar and slipped it under a leg of the dining room table to harness his vivaciousness.

"It's the last house on the right on Lakeshore Drive," she had said on the telephone. "The lake is behind the house, only they're doing something to it now, and it's just a large hole." The "large hole" was visible through a picture window and glass doors and across a wooden deck extending the length of the house's upper level.

The interior of the house reflected an artist's touch. A sculpture on a pedestal graced the foyer. Mrs. Reichert, whose exhibit is currently on display in the North Gallery of Morehead Planetarium, led the way down a short staircase to a small room off the recreation room that she uses as a studio.

"This is one of those things that might never work out," she said about the green and blue tissue paper collage on her easel. "But collages are nice when there's not enough time to get down to oils. Then occasionally I go over collages with paint. I like the tissue papers because they give such nice subtle gradations. Yes, I sort of had the sea in mind when I started, but nothing in particular. That's why it's so messy."

She applied new paper cuts to the completed background with a brush dipped in polymer, a plastic liquid that both glues and forms a protective coating.

Does she hang much of her work in the house? "Some," she said, "but I get tired of it. I might really like something just after I finish it and grow to despise it in a few months. Then I get another one from the attic and change them. I don't really paint for the house, though, or to sell, but simply because I enjoy it."

Her husband, Herbert W. Reichert, a UNC German professor, popped in to see what was going on and was introduced. Man and wife were dressed similarly — slacks and pullover sweaters and shirts underneath. And the mister popped back out.

Mrs. Reichert taught some German classes herself in the summer and at night when she was a graduate student here around 1950. It was in a conversational class of German that she met her husband. He was the instructor.

As a housewife she went back to art, her undergraduate major at the University of Alabama.

"I set myself a problem with each thing I do," she said. "I try to compose elements from a point of departure — the corner of the canvas or a dab of color anywhere on the canvas — and achieve a spatial and color relationship.

"My pieces aren't abstract expressionism, but they are abstract. Abstract espressionism," she continued, "is working in a way I don't work; you wort of move and swish and dribble. But I don't mean that in a derogatory sense."

She said her work often makes reference to living and growing things — like rain and flowers — in a semi - abstract way. "But rather than trying to recreate the physical world," she adds, "I try to put on canvas my own personal vision of beauty and to interpret with paint those things to which I am sensitive in the world of inner experience. It's difficult to translate a nonverbal experience into words, or to explain the process of creating a painting."

Her exhibit at the Planetarium represents five or six years of work and is varied. She aims for richness of color, feeling for design and interrelationships between objects and backgrounds. Some of the paintings reflect touches of surrealism or an oriental influence. Many feature overlapping and sometimes transparent planes.

"The overlaps got tedious and complicated," she said. "I wanted to get back to something neat, simple and formal." This accounts for her "Rock Garden" series, a realm of fantasy with rock and plant forms.

Various media she employed in the paintings on exhibit include: oils, pen and ink, pencil, pastels, collage, casein, gouache (an opaque water color), transparent water colors and polymers.

Paint was squeezed from a tube in "Rock Garden: Personages" to create a brilliant, linear, wiry structure on a flat black background. "I'm afraid the figures look too much like men from outer space," she said. "I didn't intend them for that. They may be worshippers."

Mrs. Reichert's paintings are priced from $25 to $350. All Planetarium exhibits are open to the public free of charge daily from 2 to 5p.m. and 7:30 to 10 p.m.; 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. on Saturdays and 1 to 10 p.m. on Sundays. The North Gallery is to the left off the rotunda just inside the building's west entrance.

The current exhibit will be showing through the end of October. A water color and variety exhibit by Mrs. Nadaine Vartanian of Durham is scheduled for November.

Mrs. Reichert's work has been exhibited in Morehead Planetarium several times before and at the following places: the Winston - Salem Gallery of Fine Arts, Greenville Art Center, Allied Arts in Durham (a one - man show), Downtown Gallery of Durham, Weatherspoon Gallery and Design Associates Gallery in Greensboro, Erdahl-Clyde Union Gallery and the North Carolina Museum of Art in Raleigh, Salem College, Jane Haslem Gallery and the UNC School of Public Health (Honorable Mention 1963-64) in Chapel Hill, in Florida and Alabama.

Mrs. Reichert is a Charter Exhibiting Member of the Associated Artists of N. C. She graduated Phi Beta Kappa from the University of Alabama, attended Stetson University, UNC and Duke. She received a Fullbright Grant, studied at the Universities of Innsbruck and Vienna and traveled abroad.

Dean Long Will Keynote NSA Regional Conference

Dean William Long, along with Al Lowenstein, manager of Hubert Humphrey's campaign, will be the keynote speakers for the regional meeting of the National Student Association. Representatives from North and South Carolina and Virginia will attend the conference which will be held on Oct. 15 and 16 at UNC, Greensboro.

The theme for the conference will be "The Student's Role in College Policy Making." Seminars and workshops will be held to discuss this topic in the various fields of school life including judicial, course evaluation, and regulations. A special seminar will be held to explain the purposes of NSA to non-member schools.

A banquet will be held on Friday evening. The conference will end on Saturday at 4:30 p.m. Teddy O'Toole is presently serving as chairman of the Carolinas - Virginia Regional.

Interviews will be held on Monday afternoon between the hours of 3-5 p.m. in Roland Parker II in Graham Memorial. Students who are unable to come at this time are asked to submit their names to Miss Williams, a secretary in the Student Government office no later than Monday. Their names will be put on the list of interested students.

Dr. Gruelach Resumes Post

Dr. Victor A. Greulach has returned to his post as chairman of the Botany Department of UNC after a fifteen month leave of absence.

Dr. Greulach served as First Executive Director of the Commission on Undergraduate Education in the Biological Sciences in Washington D. C.

The commission is supported by the National Science Foundation, which aids universities and colleges in improvement of courses, curricula and instruction of undergraduate sciences.

European Blocs Don't Add To US Gold Drain–Lange

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

Sweden's minister of commerce told a Carroll Hall audience Friday that European economic blocs in the Common Market and the European Free Trade Association will not add to the U. S. gold drain.

In fact, Dr. Gunnard Lange said, exports from the United States to EFTA countries "totalled a record $3.1 billion in 1964, an increase of 23 per cent over the previous year."

He also noted that "Sweden is not a socialized country . . . Private industry dominates ... About 95 per cent of all industry in the country is privately owned."

Lange, who once taught economics at NC State, called for increased European economic unity to increase competition within the members of both the Common Market and EFTA.

He said, "It is not in our interest" to share French President De Gaulle's view that the United States should turn its economic attention away from the European countries.

Lange explained Sweden wants foreign investment to develop natural resources like oil, though he resented the possibility of U. S. investors "buying out" European industries.

The minister of commerce praised the Kennedy tariff negotiations, intended to reduce trade barriers between the United States and Europe.

Edwards Proud Of State Team

By ED FREAKLEY
DTH Staff Writer

RALEIGH — "They made it, we missed."

That's how Coach Earle Edwards summed up yesterday's contest with Carolina

He was referring to Danny Talbott's winning fieldgoal and the one his team missed with 27 seconds left in the game.

"That was the difference in the score," he said, "but the difference in the game were third down plays."

Edwards said his defensive came up with the yardage on the crucial down and his boys weren't able to get it.

"I'm very proud of my team. They did a good job, and they didn't quit."

Edwares said his defensive unit did better than he had hoped. "Carolina moved the ball against those Big Ten opponents, but we defensed them pretty well.

"We knew Talbott was a good scrambler and I think we held him most of the time. He did get a couple of good gains over the middle, but not as much as he got the past three weeks.

"Carolina was tough. They came right back after we scored our touchdown in the fourth quarter and that was the ball game."

Edwards said his team chose to take the wind after winning the toss because they thought it might play an important role in the game.

He said he didn't think it effected State's last ditch field goal attempt.

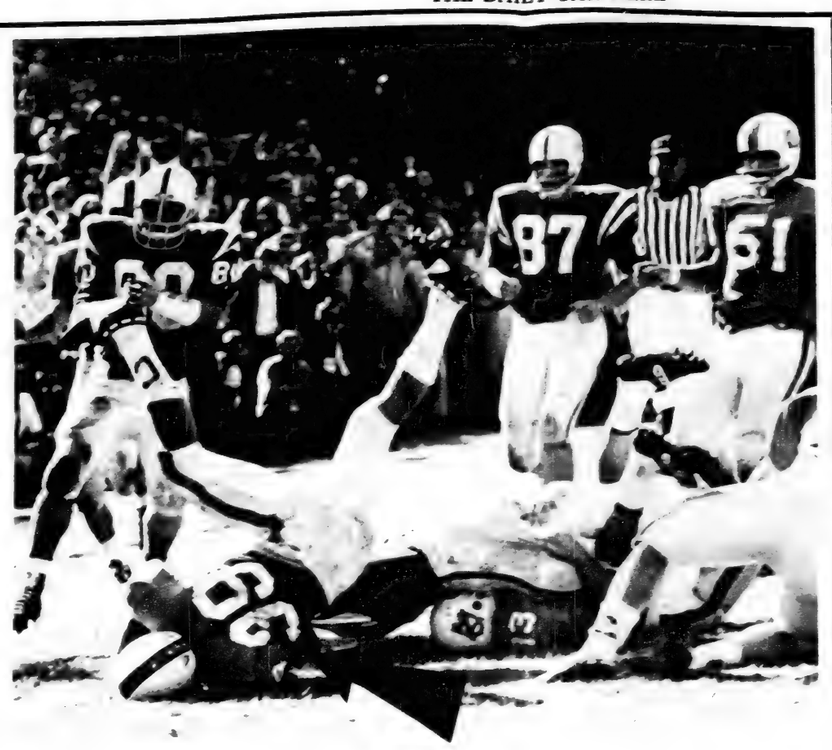
Edwards said his club is improving every week.

Last week they lost to South Carolina, 13-7. They missed two good field goal attempts in that one. Against Wake Forest a last minute field goal brought victory to State 13-11. They lost their opener to Clemson 21-7.

"We have a long way to go in several areas," Edwards said, "but the boys are playing well and we'll win some before it's all over."

North Carolina State University Chancellor John Caldwell told Edwards at the post game press conference, "The boys played a good ball game. I'm proud of them and of you."

When it was all over a tired, but smiling Edwards said, "It was a good game, if you didn't care who won."



Shelby Manfield scoots five yards around left end to score N. C. State's only touchdown of the game. Bill Edwards (39) and John Atherton (83) bring him down in the end zone.

Jim Hickey: We were glad to win.

Hickey — Heel And Hero

By SANDY TREADWELL
DTH Sports Writer

When Jim Hickey accepted the head coaching job at Carolina he accepted a mouthful — but he's done a good job of chewing.

He must be given credit for the Gator Bowl bid and subsequent victory culminating the 1963 season.

Last year his team won the big one against Duke — as they have four of the past six years.

He directed today's squad to a cliff hanger with the Michigan machine. Then the boys toppled Ohio State and the Tar Heels played hard nose football yesterday in Raleigh. They forced the breaks, and took the Wolfpack 10-7.

These facts spell out the man's ability and his success at his job.

But the people of Chapel Hill and the graduate ignore the facts and gloat on the losses.

The moemory of the State game last year burn in the minds of students.

The game against Virginia a week ago is this year's chapter to the "Hate Hickey" campaign.

The crowds swarmed to Kenan Stadium on the second day of October. They yelled "We're number one" before the game and merrily swilled their booze. They rose to their feet during the first eight minutes of the opening quarter, and they yelled so loud you could hear the cheers echoing across Chapel Hill.

Then, all at once, they became silent.

They came by the thousands to see a blue power house trample Virginia. Instead they saw 22 men stumble and then falter.

By the closing minutes of the final quarter all the noise came from the wrong side of Kenan Stadium.

Only the voice of our cheerleaders tumbled from the microphones. The thousands they addressed sat in silence.

"Incredible," one student crused. "What the hell has Hickey been doing to those boys during the last week."

One woman followed her husband out of the gates and turned to me.

"I'll tell you what you fellas need," she said. "A new coach. The one you have now is no damn good."

I heard the same thing happening yesterday.

A group of sophomores huddled around a radio deep with in the bowels of Morrison. They listened intently to a voice describing the action in Raleigh.

And then most of them turned from the voice when it realed off States' three quick completions. And with the confidence of a Biblical prophet they issued a "That's that," and walked away.

Jim Hickey's popularity soars and plunges from week to week. The attitude of the Carolina fans must make a tough job unbearable.

The thousands of sideline coaches are sickening to listen to.

It's high time the fair weather fans and the cynics closed their mouths and opened their minds.

It's time the thousands started cheering when the cheers are really needed.

Cross Country: Legs, Lungs, Map

You need more than strong legs and lungs to be successful at cross country. You need a map.

Cross Country runners, you see, run across country. Four miles is the distance, up hills and down, with nary an information booth along the way.

At North Carolina the course runs over highway and road and trail and near trail using everything from a water tower to a football stadium to designate the way . . .

Meets at Chapel Hill start and finish on the track at Fetzer Field. Describing the rest of the course is not so easy.

After a turn of three quarters of the way around the track, runners tour gigantic Navy Field, then run up a short hill and down a path between Avery and Parker Halls.

From there they cut through the woods to Kenan Stadium and up another hill to the Nurse's Hall. Next goal is the water tower and from down between Ehringhaus and Craige halls to highway 54.

After following a 500 yard horseshoe pattern down the highway the trail turns 200 yards up Laurel Hill and into the woods again. Before emerging near Avery Hall the runners go under a water pipe, over tree roots, cross three bridges and climb Dead Man's Hill.

Dead Man's is aptly named. If a runner doesn't actually expire on the 350 yard double decker affair, at least the possibility enters his mind. It makes joggers out of runners, walkers out of joggers and quitters out of the rest.

Two more hills and a second trip around Navy Field and the course winds up at the high jump pit on Fetzer Field.

Curry Suffers Attack

RALEIGH — Bill Curry, WSOC (Charlotte) television and radio sportscaster, suffered a heart attack yesterday during the Carolina - State football game, according to a spokesman at Rex Hospital.

Curry was taken to Rex Hospital here were Dr. Spruill Spain made tests and examined him and said he was in "excellent condition and doing quite satisfactorily."

Curry, who broadcasts over the Tar Heel Network, suffered the attack during the fourth quarterter of the game.

He was taken from the stadium on a stretcher and rushed to the hospital.

His son, Bob, a sophomore at Carolina and assistant to Bob Quincy, sports information director, accompanied him to the hospital.

Jack Callahan, who did color on the broadcast, took over the play-by-play description.

Minnesota Guns Silent; Osteen Wins For L.A., 4-0

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Los Angeles Dodgers exploded with a rash of doubles in support of Claude Osteen's five-hit pitching today as they whipped Minnesota 4-0 for their first victory in the World Series.

John Roseboro's two-run single with the bases loaded sparked the Los Angeles Dodgers to a 4-0 lead over Minnesota after six innings of the third game of the World Series.

Dodger starter Claude Osteen gave up a leadoff double to Zoilo Versalles in the first inning but stymied the Twins on one other hit until the sixth. He retired 11 Twins in a row at one stretch.

The Dodgers, who had only one extra base hit in the first two games — which they lost — battered Camilo Pascual and Jim Merritt for five doubles. The third one, Ron Fairly's leadoff blow in the fourth against Pascual, ignited the Dodgers' two-run rally.

Fairly was sacrificed to third and remained there as shortstop Versalles made a great diving stop of Jim Lefebvre's single. Wes Parker walked, loading the bases, and Roseboro followed with a single to right field, driving in Fairly and Lefebvre.

Pascual escaped without any further damage, but the Dodgers got to him again in the fifth when Willie Davis singled, moved to second on a ground out and scored on Lou Johnson's second double of the game.

Pascual left for a pinch hitter in the next inning, and Merritt gave up a run in the sixth on a single by Wes Parker, a sacrifice and Maury Wills' double.

Minnesota's Camilo Pascual and Claude Osteen of Los Angeles struggled through three scoreless innings today in the third game of the world series.

The crowd, largest in Dodger Stadium history, saw the Dodgers try to battle back after dropping the first two games at Minnesota. The game was played with the lights on because of a heavy fog.

Zoilo Versalles, Twins' leadoff man, hit the first pitch of the game for a ground rule double and moved to third on a ground out. But after Harmon Killebrew walked one out later, the Twins tried a double steal, and Versalles was tagged out in a rundown between third and home.

Lou Johnson lead off the Los Angeles second with a double but got no fruther than third.

Maury Wills, on base on a fielder's choice in the third inning, stole his first base of the series for the Dodgers, but he, too, could get no further than third.

Bowling

All who want to compete for a position on a ten man bowling team to represent North Carolina should sign up at Graham Memorial or the All Star Lanes starting Monday.

The team will go to the Region Five Association of College Union's Intercollegiate Tournament.

The ten bowlers having the highest averages in a roll-off of 12 games will go to the tournament. There will be a five man "A" team and a five man "B" team of alternate team. The games must be rolled by Oct. 22 and all scores turned into the GM desk.

A.B.C. rules will be observed. No person may compete who has played in money leagues before.

Outstanding North Carolina Alumni Shine In Many And In Varied Ways

Question: Who are the distinguished alumni of the University of North Carolina?

A precise answer to this question is hardly possible. Even the line of demarkation between the famous and the infamous may sometimes be only the difference between the "in" and the "out." Webster, for instance, gives "notorious" as a synonym for "famous."

In a sense, the foremost student in Chapel Hill history must be regarded as Hinton James, UNC's first student and the first at any state university in the nation. The event marked the University as a going concern and established its claim to being the oldest state university was his confrontation with David Ker (also spelled Kerr), UNC's first faculty member, on February 12, 1795, in Chapel Hill.

On that date, although another state university may have been chartered a few years earlier, a student and a professor came face to face on a state university campus for the first time in American annals.

Hinton James of Wilmington was the distinguished pioneer of what now, 170 years later, is an ever-widening and seemingly never-ending flood tide of students arriving at the portals of state universities throughout the nation. As described by Dr. Battle in his "History of the University of North Carolina," James was the "precursor of a long line of seekers after knowledge." As an alumnus, he returned to his native lower Cape Fear country, became a civil engineer of "usefulness in his section," and was called to serve three terms in the state legislature.

North Carolina has had 61 governors since it became a state in 1776. More than half of them have been alumni of the University at Chapel Hill, even though it was not until 1814 that this distinguished alumni procession began with the election of Governor William Miller, a student at Chapel Hill in 1802-03.

Dan K. Moore, the present governor and a graduate of the UNC Class of 1927, is the 31st alumus to attain the office. Three other University graduates preceded Gover. Moore in the office consecutively: Terry Sanford '39, Luther H. Hodges '19, and the late William B. Umstead '16.

Governors Honored

Some alumni who became chief executives of the state have been honored by the University in the naming of its campus buildings. These include Miller, Swain, Manly, Vance, Aycock, Gardner, and Ehringhaus.

Not all of the alumni governors were graduates of the University. Some failed to complete the full four-year course. In the language to today, they became "drop - outs." Of the 31 UNC alumni who were elected governor, only 16 earned a degree at Chapel Hill. Seven of this 16 have served as governor since 1900, and two of this seven attained Phi Beta Kappa distinction: Dan K. Moore '27 and the late J. C. B. Ehringhaus '01.

One four-year student who was graduated from UNC in the Class of 1818 can be said to have achieved the top distinction among University alumni. He was James Knox Polk, the 11th President of the United States. His Commencement visit to the campus while he was President was a celebrated event in 1847.

Another Carolina alumnus became Vice President of the United States. He was William Rufus King, a Chapel Hill student in 1801-03, who was inaugurated in 1853. Still another, William A. Graham, a graduate of 1824, was elected presiding officer of the U. S. Senate. More than 25 alumni have been U. S. senators, most of them representing North Carolina. Incumbent Senator San J. Ervin, Jr., was graduated from the University in 1917.

More than a hundred alumni have been elected to the U. S. House of Representatives. Of this number, these seven are now serving in the 89th Congress: Lawrence H. Fountain '34, David N. Henderson, '49, Harold D. Cooley '20, Charles R. Jonas '25, and James T. Broyhill '50, all from North Carolina, and John L. McMillan '22, a Democrat from South Carolina, and William C. Cramer '46, a Republican from Florida.

Cabinet Members

University of North Carolina alumni have filled a dozen cabinet posts, the most recent being former Secretary of Commerce Luther H. Hodges '19. Kenneth C. Royall '14, now a distinguished New York attorney, was Secretary of War when that post carried cabinet rank, and later served as the nation's first Secretary of the Army.

Gordon Gray '30, also, was Secretary of the Army before he became president of the University in 1950. Carolina alumni seem to have concentrated on the Navy porfolio. These five had been Secretary of the Navy: John Branch, AB 1801; William A. Graham, AB 1824; James C. Dobbin, 1858-59; John Y. Mason, AB 1816; and Josephus Daniels, 1884-85. Mason was also attorney general.

Additional alumni have held or are now holding other positions of trust in high levels of the federal government. James E. Webb of the Class of 1928 is head of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. (It can be claimed that all the U. S. astro-

Director UNC News Bureau

The 12,419 students in the University are invited to attend the Convocation in the new Carmichael Auditorium tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Major emphasis of the day is on students, and the academic life of the University. Students and former students, the 65,000 alumni of the University at Chapel Hill, will be recognized for achievements at the afternoon and evening events.

Prof. William Geer has announced cooperation and enthusiastic participation by students in all sections of the campus. Faculty members and their wives have been invited to more than 60 dormitory residence halls, fraternities and sororities at the "open house" activities beginning at 4 p.m.

A large number of students are expected also at the big barbecue on Emerson Field beginning at 6 p.m. Hundreds have already bought tickets for the $1.50 a plate chicken and pig barbecue.

The fireworks display will begin prior to the conclusion of the barbecue servings — just after dark.

A combo will provide music for the students, faculty and townspeople get - together at Emerson.

An after - barbecue event will be folksinger Glen Yarbrough's concert at Woollen Gymnasium at 9 p.m.

The Ackland Art Center will have exhibits in recognition of the founding of the University.

The complete list of events for the day, announced by Prof. Joseph C. Sloane, follows:

1:30 p.m. — Faculty assembles at Bell Tower for procession to Carmichael Auditorium.

2:00 p.m. — Convocation, W. D. Carmichael Jr. Auditorium. Presiding: Prof. Corydon P. Spruill, Faculty Chairman Address: Chancellor Paul F. Sharp. (Program of convocation also includes words from representatives of alumni, students, faculty. Music by bands, glee clubs, chorales, trumpeters).

4:00 p.m. to 5:30 p.m. — Open house in dormitories, fraternities, sororities.

6:00 to 7:30 p.m. — Barbecue at Emerson Field.

7:30 p.m. (approximately)— Fireworks. Combo playing from 6 to 7:30.

9:00 p.m. — Glen Yarbrough, folk singer, Woollen Gymnasium, through auspices of Graham Memorial.

Choo-Choo And Ten Other Fellows Helping Him Out

By BOB QUINCY

It was a morning class in Spanish and Charlie Justice, who was better known than the governor, gazed at the text as if he had been asked to run against a nine-man line.

"Charlie," admonished the professor, "why is it you have such an easy time doing the right thing on a football field and such a difficult time preparing your Spanish lesson?"

Justice, with a half-grin, quickly offered an opinion. Said Charlie: "I guess its because I have ten other fellows helping me out there."

The big story in athletics at the University of North Carolina these many years is the helping hand the great performers received on the field. Every school year more than 900 students try their skills at varsity and freshman sports. Only a few can be chosen for headlines. The headliners, in almost every case, deeply appreciate those who have made their stardom possible.

Justice, known to all his followers as Choo Choo, is perhaps Carolina's most famous athletic son. He played football here from 1946-49 and two of those years the All-America selectors elected him to first team rank. He did magic tricks when he took a football in his hands. His teams went to three Bowls, turned down a fourth invitation. Halfback Justice was runner-up for the Heisman Award in 1949.

When Tar Heel athletes are discussed, Justice is the first name on the majority of l.ps. Charlie, of course, doesn't hog the entire show of talent. However, in this type of story, you begin with the first thought.

In looking about the athletic scene at Chapel Hill, one fact should be set straight. Today's gladiator is perhaps the finest conditioned and most physically fit athlete in the school's history. We do not seek to laud the old-timer as the pinnacle of perfection.

Sports on campus are varied and for the most part highly competitive. So competitive that Carolina teams can choose their foes around the nation on almost any level and be assured of a good performance.

Look to the Past

But since we are talking of great athletes, we must look to the past — for the stars of tomorrow are born but not yet crowned. Of Carolina's 10 All-America footballers, Justice heads the list.

A young man with football skill here in the 1930's later made his greatest mark as a

Beehives And Beds Filled With Hair

By ROBERT W. SPEARMAN

Student life at the University of North Carolina began in 1795 under the strict supervision of the faculty. Shortly after the University's founding, the trustees drew up a set of laws to regulate the students in minute detail

They were to rise at dawn were confined to their lodgings after eight o'clock each night. Never were they to go out of sight of the buildings or out of the sound of the bell. Students were not to: "Use profane language, keep 'ardent' spirits in their rooms; associate with evil company; keep dogs or firearms; bet on horse races; use indecent gestures; or speak disrespectfully of religion."

These rules were to be enforced by the faculty, and professors were designated to visit rooms twice each day for inspection.

But the early Spartan regime implied by these regulations never appealed to the students. Rebellion was the result and it was usually directed against the faculty. On one occasion a professor's room was "flooded with toad frogs and terrapins, and again a beehive was placed in his room and at the same time his bed was filled with hair."

The records of late 1798 tell u sthat students "beat a Professor Gillespie personally, way - laid and stoned Mr. Webb, accosted Mr. Flinn with the intention of beating him, but were diverted from it and at length uttered violent threats against Mr. Murphy and Mr. Caldwell."

Early Cheating

Classroom cheating prevailed along with the violence. One account tells that a favorite student trick was to lower examination questions through a knothole in the floor to a closet below, where cohorts were armed with textbooks to supply correct answers.

But even in these early tumultuous early years came the beginnings of student responsibility for student conduct. In 1795 students organized "The Debating Society" which soon split into two groups known as the Dialectic and the Philanthropic societies. As early as 1799 a student named John Wynn was sentenced to "total and final expulsion from the Dialectic Society" for "extravagant breaches of conduct . . . and criminal indulgences."

Since every student at the time belonged to either the Di or the Phi, Wynn had no choice but to leave the University. This incident appears to be the first example of an American college student being expelled by the independent action of his fellows. The Societies took anoter step forward in 1807 when University President Caldwell guaranteed their right to prohibit faculty attendance at their meetings.

The Societies continued as an important influence in student life throughout the succeeding decades, but the peak of their importance came when the University was reopened after Reconstruction in 1875. At that time the Honor System was inaugurated and the Societies became responsible for its enforcement.

Between 1879-1883 one case of cheating arose. It was heard by the society of which the accused student was a member and he was permanently dismissed from the University. In 1885 the Trustees strengthened the hands of the Societies by requiring compulsory membership for all save law and medical students. They authorized the faculty to expel any student from the University who was expelled by the Socieities.

SG Reorganized

But with the increasing number of professional students, Society influence waned, and student government was reorganized in 1904 with the creation of the University Council. Membership on this council was composed of class presidents, representatives from the professional schools, and other representatives chosen by the Council itself.

The name of this body was soon changed to the Student Council, and on May 30, 1910 the trustees formally recognized it as the official student governing body. Provision was made for students convicted by the Council to appeal to the faculty.

In the 1930's the Faculty Executive Committee recommended to the faculty that "all cases arising under the honor system be handled by the Student Council." According to the records, the faculty "approved the recommendation without a dissenting vote."

The '30's saw the creation of the office of the student body vice - president and the emergence of the two student political parties, the University Party and the Student Party. By 1938, students were strongly dissatisfied with the non-representative and exclusive nature of the Student Council which then served as a judicial, executive, and legislature body. The result was the founding of the Student Legislature in the fall of 1938.

Post-war Vets

The post-war period saw the influx of great numbers of veterans. The demands upon student government increased and the need for formal written law became clear. In 1946 the first written student constitution was adopted.

This document established three separate branches of government — the executive, the legislative and the judicial. The Men's Honor Council and the Women's Honor Council were the principal judicial organs and provision was made for lower courts to "handle minor cases." With a few minor changes, student government has retained this basic structure.

Thus in the late 19th and and early 20th centuries, the growth of student government was synonymous with the growth of student responsibility for student conduct. In the late '30's, however, the concerns and responsibilities of student government began to broaden to include academic reform, civil rights and statewide political issues. This trend was accelerated by the creation of the legislature in 1938 and the sharp division of powers in the 1946 constitution.

U-Day Issue

Today The Daily Tar Heel is publishing a special University Day issue. The articles and pictures in this paper tell the story of the many facets of UNC.

The lead story concerns tomorrow's ceremonies honoring Chancellor Paul Sharp. Also on page one are stories of Carolina athletics, by Bob Quincy, the history of student life and government, by Robert Spearman, and an account of some of UNC's distinguished alumni, by J. Maryon Saunders.

Page two has John Alicott's history of the development of campus architecture. On page three are a story on University collections by William S Powell, and a description of the structure of the University by J. C. Sitterson.

Page four features Robert B House's history of the University and the town of Chapel Hill, James L. Godfrey's sketches of some outstanding faculty members, and Dwight W. Rhyne's account of the University's service to the state.

Walter Spearman's article on Carolina's contribution to the arts and [illegible] sity are on page five.

baseball player. The name was George Stirnweiss, who answered to the sobriquet of Snuffy. George played everything — basketball, baseball and football. He played them well.

After his Carolina eligibility expired, Snuffy turned to professional baseball. He fitted the Yankee mold and became a fine second baseman, daring on the double play and a smart base runner. In 1946, Stirnweiss led the American League in hitting with a .309 mark.

Stirny died a few years ago. He was riding a train that wrecked on the outskirts of New York. This brings to mind a great friend and colleague of Snuffy's, handy Andy Bershak. An All-America end in 1937, Bershak later was to die of Bright's disease.

Thoughts turn to basketball and the team comes before the individual. The year was 1957 and a sports miracle was to transpire. The Tar Heels of the hardwood went through an entire season without a loss. It meant the National Championship at Kansas City with a one-point victory over Kansas and the Jayhawker star, Wilt Chamberlain.

It was a team of talent and fortitude and an amazing lack of nervousness. Often it was behind. Never did the immense pressure stir panic. The fabulous five seemed to know what was ahead.

A thin kid who looked as if he needed a care box from Europe was the scoring star. Name: Lennie Rosenbluth. The ball was a hot rivet in his hands. He got rid of it quickly, usually in the direction of the basket. When the heat was on, Lennie's accuracy increased.

Other members of the starting family were Tommy Kearns, Bob Cunningham, Pete Brennan and Joe Quigg. The latter two were tall and rebound hungry. Kearns was the cocky quarterback. At tipoff time in the NCAA finals, Tommy, 5-11, jumped at center against Chamberlain, 7-1. It was good for a laugh but most folks believe that Tommy inwardly felt he could control the ball.

Basketball has been superb at Carolina season after season. Do not leave the scene without a tribute to George Glamack. He was a two-time All - America from 1940-41. He developed a hook shot that had the appeal of a fan dance by Sally Rand. George, the famed Blond Bomber, was scoring 20 points back when that total decided some games. In 1941, he hit 45 against Clemson.

Cross-Country

Each sport has championed its great ones. Jack Milne, packed with stamina, was the NCAA cross - country champion almost 20 years ago. Track at UNC gave Harry Williamson, Chuck Simmons, Bill Albans and Jimmy Beatty to the U. S. Olympic forces.

Beatty, an All-America distance man here, later became the first American to eclipse the four-minute mile. How Jimmy did it is Jimmy's secret. His size went against him at 5-5 1-2. Bigger, stronger guys took strides twice his measurement. But nobody challenged Jimmy Beatty and got away with it. Most of his 127 pounds was heart.

Thompson Mann rates swimming's top accolade. A Carolina co-captain and one of the great competitors of the Atlantic Coast Conference, he made the Olympic team and set a world mark in the backstroke. It was a gold medal at Tokyo for the young Virginian who is now in medical school at Richmond.

Mann was one of five All-Americas on the Carolina team his senior year. His style was smooth and efficient. He improved steadily and strength gained the summer of the Olympics set him in business as one of the nations finest swimmers.

Another Tar Heel, now an assistant coach, was a gold medal winner at Tokyo. He is Larry Brown, a transplanted New Yorker who will be professor of freshman basketball this winter. Larry was the mastermind of the American cage team which swept aside all competition, defeating Russia in the finals.

Lacrosse is a relatively new sport on campus. Yet, Jeff Parker, who owns the physique of Davie Crockett, earned third team All-America honors last spring. He scored seven goals against Virginia last season.

When Vic Seixas took racquet in hand, he moved much in the same manner as Doug Fairbanks, the silent screen idol, with sword. Graceful, swift and poised, Seixas won Southern Conference honors as a Tar Heel, later was listed as the nation's No. 1 player. He took the big one at Wimbledon. A year ago he was honored by being named captain of America's Davis Cup team.

Like Seixas, Harvie Ward had the dash and flair of an actor. He wasn't rugged of stature, but when he slapped a golf ball it took off for the great beyond. Harvie won the National Amateur and the British Amateur. He had a following like the Beatles when he strolled the links.

BIG JIM BEATTY

William R. Kenan

He wasn't one of Carolina's greatest athletes, but no man has ever given more to his school in spirit and material than the late William Rand Kenan Jr. Good halfback as a footballer and a baseball player as well in the 1890's, Kenan went on to become an industrial tycoon. He always remembered his University.

Kenan Stadium, regarded by many as the nation's most picturesque football arena, is a gift from the former athlete. His interest and donations to Carolina's athletic program was immense. Death took Kenan at the age of 93 last summer.

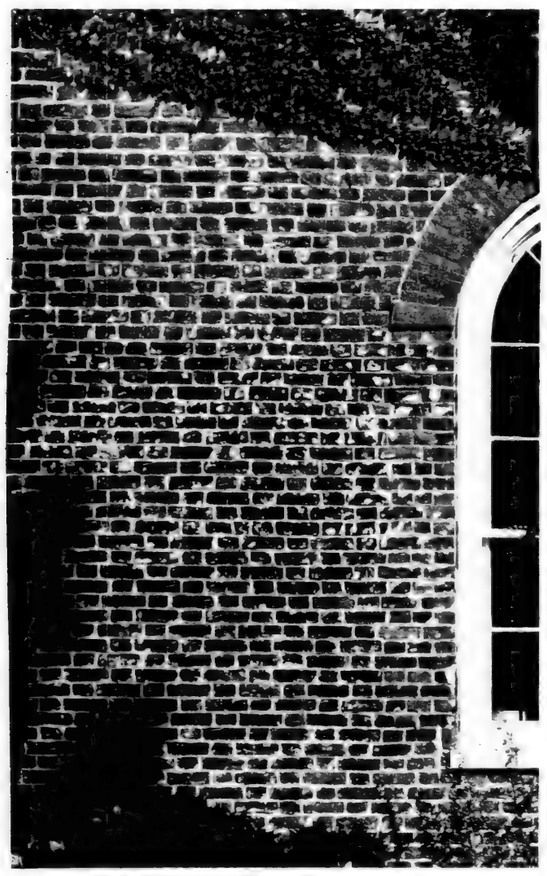
The names roll off the tongue easily. Justice, Weiner, Severin, Ramsey Potts, Archie Henderson, Pete Greene, Branch, McDonald, Dillon, Bill Haywood, Harrison Merrill, Burgess Whitehead, Rip Hawkins, Donnie Thomas, Barclay, Cunningham, Brennan, Willard, Carmichael, Quarles and a telephone directory more.

The school has never been without the big ones. The little ones were there, too, working diligently. There will be others to add to a list now long and respected. There is something about Carolina that demands athletic excellence. Tar Heel athletes can fill a sizeable section of any Who's Who in sports.

An Artists Palette With A Thousand Shades Of Tan

By JOHN V. ALLCOTT

That prevading tan of the old buildings in the vicinity of the Old Well is part of every freshman's first impression of the campus. And as each person through the years discovers the individual walks, doorways, wall, cracks, cornerstones, statues, and one-by-one other parts and aspects of the old campus, that tan color is always there. It mounts in ones mind as a special topic for wonder and meditation.



PERSON HALL TODAY, a detail from the wall which faces Old West. The wash has been removed revealing the 1795 wall laid in Flemish bond, a shimmering example of "colonial" brickwork.

All of these buildings are brick. Some are washed with a brown - tinted cement under which one can see the bricks. Others are stuccoed smooth, and are incised in "blocks" to suggest stone construction. The color varies from building to building. Here it is clear and strong; there, a layer of paint has flaked off to reveal a redder wash underneath.

Have you yet had the good fortune to leave your office late on an afternoon — after a rain — to see these buildings wet and orange in sunlight and purple in shadow?

The old campus was not always washed tan. Through the late 18th and early 19th century the buildings stood as red brick. The change from red to brown came in the 1840's as part of an early Victorian fashion which swept through American architecture of the times.

The new fashion was anti-colonial, tired of those overly-cheerful colonial buildings with their sparkling red brick and white mortar walls. It was associated with the romantic revival of classical temples, gothic and other historical styles of stone buildings. But, in direct language, the new taste was a taste for itself, for stucco and for plain surfaces. Not for structures made of stone placed on real stone, or for design developing from using brick as visible brick, but for stripped-down volumes in the magical substance of stucco.

The above ideas are covered in how-to-do-it books written for masons and builders of the time. For example, in "The Model Architect," 1852, by Samuel Sloane. Sloane, incidentally, was the designer of the Governor's Mansion in Raleigh, and of our Old Memorial Hall, now destroyed. In talking about fine homes Sloane expresses a taste which applies to public buildings as well:

"It now seems conceded on all hands that brick buildings are out of place in this country. Wooden buildings are too perishable, and stone is difficult to obtain. How then can we erect a handsome and pemant dwelling? The walls must be of brick, and the exterior stuccoed. Many have thought to introduce an improvement here by pointing the surface in imitation of stone. If a design for a stone building is executed in stucco, then this artifice must be resorted to; but if the building be for stucco, such an imitation destroys the original effect. The present tastes and economical views of the times, demands such imitations; but if architects were allowed to exercise their own taste, they would exclude all such absurdities.

Any Color Walls

The walls could be tinted any color that suggested itself to Victorian fancy, such as lavendar or green. The high-spirited Baptists at Brown University in 1834 covered the venerable colonial walls of University Hall with green

At Chapel Hill the change of color came within a thoroughgoing program of "improvements" in the 1840's and 50's. During this period the campus was transformed from its original, rude state to one of order and control.

Let us visit the campus on the eve of the transformation. The accompanying diagram shows the buildings which existed then. Two men were prominent in developments to come. David L. Swain, former Governor of North Carolina, and since 1836 the President of the University. And Professor Elisha Mitchell, "walking encyclopedia," chemist, mathematician, botanist, mineralogist, surveyor — the man whose name was given to the mountain whose height he measured, sometime bursar of the University, and Superintendent of buildings and grounds.

In 1836 Mitchell wrote in his journal, "The wall was commenced on the fourth of July." This is the famous old rock wall around the campus, made from stones which had lain strewn over the ground. Mitchell killed off campus disorder and vague boundaries with the same stones.

Campus Beautified

In 1838 the Trustees authorized the thinning of the trees around the campus and the planting of ornamental and shade trees. The following year they granted $3,000 for the repair of buildings and grounds. This grant and continuation grants in successive years enabled the University to plant trees and lay out walks. And of course the grant meant "go" on the projsame stones.

Campus Beautified

Mitchell inquired of U. S. Army Engineers, "What will be the cheapest and most durable way for improving the appearance of the exterior walls of the college buildings.

He was given information on experimental construction in cement for cisterns and even for "edifices!" He was instructed on stucco. And he was told about "wash to preserve brick walls, — this mode of covering decidedly preferable to repairing the mortar in the joints. But it is a matter of taste you know. This mode is the fashion of the day."

President Swain inquired of Paton, the man in charge of construction of the impressive stone Capitol building just being finished in Raleigh. Paton lived in a grand stone realm high above repair jobs and brick jobs; he relayed the inquiry to someone below. The reply to him read:

"Sir, you inquired on what mode was adopted in Philadelphia to improve the outside appearance of brick and stone buildings. This is done by giving it two coats of plastering after which it is trowelled smooth. Then it is struck out in blocks of the proper size, and the joints penciled. Finally the whole is sprinkled with a preparation that gives it the blue cast peculiar to granite which it resembles so nearly as to decieve the most practiced eye, exept on a close examination."

Paton's practiced eye must have turned stoney as he read these optimistic words. He sent the information along to President Swain with the caution, "Should you wash the fronts of the buildings in the way proposed without their being benefited they will lose their architectural character and be without beauty or expression."

No Stucco

Paton also gave President Swain an estimate of the cost of stuccoing, $1 per square yard. And it was probably this stiff price which caused the University to give up the idea of stucco in favor of simple wash. A few days later President Swain wrote to a friend, "We are about to change the dull aspect of the exterior of the college edifices by covering them with a preparation made of equal quantities of Roman cement and common unslaked lime, with the addition of one tenth of sulphuric acid to the quantity of water with which thehfennttttttthhn and it was a success. An important North Carolina newspaper, The Raleigh Register, took note of it in an article on commencement activities for 1841:

"Our University . . . the eye of the visitor cannot but be struck with the improvements which have been made in the external appearance of the University within the last three or four years. The dark colored walls of the buildings have been clad in a lighter livery, forming a tasteful contrast with the deep green of the surrounding foliage. The 'Campus' will soon be enclosed within a neat and substantial stone wall. Trees have been set out in various parts of the college area, and the venerable old grove has been so grubbed and trimmed and thinned, as to lose much of its rude forest garb. These improvements, however, altho' pleasing to the eye of everyone who remembers how long that lovely place lay in its native rudeness, do not convey to the heart half so much pleasure as is derived from witnessing the improved deportment of the young men of the Institution."

About five years later additional wash was required to cover new construction on the campus, the extensions of Old East and of Old West, with the great facades looking to Franklin Street. The designer was the distinguished American architect, Alexander Jackson Davis, who earlier had been a member of the firm which designed the Capitol in Raleigh.

Davis dreamed of covering the old and new parts of the buildings with great pilasters and stucco decorations. He had to suppress these grandiose ideas, but his final design was in terms of stucco. And he got "Mr. Gill, the stucco man" to ovver to come down to Chapel Hill and do the job for 50 cents a square yard, half the price which Paton had quoted earlier.

And a local bidder, Dabney Cosby, offered to do the work "in good stile such as is only to be seen in Pittsboro, for 40 cents a yard, and from here to Boston, I recken, at 50 cents." But the University could not yet venture into the luxury of stucco, and the new additions were merely washed.

The washing of the new parts of Old East and Old West mad the previously washed old parts look a little sad. A small matter you might think, but it was of great concern in 1847. This was the year of the Polk Commencement, when President Polk "revisited his Alma Mater after an absence of 29 years." Within an all - out hustle and bustle of preparations for the President and his suite the old parts were rewashed.

The next development, at long last, of course, was stucco. It arrived as encasement for a wonderful new ballroom, now become the Playmaker's Theater. Students and socially conscious alumni had been agitating for a ballroom "to promote gentility" for 15 years, and the Polk Commencement only pointed up the need for one.

Image Important

But public image was as important in those days as now, and how could the University dance and maintain its sober posture? Where there was a will there came a way. Davis designed a library, the book shelves around its walls to be covered by "muslin curtains (painted with flowers), . . . at library hours to be rolled up like window curtains," and at non - library hours to be rolled down again for the ball. The library had a "music gallery." On the exterior walls Davis got his stucco pilasters all around.

The next buildings erected on the campus, New East and New West, were also stucco. Their present charming patina is a by-product of drastic remodelling. They complete our group of tan old buildings; after them came the Civil War which stopped campus projects for 25 years.

The fashion for wash and stucco ran its course, and in time gave way to other enthusiasms. One of these has to be noted here: the return of colonial. Old University Hall at Brown University, for example, "for more than 70 years hidden under green stucco," was restored to colonial in 1905. And the brown wash was removed from some of our buildings, partially from South, and with determination from Person Hall. But today, alas, the original brick walls of these buildings are being devoured by yet another new fashion, — that for ivy.

To students who would like to find out something more about the old buildings, go out on the campus. Check the points we have mentioned, and you will be surprised at what other points you discover. A short, lively account of the old campus is found in "An Address on the History of the Buildings of the University," delivered by Kemp Battle in 1883, when he was President of the University. Copies of this pamphlet are in The Carolina Room at The Wilson Library, and in Art Library.

PERSON HALL IN 1919, showing wash and paint. Built as a chapel, Person was given arched windows instead of rectangular windows as on other campus buildings. The central door which faced the campus, and also a door which faced the campus, and also a door visible at right, have now become windows.

Ostrich Egg And Beechnut

By WILLIAM S. POWELL

From its earliest days the University has collected single specimens as well as whole collections of "things" which might be of interest to the intellectually curious. The pattern was set many years earlier by both English and continental universities so it is not surprising that a young American university in 1795 would establish a museum as one of its first acts after opening to students.

Donors came forward slowly at first. An ostrich egg was the earliest gift. A little later it was reported that the museum owned a porcupine skin, a petrified beechnut, a piece of asbestos, the incisors of a beaver, and specimens of Indian clothing. Off to a diversified start, the collection was soon increased by the addition of some stained glass from "Leon in old Spain." Copper coins from Rome were displayed near copper ornaments from an Indian site near Halifax, N. C.

About 1832 General Calvin Jones, a University trustee, donated his "museum of artificial and natural curiosities" when he was about to move to Tennessee. As late as 1907 Prof. Kemp P. Battle thought that some of Jones' curiosities might still be among the University's collections.

Prof. Elisha Mitchell once purchased for the University a "cabinet of minerals" from Vienna. It contained over 2,000 specimens from many parts of the world. The member of the American embassy staff in Vienna who helped to arrange the purchase was later rewarded with an honorary Master's degree from the University.

The University museum at one time was housed in the north end of the third floor of Old East, but after suffering from neglect during the Civil War and its aftermath it was scattered about the campus. Many of the objects were completely lost to the University.

During the 1940's Prof. Wallace Caldwell frequently expressed his own thoughts on the subject of a University museum. He believed that it would be an important aid to teaching, and he hoped that Battle - Vance - Pettigrew Dormitory might be converted into a museum which would be attractive not only to the students on campus but also to North Carolinians everywhere. He was particularly disturbed that an agricultural state such as this had done so little to preserve the implements of the farm.

There was, of course, no University museum then, and there is not one as such today. The University does have collections of various sorts scattered about the campus, and taken altogether they form a most respectable and interesting museum.

Snail Fossils

Located in various buildings, most of the collections are closely related to classroom teaching and research. Throughout the corridors of Mitchell Hall, for example, there are lighted display cases in which a variety of geological specimens are shown. Adequate labels, some of them in detail, explain the material. Specimens have been gathered from all over the world and, as might be expected, North Carolina is particularly well represented. Fossil clams, snails, and coral approximately eight million years old have been assembled from Old Dock, and cretaceous ammonite, which became extinct about sixty - five million years ago, are certain to stagger the imagination of the layman.

A current display in the lobby of Mitchell Hall contains rocks and minerals collected by University students during a field course at Mars Hill during the summer of 1964. Included are talc, muscovite, garnierite, quartz, corundum, feldspar, and vermiculite. These suggest the vast range and the wealth of minerals in the state. Many Tar Heels today are unaware of this potential, yet in 1767 the Wedgwood potters in England knew about it and sent to the mountains of North Carolina for some fine white clay to make medallions.

Specimens of Eocene Age fossils collected along the Atlantic and Gulf Coastal Plains are displayed along with geological specimens of red quartzite, red and black slate, and white marble. These have been assembled from various parts of the New World and from Japan, Hungary, England, the Island of Elba, Madagascar, and elsewhere.

An object of much interest in Mitchell Hall is the earthquake recorder operated by a seismeter in the basement. Records made during various earthquakes are displayed near the machine which is currently recording movements in the earth.

Throughout the halls on the various levels of the building interesting maps and color photographs are hung. Many of the photographs were made by members of the faculty on field trips throughout the world.

Wilson Hall next door is the home of the Zoology Department and contains displays of numerous specimens, living and mounted as well as preserved. There also are plastic scale models. Animals, birds, fish, reptiles, and insects are represented. A series of human embryos from one month to six and a half months may be seen. A balanced aquarium is in the entrance lobby near many of the display cases.

The collection of star fish and sand dollars here must be the envy of every child who has spent time at the beach searching for such treasurers. The interesting and colorful assortment of shells from all over the world contains the recently - adopted state shell, the Scotch Bonnet.

Trays of mounted butterflies and insects add color to the exhibition in the lobby of Wilson Hall. An extensive collection of birds eggs, made by Carter Dalton of High Point around the turn of the century when he was a boy, is typical of such collections made in those days. They vary in size from a giant ostrich egg down to the egg of the tiny ruby throated hummingbird. Sponges and the better known skeletons of various animals, including an assortment of skulls, add variety to the display.

Best Herbarium

Coker Hall, occupied by the Botany Department, houses the best, largest, and most complete herbarium of flowering plants of the southeast in any collection south of Washington. There are more than 260,500 mounted specimens. Examples collected by the pre-Civil War North Carolina botanist, Moses Ashley Curtis, are included. Others were assembled by Drs. W. C. Coker and H. R. Totten, W. W. Ashe, and T. G. Harbison. Plants collected for use in compiling "The Flora of the Carolinas," a recent publication of the Department, are now here.

The herbarium is predominately representative of the southeast, but the Botany Department participates in an exchange program with 72 institutions all over the world, including Kew Gardens in England, the "grandmother" of all such botanical collections. The University of North Carolina is the only institution in the Southeast collecting on a broad enough scale to carry on such an extensive exchange program.

The herbarium is used as a reference collection and for demonstrations in teaching. It also is used extensively on loan throughout the United States and occasionally even abroad. Students from Duke and North Carolina State use it regularly for research and for class projects.

The Coker Arboretum contains a collection of living native plants as well as a number of foreign specimens. It is valuable in teaching, research, and for its scenic value.

The new University Botanical Garden on the south side of the campus is now under construction. It will contain a collection of plants from this area as well as similar plants which grow elsewhere in the world. A greenhouse has been erected in the garden, and trails have been laid out.

A series of attractive displays in Person Hall, home of the Archaeology Laboratory, tells the story of the Indian in North Carolina through his early contact with the white man in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Using the very best of modern exhibition techniques and making particularly effective use of lighting, the displays contain authentic artifacts from Indian sites in the state. Informative labels, effective backgrounds, and "props," such as corn, burned wood, and straw are used to tell facts in a most interesting visual manner. Stone axes, arrowheads, pottery, skulls and skeletons, hollowed stones for grinding corn, and other effects and remains from the Indians are shown in many of the cases.

nauts are UNC alumni, since all of them have undergone training in Chapel Hill at the University's Morehead Planetarium.) Webb was also Under - secretary of State and the Director of the Budge in President Truman's administration. Two alumni have been Undersecretary of the Treasury, the late O. Max Gardner '06 and A. L. M. Wiggins '13, who resigned to become board chairman of the A.C.L. and L. & N. railroads.

Ambassadors, Too

Carolina alumni who have served as ambassadors include the late Robert W. Bingham '91 and O. Max Gardner '06, both appointed to be U. S. ambassador to the Court of St. James, as was Herschel V. Johnson '16, now living in Charlotte. Josephus Daniels '75 was ambassador to Mexico, Gilchrist B. Stockton '13 was minister to Austria, and Capus M. Waynick '11 represented the United States in Nicaragua and Colombia. The late John Motley Morehead '91 was U. S. minister to Sweden when he first saw the Zeiss planetarium instrument that he later bought there and shipped to the University for the planetarium building he gave it.

Morehead was one of the University's most generous benefactors, others being William R. Kenan, Jr., '94, John Sprunt Hill '89, William A. Whitaker '04, and James A. Gray '08, all now deceased.

Alumni have held many high positions in the judiciary, both on federal and state levels. At the time of his death in 1958, John J. Parker '07 of Charlotte was a senior federal judge, serving on the Circuit Court of Appeals. (He was an American judge in the celebrated war criminal trials at Nuremberg in Germany.) J. Spencer Bell '27, also of Charlotte, is now a 4th Circuit judge. Federal judges in both the Western and Eastern North Carolina district are alumni: Wilson Warlick '13 of Newton and Algernon L. Butler '28 of Clinton.

Many alumni have been chief justices of the North Carolina Supreme Court, including the incumbent, Emory B. Denny '18. Five of the court's six associate justices are alumni: R. Hunt Parker '12, William H. Bobbitt '21, Carlisle W. Higgins '12, Clifton L. Moore '22, and Susie Sharp '27. Only recently, William B. Rodman '10 retired from the Supreme Court.

Among North Carolina's present judges of the Superior Court are these alumni: William E. Anglin '29, Frank M. Armstrong '24, James H. Pou Bailey '40, William Y. Bickett '21, E. Maurice Braswell '50, Walter E. Brock '41, W. H. S. Burgwyn '08, Hugh B. Campbell '32, Leo Carr '18, Ed B. Clark '37, Francis O. Clarkson '16, J. William Copeland '37, Albert W. Cowper '32, Walter E. Crissman '26, James C. Farthing '35, George M. Fountain '36, P. C. Froneberger '23, Robert M. Gambill '34, Clarence W. Hall '26, Hamilton Hobgood '32, Howard H. Hubbard '27, W. A. Johnson '42, Harry C. Martin '42, Q. K. Nimocks, Jr., '21, E. S. (Junie) Peel, Jr., '44, F. Don Phillips '14, J. Will Pless, Jr., '17, H. L. Riddle, Jr., '36, Eugene B. Shaw '23, Henry L. Stevens, Jr., '17, and Hal Hammer Walker '30.

Judge J. Frank Huskins '32 is the administrator of North Carolina's new system of lower courts.

Alumni have served in considerable numbers in the General Assembly in Raleigh. Sixty-five of the 170 senators and representatives in the 1965 legislature were former students at the University at Chapel Hill. Twenty - eight served in the Senate and 37 in the House. Forty-two received degrees at the University.

Viewpoints Differ

As may easily be illustrated, the fact of being an alumnus does not insure unity of action or reaction. Diversity of opinion among alumni is often wide. This is often overlooked when the simple question is asked: "What do the alumni think?" For example, the University Class of 1916, which will celebrate its 50th anniversary reunion next June, includes in its membership not only UNC Chancellor Emeritus Robert B. House and the late Governor William B. Umstead but Robert H. W. Welch, founder of the John Birch Society, and Brigadier General Hugh B. Hester, retired Army career man who open - forum letters in North Carolina newspapers indicate that he is far to the left of the extreme rightish position ascribed to Classmate Welch.

How can one cite alumni as distinguished, famous, infamous, or notorious? Scanning lists of persons who hold or have held exalted elective or appointive positions, or by examining "Who's Who" and other criteria of excellency in men and women, may help in the compilation of a roster of former students who rightfully belong among those deisgnated as distinguished alumni.

The selection of such names is somewhat like choosing candidates for honorary degrees. Some are suggested by the position or office they hold; others are promoted by their special adovcates. After all, since Hinton James came to Chapel Hill as prospective Alumnus No. 1, he has been followed by more than 86,000 persons who became UNC alumni. The records of the Alumni Office list (as of Sept. 1, 1965) names of 88,269 alumni, including both graduates and drop-outs. Of this number, 14,205 are deceased. Thus, there are well over 70,000 living alumni — graduates and other ex - matriculates. Of these, the Alumni Office addresses mail to approximately 64,000, fifty-five per cent of whom live in North Carolina.

Class of '49

In the summer of 1965 a producer of national television programs called the Alumni Office and asked: "Do you have records about the University's Class of 1949 and do you know where its members are living and what they are doing?"

Given an affirmative answer to both questions, the caller requested the names of some well known members of the class. He desired a quick response. The office's list of '49 class members and their addresses was quickly scanned, and this reply was given: "Three 1949 graduates who might fit into your category are Andy Griffith, the stage, screen and television personality; Vic Seixas, former Davis Cup and Wimbleton tennis champion, and John Swainson, whom George Romney succeeded as Governor of Michigan."

The outcome of this telephone conversation was a decision by television executives to select the University at Chapel Hill's Class of 1949 as symbolic of American college and university graduates of 15 years ago for a one-hour, nationally - televised program to be carried next February in a new "March ot Time" series.

Producers and cameramen have been interviewing and shooting members of the Class of '49 of this production. They will make an additional two-day visit to North Carolina in preparing for the program, designed to dramatize the attitudes, opinions, and accomplishments of members of the college generation of 15 years ago.

In the field of education, it is natural that UNC alumni should be found in positions of leadership. Their names abound in the rosters of public school teachers and administrators, school board members, and college teachers and executives.

Among university and college presidents, for example, in addition to UNC's President William Friday (who is president of the American Council on Education, a post of great eminence), there are President Barnaby C. Kenney '36, Brown University; Chancellor Alexander Heard '38, Vanderbilt; Chancellor George L. Simpson, Jr., '41, of the University of Georgia System, and that system's vice chancellor, Dr. S. Walter Martin '42, who was for five years President of Emory University; President Gordon Blackwell '33, Furman; John V. Elmendorf '37, until recently Brown University vice president who has now become president of the experimental New College at Sarasota, Fla.; President William H. Plemmons '43, Appalachian; President Paul A. Reid '29, Western Carolina, and President Budd Smith '31, Wingate.

It is difficult to say how many alumni are ministers. Such a list would be long. Its leaders would include Bishop George M. Henry '31 of the Western North Carolina Episopal Diocese; William J. Gordon, Jr., '40, Bishop of Alaska, who attended his 25th class reunion last June in Chapel Hill, and Dr. Edward J. Pendergrass, Jr., '24 of Jackson, Miss., one of four new bishops recently elected by Methodist denomination.

Business Leaders

So many alumni are prominent in banking, manufacturing, insurance, transportation, advertising, merchandising and similar fields that it would be almost impossible to draw up a complete list of business leaders among sons of the University. Those in important banking position in North Carolina alone include Archie K. Davis '32, Wachovia Bank 1 Trust Co.: C. M. Vantory, Jr., '24, North Carolina National Bank: John P. Stedman '16, First Union National Bank: Fred L. Carr '30, Branch Banking & Trust Co., and Watts Hill '22, Central Bank & Trust Co., all of whom are board chairmen of their respective banking concerns. Lewis R. Holding '50 is president of the First-Citizens Bank & Trust Co., and Edwin Duncan '25 is president of the Northwestern Bank. The banks named in this paragraph are the seven largest in the state.

Out of state, Thomas C. Boushall '15 of Richmond was the founder and for many years president of the Bank of Virginia, of which he is now baord chairman. Hugh C. Lane '35 of Charleston, S. C., was president and is now board chairman of the South Carolina Citizens & South National Bank. Alumni are also important in banking circles in New York, Philadelphia, Atlanta, New Orleans, Chicago, and Los Angeles.

Howard Holderness '23 is president of the Jefferson Standard Life Insurance Co., and many other alumni hold high rank in the insurance world. J. Dewey Dorsett '22 of New York City is president of the American Insurance Association, the largest organization of its kind. Clarke Smith '22 is president of the Royal-Globe Insurance Group. Nathan Mobley '20 is a senior partner in the British firm of Chubb & Son, which has various American auxiliaries.

In the field of manufacutring the list of alumni is long and varied Bowman Gray '29 is board chairman of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., of which A. H. Galloway '20 is president. Ceasar Cone '28 is chairman of the Cone Mills Corporation, with Lewis S. Morris '36 as its president. J. C. Cowan '21 is vice chairman of Burlington Industries' board of directors.

Eugene T. Barwich '36 is president and sole owner of E. T. Barwick Mills, Inc., with headquarters in Chamblee, Ga., a floor covering manufacturing concern that has had a fabulous history of success. Top executives of the Lineberger textile and hosiery enterprises in Gaston County include Henry A. Lineberger '24, J. Harold Lineberger '26, and Joe W. Lineberger '33. Alumni textile leaders include Alex A. Shuford '25 and William B. Shuford '28 of Hickory and Richard T. Chatham '48, executive vice president of the Chatham Manufacutring Co.

Furniture Makers

Prominent alumni names in furniture manufacturing include Robert O. Huffman '13, chairman of Drexel Enterprises; G. Maurice Hill '25, Robert L. Connelly '36, Henry A. Foscue '26, Stephen A. White '32, Paul H. Broyhill '48, Donnell VanNoppen '21, Elliott S. Wood '30, and many others.

Alumni who are prominent in merchandising include John Bowles '38, president of Rexall Drug Co. (with 10,000 stores), and Irvin Belk '45 and Thomas M. Belk '48 of the Belk Stores. There are of course many more in this category.

Newspaper editors and columnists include an especially large number of Chapel Hill alumni: Vermont Royster '35, Pulitzer Prize winning editor of the Wall Street Journal; Clifton Damiel '33 and Tom Wicker '48 of the New York Times; Jonathan Daniels '21 of the Raleigh News & Observer; William D. Snider '41 of the Greensboro Daily News; Don C. Shoemaker '32 of the Miami Herald; Robert H. Mason '33 of the Norfolk Virginian - Pilot (of which Lenoir Chambers '14, a recent Pulitzer Prize winner, was editor); and other newspaper editorialists and writers. The late Robert Ruark '35 was probably the nation's most widely-read columnist.

Alumni who are the authors of books and magazine articles are the topic of another article in this paper. Suffice it here to express the opinion that the name of Thomas Wolfe '20, who was editor of The Daily Tar Heel, is more widely and enduringly known that that of any other UNC alumni of this century.

In closing, we offer to each of the University's 70,000 living alumni the three words Tom Wolfe immortalized: "Look Homeward, Angel."

Structure: How A College Carries Out Its Functions

By J. C. SITTERSON

Put in its simplest terms, the structure or organization of the University is, or certainly should be, designed to facilitate the most effective fulfillment of the University's functions. Coleridge expressed it well in these words: "What is organization but the connection of parts in and for a whole, so that each part is, at once, end and means?" The University's major functions are threefold: Teaching, research, and service to the state, nation, and world. The performance of these three functions rests with faculty, students, and business and service personnel.

It is easiest to understand organization and structure if one starts at the relationship of faculty member and student engaged in the study (through teaching, research, and learning of a particular subject or academic discipline. At this level, fields of knowledge are organized into departments (Art, English, Bacteriology, Chemistry, Surgery, Political Science, etc.), headed by a department chairman. Whereas small undergraduate colleges might have from 15 to 20 such departments, large and complex universities such as the University of North Carolina usually have more than forty or fifty.

These departments are in turn brought together into a number of schools and colleges, which are designed to provide for the student a given level and breadth of knowledge in the liberal arts, sciences, business, law, medicine, etc., which is signified by the awarding of a degree upon fulfillment of certain specified requirements. The University includes fourteen schools and colleges. Each school has its own faculty and is headed by a dean who is the principal educational and administrative officer of the school: the General College (F. M. Duffey), which is a basic two - year curriculum preparatory to studies at more specialized and advanced levels, the College of Arts and Sciences (F. M. Duffey), the Schools of Business Administration (M. W. Lee), Dentistry (J. C. Brauer), Education (John Otts, Journalism)W. A. (John Otts), Journalism (W.A. lips), Library Science (M. Kalp, Medicine (I. M. Taylor), Nursing (E. Kemble), Pharmacy (George Hager), Public Health (W. F. Mayes), Social Work (A. Keith-Lucas); and finally the Graduate School (C. H. Holman), which embraces post - baccalaureate studies in all fields.

Libraries Needed

Educational functions could not be effectively carried on without libraries, laboratories, theatres, studios, hospitals, clinics, etc. These in turn must be organized if they are to function effectively and they must also be brought into working relationships with the departments, schools, students and faculty they serve.

Acadmic life is only one part of a student's life on campus. Many aspects of admissions, housing, health care, financial support, and student discipline, etc., when thousands of students are involved, require specialized administrative units. Thus, those areas specifically concerned with student life — as distinct from his academic. work — are grouped together under a Dean of Student Affairs (C. O. Cathey).

Likewise, the University's extensive program of intecollegiate athletics is under the direction of a Director of Athletics (C. P. Erickson) and is closely coordinated with the campus intramural athletic programs.

The operation and maintenance of a large university plant (buildings and grounds) and the expenditure and accounting of many millions of dollars require a sizable business organization. In the case of the University at Chapel Hill, this also includes the operation of the public utilities of the campus and town (water, lights and telephone). All of these services form a separate division of the University under the direction of the Business Manager (J. A. Branch).

Other Services

The University also serves society in a variety of ways in addition to the formal instruction of students here on the campus. For example, the Extension Dvision conducts a wide variety of educational functions all over the state. The Institute of Government carries on training, teaching, and research activities for local and state officials and for

College, Town Grow Up Together

Old East And The Davie Poplar

By ROBERT B. HOUSE

The University and the Town of Chapel Hill have grown up together just like ivy and the Davie Poplar. When William Richardson Davie, the Father of the University, laid the cornerstone of Old East on October 12, 1793, that was the official beginning of the University campus. On that same day Davie went down to what is now Franklin Street and sold some lots. That was the official beginning of Chapel Hill.

But this hilltop had been a settled community for some time as settlements went in those days There was virgin forest still, but there was also second - growth forest too where trees had been cut for a clearing. The clearing had become an abandoned field, and the abandoned field had grown up in trees again. There were thriving farms, grist mills, and sawmills along Morgan Creek and Bowlin Creek. Morgan Creek was then the south boundary of the campus and Bowlin Creek was the north boundary. The Old East was on this campus. The lots sold were on this campus.

The whole campus and town were on land given to the University by citizens of the community around the hill. The University and the town were projects especially appealing to these citizens. They were far - sighted and canny then as they have been ever since. They knew that a University meant big business. That is why they put up more land, more money, and more brick, lumber, and labor than any other community in the fifteen - mile radius circling from Cyprett's Bridge in Chatham County. That bridge had been surveyed and legalized by the General Assembly as the geographical center of the state. It had also been enacted into law that the University was to be located within this fifteen - mile radius. Several communities in several counties qualified thus.

Transportation had much to do with the choice of the hill. Two of the main roads of the state right where the Carolina Inn now stands. One was north & south from Petersburg, Virginia, to Pittsboro, North Carolina. One was east and west from New Bern to Guilford Court House. Greensboro had not been founded then. In the course of time, the east and west road got straightened out as Franklin Street. But when Davie laid the cornerstone, that road ran between what is now Morehead Building and what is now Graham Memorial. It slanted across between what are now Person Hall and Old West, and continued downhill over what is no wPeabody. At the crossroads where the Carolina Inn now is, stood an old Chapel of the Established Church of England.

Town Name

The town already had a name in 1793. The old chapel at the crossroads was called New Hope Chapel. The hill was called New Hope Chapel Hill. Gradually the town became known as Chapel Hill. Now, with all deference and honor to the people in other communities who had a hand in the founding, let us concentrate on the area of Chapel Hill.

I emphasize here that the people I mention are not all by any means. I mention them because their families were in the Chapel Hill area in 1793 and their descendants have been a part of Chapel Hill ever since.

James Hogg was a leader in stimulating Orange County citizens to unite to make Chapel Hill the location. He brought many people from Scotland to North Carolina. Among them were the Strayhorns and the McCauleys. Hogg was a trustee of the University. His two sons, Walter and Gavin Alves, were trustees. Walter was secretary and also treasurer of the Board of Trustees. Gavin Alves also became secretary. James Hogg's daughter, Helen, became the second wife of Joseph Caldwell, the first President of the University.

Alexander Mebane was a trustee and the town of Mebane is named for him. Colonel John Hogan was a donor of land and brick. (He made the first brick to be used in University building.) George Daniel contracted for 350,000 additional brick. Both Hogan and Daniel used Orange County clay for these hand - made bricks. John Daniel made the necessary surveys and maps.

Masonic Help

The Eagle Lodge of Masons from Hillsborough assisted Davie in the Masonic ceremony of laying the cornerstone. They were led by Captain Absalom Tatom. A large number of Masons from Orange and Warren Counties also assisted. Davie was himself Grand Master of the Masonic Fraternity in North Carolina. There and then originated a custom that continued through many years among these "gentlemen of the vicinity." The Orange people would come in by horseback, buggy and wagon, bring their dinners, and enjoy the day on all public occasions. Some of these gentlemen were Benjamin Yeargin, Oregon Tenney, William Cain, ancestor of the later Professor, William Cain, and of his nephew, Professor Archibald Henderson.

Other donors of land were Edmund Jones, John and Solomon Morgan, John Daniel, James Craig, Christopher Barbee, Hardy Morgan, and Benjamin Yeargin. Also among the donors were the Hargraves. These were ancestors of William Rand Kenan, donor of Kenan Stadium.

In the valley of Bowlin Creek was a farm house where students could get meals three times a day. The future President of the United States, James K. Polk, and Judge William Horne Battle loved to go there. It must have proved of great service in 1795 when the University opened on February 15 with one professor and one student. The professor was Dr. David K. Ker of Fayetteville and the student was Hinton James of Burgaw. Old East had been ready a month exactly. The Governor and the Trustees had held exercises on January 15, 1795, declaring the University of North Carolina now open for business. But the weather was so bad Hinton James was delayed a month in reaching Chapel Hill. Nothing was ready for him except a room in Old East. I have not been able to find just where he took his meals or where Professor Ker got room and board. I surmise that both gentlemen found the house by Bowlin Creek or something like it. Soon a steward's hall was built about where New East now stands. But the steward's hall was an unsatisfactory venture and was soon abandoned.

Boarding House

There arose a prominent feature of the town of Chapel Hill, the old family style boarding house run by an enterprising lady. Famous boarding houses soon after the opening were Mrs. Tenney's, Mrs. McCauley's, Mrs. Scott's, Miss Mallet's and Miss Hilliard's. Miss Hilliard even built a special wing to her boarding house to serve President James K. Polk when he revisited his alma mater. Miss Mallet was in the ancestral line on his mother's side of Dr. William deBerniere MacNider, the most famous man ever born in Chapel Hill. His mother, universally called "Miss Sophie," was also a famous landlady as was Mrs. Julia Graves, the mother of Louis Graves.

Milk Habit

In the 1920's Dr. MacNider was offered a splendid and tempting position at Vanderbilt University. He decided, nevertheless, to stay in the Medical School at Chapel Hill. The way he expressed his decision was, "Well, my family has been buying milk from the Sparrows for three generations. It's too late for me to change my habits now." Dr. MacNider symbolizes the town of Chapel Hill as the producer of top notch university professors. The Sparrows professors. The Sparrows symbolize hundreds of Chapel Hill families that have kept the other enterprises running from the founding right on into today.

Town and faculty were together in a mutual enterprise of education, business, and society in general.

Stores, shops, livery stables, began to appear on Franklin Street. Residences began to go up to the east of the business block and over toward the site of New Hope Chapel soon to be replaced by the Chapel of the Cross. My present house at 501 E. Franklin Street and Kay Kyser's house at 504 E. Franklin, just across the street, are the only two left that are known to have been built before 1800. My house, owned by the University now, was built by Mr. Puckett, the village postmaster. Its most famous occupants were Professor James Phillips and his daughter, Cornelia Phillips Spencer, the great woman who helped Doctor Battle reopen the University in 1875 after it had been closed for five years by Reconstruction. In celebration she climbed the tower of South Building and rang the bell with her own hands, since the bell rope had rotted away. Her grandson, Phillips Russell, in his book, The Woman Who Rang the Bell, tells the story.

Kay Kyser's house was built by Professor Hooper, kinsman of the William Hooper who signed the Declaration of Independence. Thus do the village postmaster, famous professors and statesmen, typify town and gown along the oldest section of Franklin Street.

Another famous Phillips was Charles, the brother of James. He was a professor and was also a minister. For love of his Master, and for love of the people of Orange, he drove out eight miles to New Hope Presbyterian Church to preach every Sunday for fifty years and with no thought of any pay.

Building Churches

Building the churches of Chapel Hill was one of the first enterprises of town and gown. Without exception, I believe, each of the older churches in Chapel Hill began its meetings in University buildings and continued to use University buildings until the congregation grew large enough to build its own church building.

Following the building of churches came the cooperation of town and gown in developing the modern features of Chapel Hill. The first was the building of the University Railroad, a track from the Southern Railway to Chapel Hill in 1882. President Francis P. Venable of the University was so influential in persuading the Southern Railway to build this track that its terminal just outside of Chapel Hill on the west was called Venable in his honor. But a tremendous lumber business developed around this station from the forests of Orange. The place became a center for cedar wood and was in 1912 the largest center of the railraod cross - tie business in the world.

A native business genius, Tom Lloyd, built there a great cotton mill. His financial partner was Isaac Pritchard. Mr. Lloyd was a completely unlettered man. Sheriff S. W. Andrews, another native, said Mr. Lloyd could sign his name, and that was all by way of reading and writing that he knew. He is famous for his brains and character. Professor Horace Williams, an original in philosophy very smilar to Mr. Floyd as an original in business, said that Chapel Hill had three great expressions of its genius: The hills, the University, and Tom Lloyd's cotton mill.

Mr. Lloyd's mill was eventually absorbed in the larger business of General Julian S. Carr, another native of Chapel Hill. In his honor the town around the railroad station became the separately incorporated town of Carrboro. The Lloyds are a famous indigenous clan. One of them was Doctor Brack Lloyd, the most beloved general practitioner of medicine this area has ever known. The Lloyd community joins on to the Antioch community. From that came its great congressman, Carl Durham, the guide, philosopher and friend of everybody in Orange County. His station for many years was as a druggist in Eubank's Drug Company. Here he added to his personal brains and character the shrewd wit and common sense of Orange folk who came constantly to consult him: the Lloyds, the Crabtrees, the Nesbitts, the Sparrows, the Hogans, the Pendergrafts, the Pendergrasses and the Andrews clan in all its branches. To Carl also came everybody in the University from janitor to President. It was but a natural extension of his wisdom extracted from town and gown in Chapel Hill, to move out on the national and world level and become one of the most constructive statesmen in Washington.

Carl's immediate superior and elder in business was Clyde Eubanks, coming in from Chatham, but spending the great majority of his ninety - odd years in Chapel Hill as pharmacist, banker, town father, churchman and patriarch. Some call him "Doc." Some call him "Boss." "Doc" still drives around the town for himself, a beloved and truly spiritual power unsurpassed in the annals of

THE VILLAGE CALLED 'THE SOUTHERN PART OF HEAVEN'

Great Teachers From The Past

By JAMES L. GODFREY

Every generation of students has for itself some members of the faculty who stand out as great teachers; every university worth its salt has felt the formative influences of these matters upon its growth and character.

Their numbers are never clearly fixed nor their identities so sharply define that each student's list is identical with those of his classmates. But there are always some who appear with regularity and who enter unchallenged that company of the great who come to mind when one contemplates the vital personalities from which universities have drawn their educational

The University of North Carolina has always had a good share of these men. Among our colleagues today there are names mentioned in countless conversations as students measure the skill and integrity of the teachers provided them. Some have already, in student judgment, staked out a valid claim to be included among the great; others are being assayed but may be found gross metal despite a tendency to sparkle at

Time itself does a bit of sifting and perhaps the most dependable test will come in the future — say thirty years from now — when students look back and can add to their evaluations the advantages of maturity and experiences. With this in mind it may be of interest for us to look back and see who from the faculty of thirty years ago still hold the right to be considered great teachers. Such a view may not only identify some of them but also reveal something of the qualities that contributed to their enduring fame. Prudence, however, dictates the precaution that all living colleagues be left out of consideration. These are more properly the responsibility of someone 30 years from now.

With this in mind I asked a number of my colleagues to make suggestions. For this purpose I chose faculty members of the senior sort who know the past history of the University and who, in the majority of instances, had been students here and knew whereof they spoke. All were asked to make their suggestions solely on the basis of teaching.

Through their kindness I was able to get a list of former members of the faculty who were considered to be great teachers. It would be idle to claim that the list was complete or that all on it were of equal stature, but the list is representative and while the number of names could be increased, I do not think a single name could be stricken. Perhaps the best way to proceed would be to give the list and then by selecting particular individuals for comment, see if any conclusions can be drawn about them.

The men whose names were suggested to me were:

George R. Coffman
Robert D. W. Connor
Shirley Graves
Edwin Greenlaw
Joseph G. de R. Hamilton
Gustave Harrer
George Howe
Corriden Lyons
Andrew Patterson
James Royster
George C. Taylor
Maurice T. Van Hecke
Francis Venable
Henry Van P. Wilson
Harry Wolf
Erick Zimmerman

While the list was suggested only on the basis of teaching, anyone with the slightest knowledge of the University would recognize these men as formidable contenders most spots on the all-time faculty varsity.

From this list five may be selected for closer attention. While the selection is arbitrary, it would not be too much to say that the five are fairly representative and that their qualities and characteristics are not far different from the others.

Bob Connor, long a favorite of students in history and political science was a warm, direct and sincere person. His mind was as sharp as a briar and his tongue — when he wanted it to be and this fortunately was not often — not far behind. On the whole he had a great compassion for his fellowman and a generous understanding of and tolerance for the human comedy.

In the classroom, his passion was clarity He understood his materials and loved his subject and was determined that in their transmission to others, nothing would be lost through cloudiness or obscurity.

"Teaching Is An Art"

Of him, his colleague Hamilton said, "He seemed always aware that success in teaching, which to him was an art and never an artificial pedogogical science, depended upon prompt and understanding communication between the teacher's mind and that of the student. His method was simple and direct."

To now him and to hear him was a delight and one quickly accepted the fact that these qualities of the classroom armed him for other things. He was chairman of the History Department and along with Hamilton, the creator of its recent position in the professional world; he was the choice of many for the presidency of the University when it went to his colleague and department member, Frank Graham; and he was the first head of the National Archives. To roud it out he wrote widely and well in the history of North Carolina which he knew and loved as a son.

Scholarly Discipline

Gus Harrer in classics was said to be as "tough as pig iron" but he was also able to make you like it. He insisted upon scholarly discipline from his students but was always anxious to help with their difficulties. He did not ask of others what he was unwilling to do himself and mixed strong convictions with a realistic consideration of both the world of the student and of scholarship.

In appearance he was not unlike Connor. He also made a more notable contribution as Chairman of the Department of Classics while the confidence of his friends led to many committee assignments and University duties. Outside the classroom he held a respected position as a scholar.

Jim Royster was a North Carolinian who went to Wake Forest to be nurtured by two of its greatest teachers, Benjamin Sledd and William L. Poteat. By way of Chicago he came to the University in 1907 and remained, except for a sojourn at Texas, until his untimely death in 1930.

Where Connor was relaxed and lucid and Harrer rigid and demanding, Royster was the embodiment of energy and concentration. His was a brilliant intensity that made memorable his relationships with students and led them on in their dedicated search for learning. Yet he was "Very learning. Yet he was "very human" if very demanding.

His dynamism led him beyond the classroom and the scholar's retreat into administrative work where as Dean of the College of Liberal Arts he "endeared" himself to continuing generations of students by his regulation that a student may drop a course without an "F" only if he were passing at the time! More significant and characteristic of the teacher and scholar, however, was his pronouncement that "If we demand of the student adherence to duty, the severe responsbility rests upon us of giving him something to which he may intelligently and manfully apply himself."

"Froggie" Wilson

Of Henry Van P. ("Froggie") Wilson, Chancellor House wrote the day following his death: "All of us who studied under Dr. Wilson, who worked with him, or even knew him, had a profound reverence for his fearless, honest and skillful personality. We thought of him as a great teacher and we rejoiced in his distinction as a scholar. Above all, we enjoyed him. He loved Chapel Hill and the University. No one enjoyed more than he did the round of life among the faculty and students and was a sympathetic but shrewd observer of all they did."

For forty-seven years his inflexible demands shaped the students in his laboratory and brought them into an honest confrontation of the shoddy and praise of the meritorious left their impact upon the University and those who studied under him. The best never forgot him and continually praised him as one of the great of the faculty. He was at the same time departmental chairman and a practicing scholar.

Law Mentor

The last of the five is Maurice Van Hecke a professor and sometime dean of law. In a long career in Manning Hall "Van" was one of the true mentors of the law student. In equity, labor law, legal method and trusts he established himself as an authority and with clipped middle western tone he presided through the years over one of the interesting and fruitful classrooms of the campus.

He was a close reasoner, a man with a precise and tidy mind, a good legal craftsman, and a warm, understanding and sympathetic colleague and friend. He was as well Dean of Law for a long period and near the end of his career became president of the Association of American Law Schools.

These sketches are too brief to give much of the men selected but as I remember them and think of the others on the list who were so much like them certain qualities stand out. All were men of integrity and each served his discipline and his students with deep devotion. All spent the major portions of their careers at this University and learned to love it and to serve it and beyond the University the state itself.

Each had time for students and held before them a firm standard of achievement at the same time each extended to students a full measure of interest and understanding. Each had the qualities of mind, character, and personality that created confidence in faculty colleagues and each made important contributions to the life of the University outside the classroom.

Each moreover won his spurs and kept them bright in the competitive world of scholarship. All this is to say that they were able, cultured, and effective citizens of the academic world and in that sense truly great teachers. The University grew taller because they were here.

Carolina Serves The Community

By DWIGHT W. RHYNE

The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill has a tradition of extensive participation in the life of its community, the State of North Carolina. Special divisions, institutes, and other organized programs, as well as the regular schools and departments, have always attempted to respond to the needs of the State, particularly during periods of crisis and intensive change.

As a Faculty Committee on Extension stated in its report to Chancellor Aycock in February, 1958, "Knowledge must be assimilated, interpreted, and communicated to society. Universal knowledge is not a property to be hoarded by the privileged, buty by its nature, achieves fulfillment in union with mankind."

A short review of some of the highlights in the development of University Extension during the twentieth century will demonstrate the commitment of the University to carry out its long - standing mandate, re-affirmed by the North Carolina General Assembly in 1963:

". . . The University shall extend its influence and usefulness as far as possible to the persons of the State who are unable to avail themselves of its advantages as resident students . . . setting up the Bureau of Extension, organized the University Press in 1922 to publish scholarly works of members of the University faculty and others, and to extend them to other communities of scholars and to the general public. In his inaugural address in 1931, President Frank Porter Graham gave eloquent expression to the concept of University Extension that had emerged:

Carry The Truth

"It is the function of the state university not only to find its bits of truth and teach the truth gathered from scholars everywhere, but to carry the truth to the people that they may take it into their lives and help to make it prevail in the world of affairs. It is the ideal of the University Extension Division to make the resources of the universities, the discoveries of science, and the findings of the social scientists available for the people of the commonwealth. The members of the general faculty, the special library, special lectures, courses in class and by correspondence, bureaus, institutes, interscholastic activities involving athletics, debates, Latin, plays and playwriting, and, in an independent and far - reaching way, the general library and the Library School, all serve to carry or sent the University to the people.

"The state university comes from the people and should go out to the people. The intellectual life of the university should be quickened by contact and interchange with the people. They have a common destiny in the adventure of adventure of building a nobler commonwealth. The state university cannot, as the university of the people, be an institution of a class whether based on blood, money or intellectual background. The state university can never lose the common touch without treason to its own nature and without drying up the springs from which flows the living water of its own life."

In the years since the stirring words of President Graham, the University has developed several additional programs to relate the work of the faculty to the life, work and roles of the people of the State.

Institute of Government

In 1931, Professor albert Coates of the School of Law founded the Institute of Government to serve as a training, research, and service laboratory for public officials in North Carolina. From a small beginning in 1931, the Institute has become perhaps the largest agency of its type on a University campus in the country. The list of schools organized and taught by the staff on the Institute covers almost every conceivable type of governmental administration in the State. Research and publications emphasize the legal-administrative - financial aspects of government. The Institute staff responds whenever possible to frequent and varied requests from local communities in North Carolina for consultative and other services. The essential and unique work of the Institute of Government is recognized throughout the State and beyond as an oustanding contribution to good government in North Carolina.

The Bureau of Business Services and Research, established in 1945, designs and administers adult education programs for business executives on and off the campus. Over 1,200 business men and women enroll in some twenty programs each year. Its effective program is as broad as the business life of the State.

In 1953, the School of Business Administration organized a program of advanced study in management, the Executive Program, to assist in the development of senior management personnel. Over 300 North Carolina executives have been awarded certificates of successful completion of the Program. Graduates of the Program teach manage-when Governor Hoey proposed a dramatic tuition increase. Student government immediately mobilized the student body against the measure. Assistance was sought from other campuses. Letters were sent to legislators and to parents.

A student representative registered with the Secretary of State in Raleigh as an official lobbyist. Ultimately the student body president, Jim Joyner, appeared before the Joint Appropriations Committee and more than 1,000 students held a mass protest march through the Raleigh streets.

These were combined with those of friends of education across the State, and the movement was partially successful. The tuition increase was limited to out-of-state students, and the legislative appropriation for the University was raised above that recommended by the Appropriations Committee.

Racial Problems

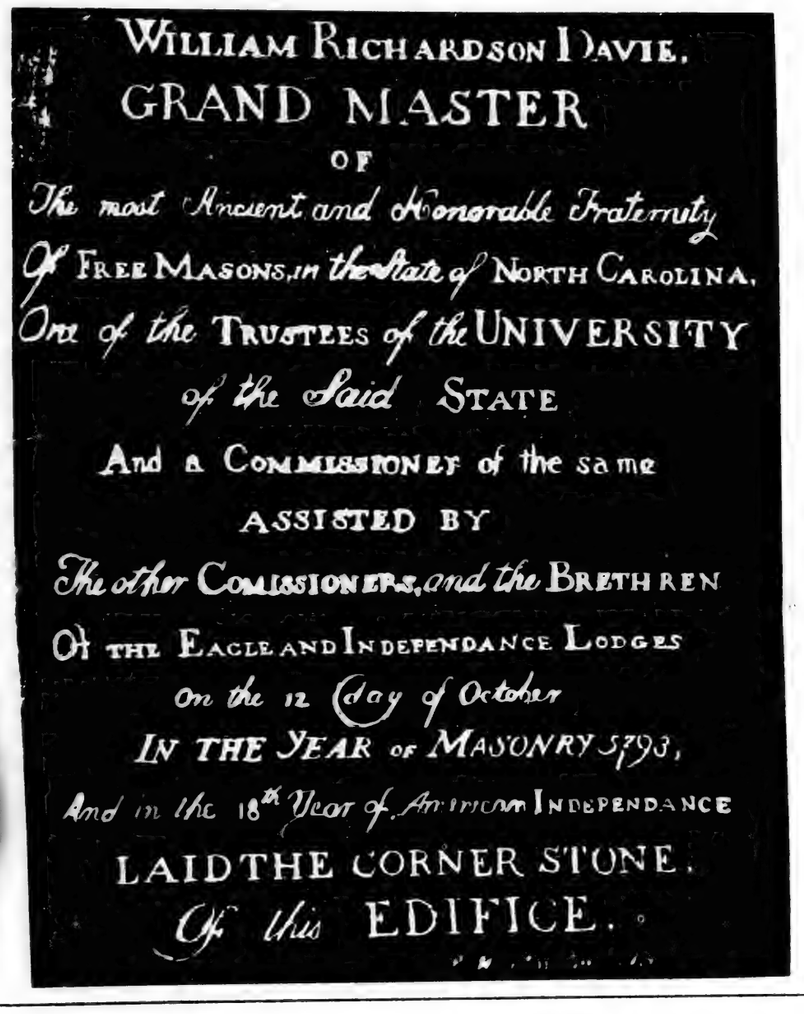
In the 1950's, the student government along with the other agencies of the University was faced with the challenge of the race question. In the early '50's, a controversy arose over whether newly admitted Negro students should be seated with their fellows or required to sit in a segregated section of Kenan Stadium. Some feared that stadium integration might cause outbrusts of violence. Student government officials maintained that all students should be treated alike and that the student judiciary would handle any instances of student misconduct.

Similar issues arose in the 1960's, when the growing number of Negro students at the University were not admitted to downtown Chapel Hill movie theatres and restaurants. In 1964 the Student Legislature urged all students to refrain from patronizing establishments which refused to give equal service to all students. In the following fall student government leaders were successful in persuading University officials to change a housing policy which discriminated against Negro students.

What, then, is student government at Chapel Hill? First, it is a system through which students select their own leaders and strive to maintain good order on the campus. Through the administration of the Campus Code and the Honor Code student government is vitally involved in teaching the importance of honorable character and personal responsibility.

It acts as well as an organized interest group to articulate the needs and concerns of students to faculty, administrators and to the State at large. This latter function has led it into areas of academic reform and civil rights. In its finest moments, because of its freedom from faculty or administrative control, the student government has been able to serve as the conscience of the entire student community.

STUDENT LEGISLATURE IN ACTION IN THE ASSEMBLY ROOM OF NEW EAST



Carolina: First State University

By HUGH T. LEFLER

With the advent of the American Revolution a new ideal in higher education became manifest — that of the state university — best exemplified by the University of Pennsylvania, the University of Georgia, the first state university to be chartered, and the University of North Carolina, the first to open its doors to student (1795). Since the University of Pennsylvania is no longer a state university, it is correct to say that the University of North Carolina is the oldest state university in the United States.

The origins of the University of North Carolina may be traced to Section 41 of the State Constitution of 1776, which declared that "all useful learning shall be duly encouraged, and promoted in one or more universities." Thirteen years elapsed before the state legislature carried out this mandate. A long and costly war, a weak and poverty - stricken state at its close, confusion in politics, and other factors explain this delay. Most of the Federalists favored the creation of a state university, but the Anti - Federalists, who usually controlled the General Assembly, opposed the idea.

In 1784, a bill introduced in the legislature by William Sharpe of Rowan County, to establish " a University in this State to be distinguished by the Title of the President and Trustees of the North Carolina University," was defeated. But the Federalists, led by William R. Davie, kept up the fight, and on December 11, 1789, the General Assembly meeting at Fayetteville chartered the University of North Carolina.

They declared that "in all well regulated governments, it is the indispensable duty of every Legislature to consult the Happiness of a rising generation and endeavour to fit them for an honorable discharge of the social duties of life, by paying the strictest attention to their education." This act "was carried through by the same men who had just procured the ratification of the Federal Constitution." Ten days later the legislature passed an act providing for the erection of buildings and for the support of the University through escheats and arrearages due the state.

Getting Funds

On oe the major problems was to get funds with which to build and operate a university. The act of incorporation provided for a building fund, but made no appropriation for it. So the trustees, chosen by the legislature — as they are now — were dependent upon private donations, student fees, sale of lands, and the escheats and arrearages due the state.

A number of donations were made by individuals, the largest being 20,000 acres of land by Benjamin Smith, 13,000 acres by Charles Gerrard, and $1,205 in cash by Thomas Person (the names of these donors are perpetuated in buildings on the present campus). Many smaller donations were made. Every person who subscribed ten pounds towards the University, to be paid within five years, was to be entitled to have one student educated at the University free from "any expense of tuition."

The results were diappointing. Total cash receipts from gifts in 1790 amounted to only $2,700. Consequently the Board of Trustees asked the legislature for a loan and received $10,000 — later converted into a gift, largely through Davie's efforts. This was the only legislative appropriation — if it can be called that — which the University received for almost a century. During the first fifty years of its history, sixty-nine per cent of the University's income was from escheats.

Another problem was the location of the new University. The charter provided for the "fixing on and purchasing a healthy and convenient situation which shall not be situated within five miles of the permanent seat of government, or any of the places of holding the courts of law or equity." After consideration of many possible sites, a Trustee committee, headed by Frederick Hargett, selected New Hope Chapel, now Chapel Hill, as the site for the University.

This place was about the geographic center of the state, where important north - south and east-west roads intersected. The name Chapel Hill is found in the report of the Board of Trustees for November, 1792, and a contemporary account gives the following description: "The seat of the University is on the summit of a very high ridge . . . The ridge appears to commence about half a mile directly east of the buildings where it rises abruptly several hundred feet; this peak is called Point - Prospect; the flat country spreads off below — like the ocean, giving an immense hemisphere, in which the eye seems to be lost in the extent of space."

So far no building had been completed.

Donations of 1,380 acres of land by local citizens were accepted by the Board of Trustees and the cornerstone of the first building, now known as Old East, was laid October 12, 1793, in a Masonic ceremony conducted by William R. Davie, then Grand Master of Masons in the state. Formal opening exercises of the new University were held on January 15, 1795, but the first student, Hinston James of Wilmington, did not arrive "on the hill" until February 12. For two weeks he was the student body. At the end of the term there were two professors and forty-one students. During the next term the student body numbered about one hundred.

The Trustees were given authority to appoint a president and professors and tutors, whom they could "remove for misbehaviour, inability, or neglect of duty." They could also "make all such laws and regulations for the government of the University and preservation of order and good morals therein as are usually made by such seminaries, and as to them may appear necessary: Provided the same are not contrary to the inalienable liberty of a citizen or to the laws of the State."

Instead of a president there was a "Presiding Professor," who was responsible for all teaching. He was a "Professor of Humanity," and received a salary of $300 a year and two-thirds of the tuition fees. Dr. David Ker (Kerr), a Presbyterian minister and teacher, was the first Presiding Professor. In 1804 Dr. Joseph Caldwell, also a Presbyterian leader, who had been a professor in the University for several years, was selected as its first president.

Davie's "Plan for Study" called for five professors, one of whom was to teach "Chemistry and the Philosophy of Medicine, Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts." It is noteworthy, in view of later developments, that "technical education" was not over looked. It is also interesting that Hinton James, the first student to enter the University, became an engineer.

The Presidents

The first four presidents of the University were Joseph Caldwell (1804-12; 1817-35); Robert H. Chapman (1812-16); David L. Swain (1835-68); and Solomon S. Pool (18-68-70). The University survived sectarian and political attacks, public apathy, and continued poverty. From the opening of the institution in 1795, the majority of the faculty and Board of Trustees were Federalists. Anti - Federalist and Republican (not to be confused with later Republican party) leaders and various anonymous wirters in the newspapers changed that "anti - Republican books" were being used. and that the institution had become a "hotbed of atheism" and a "breeder of deism," which "unsettled the minds of students" and caused them to lose their Republican principles.

So the legislature, which did not appropriate a penny for the support of the University, proceeded to "politicalize" it. The General Assembly of 1800 passed a law declaring that all previous laws to grant property to the University trustees were repealed and made void. William R. Davie, "Father of the University," called this law, which took away the two most dependable sources of University revenue.

ment Incorporated, a training program administered by the Bureau of Business Services and Research. The Exectutive Program makes a significant and continuing contribution to top management.

Health Affairs

All of the schools in the Division of Health Affairs have followed the leadership of the Medical School in establishing extension programs to assist in improving health services in North Carolina. A Faculty Committee of the Medical School stated in 1964:

". . . this Medical School has a responsibility to recognize and analyze the broad needs of the State for continuing medical education, and to seek, within the limitations of its resources of faculty and financial support, to provide the kinds of courses and other educational opportunities which, added to those from other sourcess, will meet the recognized needs of the physicians of the State."

In addition to offering a broad program of continuing medical education in Chapel Hill and in several communities of the State each year, the School of Medicine offers a series of two - way radio conferences over WUNC - FM with groups of physicians in local hospitals. The Schools of Dentistry, Pharmacy, Nursing, and Public Health offer extensive programs of continuing education on and off the campus.

The School of Social Work provides instruction for the child care staff of thirty-three children's institutions in eight southern states through the Group Child Care Project, and Institutes for executives and house parents of child - caring institutions are offered each summer. The School of Journalism cooperates with the North Carolina Press Association in organizing several institutes each year.

The School of Education organizes School Week for teachers and school administrators each summer, and offers a broad array of courses in Charlotte and Winston-Salem, as well as evening and Saturday classes in Chapel Hill. Continuing education has become an accepted practice in the professions, and the professional schools of the University are meeting the demand.

WUNC-TV

WUNC-TV, the University's educational television station, began broadcasting on January 8, 1955. The station is affiliated with the National Educational Television network. The transmitter in Chatham County reaches a potential audience of 38 of the State's population. With the completion of the new transmitter at Columbia, University of North Carolina Educational Television reaches an additional 350,000 persons. Program service includes credit courses at high school and college level and non - credit courses and offerings, including public affairs, general, cultural, and enrichment programs.

The primary function of the University Extension Division is to administer the University's program of credit and non - credit instruction to qualified adult part - time students. The credit program consists of regular University courses offered by members of the faculty through correspondence and television and in classes on and off the campus at times and places convenient to adults. The non - credit program includes conferences, institutes, short courses, and reading and discussion courses offered in Chapel Hill and in communities throughout the State by University schools and departments.

In addition, the Division provides certain educational services to the public schools, and to organizations and agencies engaged in adult education activities. The specific objectives of the Division are: (1) to offer graduate and under-graduate credit courses taught by regular University faculty members to qualified non-campus adult students, maintaining the same standards of scholarship characteristic of the resident programs of instruction; (2) to relate the University to the life, work, and roles of our adult population through a broad program of non - credit residential and community adult education; and (3) to expand the boundaries of knowledge through research in the field of adult education.

The current educational revolution has sounded a call to adult learning that rings clearly across the State from the Smokies to Hatteras. Overtones are in accord with the expanding emphasis on education for the youth in our society. The form and balance of a total approach to education are necessary to the development of our most precious resource — the minds of our people. The University at Chapel Hill has responded forcefully to the appeal of its community, the State of North Carolina.

It's A Long, Long Trail Of Prize-Winning Books

WALTER SPEARMAN

If all the books written by former University of North Carolina students were laid end to end, it's hard to say how far they would reach between here and Durham, but they would make a sizable library of prize - winning novels, best - sellers and sources of movies and television shows. Artists, musicians and actors have also achieved national reputations.

Most famous of the writing Tar Heels is probably Thomas Wolfe, from "Look Homeward, Angel" to "You Can't Go Home Again"; and as many books have been written about him as he wrote himself, including Alumnus Richard Walser's "The Enigma of Thomas Wolfe."

Paul Green's writing has in recent years been focused on such outdoor dramas as "The Common Glory," but he is equally well known as playwright, novelist and short story writer. Two of his fellow professors at Carolina, Thomas Patterson and Kermit Hunter, have also written for the out-door drama.

Phillips Russell, who taught creative writing at UNC for years, is himself an author of note, from "Benjamin Franklin: First Civilized American" to "The Woman Who Rang the Bell." He currently writes for the state papers on historical subjects.

The late Robert Ruark, famous as a syndicated columnist and for such novels as "Poor No More" and "Something of Value," has a new posthumous novel, "The Honey Badger," appearing this fall. Both Ruark and Thomas Wolfe used the Chapel Hill campus for the locale of some of their fiction.

Walker Percy won the National Book Award for his novel, "The Moviegoers." Two Chapel Hill students went on to win the coveted Harper Prize for their first novels, Max Steele for "Debby" and Richard McKenna for "The Sand Pebbles," which was also published in the Saturday Evening Post and was a Book of the Month selection.

Classic about South

One of the classic books about the South is "Southern Accent" by William T. Polk, who also wrote short stories and editorials. A long series of books has come from Jonathan Daniels, editor of the Raleigh News and Observer, his latest a book about crusading editors called "They will Be Heard." Joseph Morrison of the School of Journalism has written a book about the late Josephus Daniels and is working on a biography of W. J. Cash.

Legette Blythe has written twenty or more books, some of them with Biblical backgrounds, some biographies of North Carolinians and one about Thomas Wolfe's family. Chancellor Emeritus Robert Burton House is author of a volume of sketches of Eastern Carolina and one about old days in Chapel Hill, "The Light That Shines."

Burke Davis is one of the most prolific of the Carolina writers — from an early novel, "Whisper My Name," through biographies of Robert E. Lee and Stonewall Jackson, to his latest 1965 novel, "The Summer Land." John Harden, now heading a public relations firm, gathered together old North Carolina stories in "The Devil's Tramping Ground" and "Tar Heel Ghosts." John Ehle has written both fiction and non-fiction ("The Land Breakers" and "The Free Men" are his most recent) and for radio and television as well, and served as Governor Terry Sanford's educational and cultural advisor.

Bernice Kelly Harris, who studied playwriting with "Prof" Koch, has written a long series of successful plays and a number of novels about life in Eastern Carolina. Ernest Frankel wrote a fascinating novel about the McCarthy era, "Tongue of Fire," and a vivid account of the Korean War, "Band of Brothers." David Stick, who sells real estate and old books down on the Carolina coast, is author of "Graveyard of the Atlantic" and "Fabulous Dare."

Richard Walser, who teaches English at North Carolina State University, has brought back from obscurity a number of early Carolina writers by re-editing their books and has also edited such valuable volumes as "North Carolina in the Short Story," "North Carolina Poetry" and "The North Carolina Miscellany." Alexander Heard, former dean of the UNC graduate school, is author of "A Two - Party South?" and "The Costs of Democracy."

Very recent books from UNC alumni include Bob Smith's study of the school situation in Prince Edward County, Virginia, "They Closed Their Schools"; John Foster West's novel of pioneer North Carolina, "Time Was"; Truman Moore's study of migrant laborers, "The Slaves We Rent"; and Ben Hall's account of early motion picture theaters, "The Best Remaining Seats." Murray McCain is the author of two delightful small volumes, "Books!" and "Writing!"

Some other Carolina books include Foster Fitz - Simons' "Bright Leaf," which was made into a movie with Gary Cooper and Patricia Neal; Robert Marshall's "Little Squire Jim," based on Carolina folklore; Chesley Baity's "Americans Before Columbus" and "Man Is a Weaver"; Hoke Norris' "All the Kingdoms of Earth"; Daphne Athas' "The Weather of the Heart" and "The Fourth World." Frank Guess has written an interpretive history of South Carolina and William Woods a series of novels. William Hardy is author of several detective novels.

Writers Colony

Closely tied in with UNC writers have been members of the Chapel Hill writers colony, which through the years has included such literary figures as Betty Smith, James Street, James Saxon Childers, Manly Wade Wellman, Ina Forbus, Adeline McCall, Jessie Rehder, Dorothy Koch, Mac Hyman and Wilbur Daniel Steele.

Chapel Hill. The Strowds, the Pritchards, the Wilsons in several branches, the Mannings, the Mangums, are by inheritance or early coming here, bone of the bone and flesh of the flesh of town and gown in Chapel Hill.

Utilities

A tremendous contribution of the University to the town has been in the field of modern utilities and services. The University had to develop these to care for the students. They are the telephone, the water plant, the electric light and power system, the central heating plant, the first sewage system and sewage disposal system, and the laundry. As these developed they were extended to the town. The town got these facilities much earlier this way than it could ever have done on its own.

To this day the University owns and operates the telephone, electric light and power, and such central heating as is used by churches and other town buildings. The town reciprocated with police and fire protection. As the town has grown there has been developed an adjustable formula for mutual sharing in expense where University and town coincide in these necessary facilities and services.

Student Dining

The University, as we pointed out earlier, set out with a dining service and had to abandon it. But the University has never been able to relinquish its responsibility for seeing that dining service is always available. In the short period when it seemed that town eating places were to supplant the University's, the University has had to supervise and often quietly to subsidize town eating places. Since early in the 1930's the University has been carrying the main load of student feeding under strict legal requirements to protect the private eating business. The several dining halls of the University (including the Carolina Inn, the Monogram Club, Lenoir Hall and new dining places under construction) all now seem fixed in the structure of things. At the same time there have grown up a fine array of interesting and excellent private restaurants.

There has been an interesting history of merchandizing between town and gown. The old town merchants shine out as fine characters, but not as aggressive merchants. The most famous of all was the redoubtable Doctor A. A. Kluttz. To this day I do not know what the initials A. A. stand for, so deeply is our nickname for him fixed in my mind. We called him "Doctor Adam Applejack Kluttz." He ran a general emporium. And his store was our bookstore. But Doctor Kluttz seemed to regard his business as an adjunct to his calm, humorous way of life. A thousand stories are told about his cavalier attitude toward his business. One day Doctor Kluttz, it is said, was engrossed in a game of checkers with a friend in the back of the store. A customer came in, looked around, and seemed very eager to be waited on.

"There's a customer up there" said the friend.

"Sh-h-h!" whispered Doctor Kluttz, "maybe he'll go away."

Doctor Kluttz did well, nevertheless, and the Kluttz Building stands today as a monument to him. But everybody knew that the power in the business was the equally redoubtable character, Mrs. Kluttz, known as "The Duchess."

She ran one of the finest boarding places in Chapel Hill and developed a beautiful house and garden. She was one of the most beloved and hospitable hostesses in the history of Chapel Hill. The original owner of her home was Samuel L. Phillips, brother of James Phillips. The property is owned today by her niece Sudie Coenen and her husband, Professor Fred Coenen. A delightful little cottage in the yard is known as "Mr. Sam Phillips' Law Office."

Patterson Building

A monument to the old day is the name H. H. Patterson, still legible on the building, housing, Kemp's record store and Courts' Drug Store. It was the choice grocery store in Mr. Patterson's day. The story is told that once a popular brand of cereal appeared on the Patterson shelves. It was eagerly snapped up by the customers, who came back for more.

"We have quit selling that" was the response. "It was too hard to keep it in stock."

Other famous stores were Tankersly's, Bob Eubanks', and McAuley's. All were conservative. With the mud and dust roads it was hard to keep fresh and up-to-date stocks. Chapel Hill was known in those days as distinctly a second - rate market and people who wanted choice wares looked for them in Durham and Raleigh.

As a result the University developed the Book Exchange and ventured in that on many forms of merchandize. But as population increased. Chapel Hill developed up-to-date marketing downtown. In the 1930's the competition had to be regulated by law. That is the wholesome situation that prevails today. Chapel Hill is now a first-rate market.

Davie Poplar

I began this story with the Davie Poplar and the ivy as a symbol of town and University growing together. That is true today. The town of Chapel Hill and the University grow together. But there is a parable in this symbol. A few years ago the old tree and the ivy both had to be pruned back to get rid of dead wood and to improve relations in tree and vine.

Chapel Hill is growing from a town to a city able to stand more on its own. It is forced by expansion to incorporate more and more areas and to service them on its own. There is a growing necessity for distinction in business and town administration between town and University. In the older day the University owned the major portion of Chapel Hill and as a result kept much of the town area from contributing by way of property taxes. Today the University is far from being the largest holder of property. The town is developing an aggregate value far greater than that of the University's properties.

The University is still the largest industry in the area, the largest employer, the greatest stimulation of business. But it is no longer the only one in these fields. New industries, new businesses are arising every day. The Chapel Hill - Carrboro Chamber of Commerce is representative of an enormous variety of businesses. So is the Chapel Hill-Carrboro Merchants Association. Carrboro still maintains its separate corporate status. But the hyphen in Chapel Hill-Carrboro organizations indicates a community for transcending old Chapel Hill and old Carrboro.

The new urban development embraces them both. When I entered the University fifty-three years ago, the radius from a central point between the two towns did not exceed a mile, and that only along the line of Franklin Street. Now the radius exceeds fifteen miles. It is not all urbanized, but it is becoming so. The same telephone, electric power and light facilities are available. Even water and sewage facilities are being extended further and further from the central point.

History has reversed itself in the movement. In 1793 the country folk came in and played the major part in actually building the University and the town. Now the University and the town are going out and urbanizing the countryside. In 1915 I walked out three miles to Orange Church and eight miles to New Hope Church. They were two purely rural churches. Now they are Chapel Hill - Carrboro Churches closely tied in with the church life of Chapel Hill - Carrboro. The same is true of Damascus and Bethel, Union Grove, Antioch, Ephesus, and Mount Moriah as examples among many mixed congregations of the original country members and incomers from Chapel Hill - Carrboro.

So rapidly is the urban community growing that the problem of wholesome planning, of industrial location, of land and water use, is a major town and country problem today. In 1912 we looked from Chapel Hill on a scene of forest and field beauty. Today we look from many hills on such scenes, if only we will preserve them.

Opposite to this point I have reserved until now one of the major elements in the choice of Chapel Hill as the site of the University in 1793 — namely its beauty. We had there what seemed to be unspoilable in its wild abundance. In 1965 we are learning that neither town nor country is unspoilable.

At present it is a wonderful area. I speak from recent experience of a hobby I have now of almost daily drives along the highways and by-ways of Orange and adjoining counties. I know more about where I have been living for forty years than I ever knew before. It makes me rejoice and it makes me think.

In this story I have neglected, except by representative items, the great services of people from every county in the state in building the University and the town. I have neglected, except by silent appreciation, the faculty and student citizens of the town as well as members of the University. I have emphasized the people of Orange County by a few among many names. But here in these people in this area with which they have been identified since before there was a University or a town, is a concrete picture of what University and town have most at heart. That is the native qualities of brains and character in this most central area of the Old North State.

a "Gothic law," conceived by "Gothic ignorance and political fanaticism."

The trustees challenged the law by bringing suit to recover some land which had escheated to the University before the passage of the 1800 law. In this case, University v. Foy, the North Carolina Court of Conference (predecessor of the State Supreme Court) held that the legislature could not deprive the University of its means of support, nor "deprive the institution of funds already vested and refuse to make any additional appropriations."

The next General Assembly refused to repeal the "Gothic law" of 1800 or to make any appropriation, though it authorized the University to hold a lottery. In 1804 an attempt to restore escheats failed, causing Davie to compalin that "friends of science in other states regard the people of North Carolina as a short of Semi-Barbarian." The next year escheats were restored to the University.

University Problems

The University continued to have its problems. It was condemned as a center of aristocracy and conservatism by some and as a center of radicalism and agnosticism by others. It was criticized on th one hand for the severity of its discipline and, on the other, for its laxity and improper student conduct, and it was damned by some Republican leaders as a "school for the rich."

It began its slow emergence from obscurity as it strengthened its faculty and liberlized its currciculum. After 1815 more emphasis was placed on natural sciences. Denison Olmsted in 1824 and Elisha Mitchell in 1827 published reports of a state geological survey — among the earliest in the nation. A new era began in 1835 with the sweeping revision of the state Constitution and the election of former Governor David L. Swain as president.

Swain popularized the institution, built up the enrollment from 104 in 1835 to 460 in 1858 (second largest in the nation), added law, modern languages, and agricultural chemistry to the curriculum and made the University pre-eminently a training school for public service. From 1814, when a University alumnus first became governor, until 1965, thirty-one of the forty - nine governors of North Carolina had studied at Chapel Hill.

Reconstruction Days

With most of its faculty and students away in Confederate military service, the University remained open through the Civil War (1861-65) and for five years of the general economic ruin and partisan bitterness of Reconstruction. The state Constitution of 1868 merged the University with the public school system and the Republican Board of Trustees removed Swain from the presidency and selected a new president, the Reverend Solomon S. Pool of Pasquotank County, and a new faculty. Lack of public confidence, financial support, and students closed the University in 1870. A student expressed it vividly when he wrote on a classroom blackboard: "Today this University busted and went to hell."

The capture of state political control by the Conservatives (Democrats) paved the way for a constitutional amendment in 1873 restoring the government of the University to a Board of Teustees responded to the appeal of alumni and friends, and Mrs. Cornelia Phillips Sencer personally rang the long-stilled campus bell to announce the reopening in 1875, with Carles Phillips, chairman of the faculty, as presiding officer.

The fifth, sixth, and seventh presidents of the University were Kemp P. Battle (18-76-91), George T. Winston (1891-96), and Edwin A. Alderman (1896-1900).

In regaining faculty strength and student enrollment before the end of the century, the University displayed remarkable vitality. Even in these years of adversity it pioneered in many ways. "The first summer school in the United States under the auspices of a college or university" was held here in 1877. Medical and pharmaceutical studies were introduced in 1879. M. A. and Ph. D. degrees were awarded as early as 1883. The Elisha Mitchell Scientific Society was founded the same year and the Philological Club ten years later.

Courses in education were intorduced as early as 1885. The first women students were admitted in 1897. Very few buildings were constructed from 1875 to 1900, but Carr was completed in 1900 and Alumni and Smith in 1900. At the end of the century student enrollment was 512 — not much more than it had been in 1858.

Under the administration of Francis P. Venable (1900-1914), the University's financial condition improved, the physical plant was greatly increased, athletics were encouraged, creative scholarship was required of the faculty, graduate and professional schools increased and improved in quality, and some of the institution's departments achieved national distinction.

The brief administration of the ninth president, Edward Kidder Graham (1914-18) was notable for the University's service to the state at large, increased resources for administrative and building purposes, and a strengthening of student morale and honor standards. The tenth President, Harry W. Chase (1919-30) guided the University through one of its greatest eras of physicial expansion, and during this period the University achieved a national and international reputation for high standards of scholarship and freedom in research and writing.

The Graduate School, which had been established in 1903, was reorganized in 1920; the University was elected to membership in the Association of American Universities, and the University of North Carolina Press was incorporated in 1922. The Institute of Social Research was organized two years later. The School of Public Welfare was established in 1920; it was reorganized as the School of Social Work in 1950. Productions in dramatic art, offered in the English Department since 1918, had won national recognition for the dedicated their theatre in 1925. The Department of Music, organized in 1919, developed rapidly and the present Hill Hall of Music was dedicated in 1930.

Under the eleventh president of the University, Frank Porter Graham (1930-49), the University continued to make progress. Graham was elected president of the consolidated "University of North Carolina" in 1932. The second and third presidents of the consolidated University have been Gordon Gray (1950-55) and William C. Friday (1956-). Administrative heads of the University at Chapel Hill have been Robert B. House (Dean of Administration, 1934-45; Chancellor, 1945-57), William B. Aycock (Chancellor, 1957-64), and Paul Frederick Sharp (Chancellor, 1964-).

The period since 1931 has witnessed many changes in the "old University" at Chapel Hill. The tremendous expansion of the physical plant, the addition of new schools and departments, and the increase of student enrollment from only a few thousand to more than 12,000, are only a few of the obvious changes.

Among the schools or departments added at Chapel Hill during this period were: General College (1935), Public Health (1936), and the Communications Center (1945), Regional Planning (1946), Radio (1947), Religion (1947), and Astronomy (1950) in connection with the $3,000,000 Morehead Building and Planetarium (the only Zeiss planetarium on a college campus) which was completed in 1949.

The Institute of Government, which had already achieved national distinction, became a part of the University in 1942; the School of Education, discontinued in 1933, was reinstituted in 1948. The Dvivision of Health Affairs, which includes the Schools of Medicine, Public Health, Nursing, Pharmacy, and Dentistry was organized and Memorial Hospital was built and put into operation. In 1950 a School of Journalism was established, and the School of Commerce became the School of Business Administration.

By 1965, the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill had come to be one of the largest state universities in the South. But what is more important, it was considered the best state university in the South. Virginius Dabney, in a recent article in Harpers, ranks "Carolina" among the five top universities in the South.

from Betty Smith's "A Tree Grows in Brooklyn" and "Joy in the Morning" and from James Streets "Tap Roots" and "Nothing Sacred." UNC's recent Writers - in - Residence, John Knowles and Reynolds Price, both have movies in the making from Knowles' "A Separate Peace" and Price's "A Long and Happy Life." The current Writer-in-Residence, Alumnus Leon Rooke, had a story in the recent "Best Short Stories of the Year."

UNC poets would include Lawrence Ferlinghetti, now a well established poet and bookman in San Francisco; Hayden Carruth, former editor of Poetry magazine and author of "The Crow and the Heart" and "Appendix A"; and Charles Edward Eaton, poet and short story writer. Fran Borden Hanes wrote a novel in poetry, "Abel Anders," as well as several prose novels.

Three Pulitzer Prizes have come to UNC writers: to Paul Green for his play, "In Abraham's Bosom"; to Horace Carter (former Daily Tar Heel editor) for his editorials against the Ku Klux Klan in 1953; and to Vermont Connecticut Royster for his by-no-means-"leftist" editorials in the Wall Street Journal. Both the late Cecil Prince of The Charlotte News and Sylvan Meyer of the Gainesville, Ga., Times won Sigma Delta Chi awards for their superior editorials.

The goal of most newspaper writers is to get on the New York Times — and five former UNC writing students are there now: E. C. Daniel is managing editor of The Times as well as husband of Margaret Truman. Tom Wicker is head of the Washington Bureau of The Times, as well as author of numerous books ("The Kingpin," "The Judgment," "The Devil Must") and articles in the New York Times Magazine and Esquire. Also on The Times are Gene Roberts, Evert Clark and Fred Powledge (another Daily Tar Heel editor) — and Powledge has had articles in two recent issues of Esquire magazine.

Many of today's top American newsmen got their start at UNC working with the late O. J. "Skipper" Coffin, head of the Journalism Department, who, by the way, under the name of "Skipper Henry" is one of the leading characters in Robert Ruark's latest novel, "The Honey Badger." Among the Coffin products are Don Shoemaker, editor of the Miami Herlad; Bob Mason, editor of the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot; William Snider, editor, and Chuck Hauser, managing editor, of the Greensboro Daily News; Charles Gilmore, editor of the Toledo, Ohio, Times; W. S. Harrison, an editor of the Toledo Blade; Julian Scheer, top public relations man for NASA and author of a popular children's book, "Rain Makes Applesauce"; Ed Rankin, head of the N. C. Department of Administration and being mentioned these days as a possible candidate for Governor; and Roy Thompson, star reporter for the Winston-Salem Journal.

Around The World

UNC alumni in the field of journalism are ranging widely around the world. Louis Kraar, co - editor of the Tar Heel with Ed Yoder, left the Wall Street Journal for Time magazine and is now covering the Pakistan side of the India - Pakistan trouble, after opening up the Time bureau in Bangkok. With the USIS William Green has served in South Africa, Holley Mack Bell is now in Santiago, Chile, and Mohammed Reyazuddin in New Delhi. Sam Summerlin has served with the Associated Press in Korea, Cuba and Buenos Aires and now heads the AP bureau in New Orleans. Morris Rosengerg is with the AP in Mexico City.

James Daniel is a roving editor for Reader's Digest; Mike Mathers is assistant to the vice - president of Time, Inc.; Tom Wright is vice-president for media at Leon Burnett advertising agency in Chicago; Walter Schruntek is editor of Chain Store Age; Bernard Weiss is managing editor of Business Management Magazine. Rolfe Neill is assistant to the publisher of the New York Daily News. Don Becker is a news editor for U. S. News and World Report. Karl Bishopric, Jr. heads a $7 million advertising agency in Miami, Fla. Ed Yoder who writes for Saturday Review and The Atlantic, has a chapter in the recent book, "The South Today."

Writers, of course, are not the only artists who now represent the University out in the world.

One of the best-known alumni from the Art Department is Ed Higgins, a New York sculptor who has exhibited at the Museum of Modern Art, has consistent sell - out shows with his art dealer, Castelli, and has some of his work now owned by Nelson Rockefeller.

James Brewer, also a sculptor, has had an exhibit in Paris as well as wide participation in state and regional shows. George Birline, who won the Grand Prize in the N. C. show last year, is on the staff at North Carolina State University. William Fields, portrait painter and first graduate of the Art Department, has an international reputation and among his subjects for portraiture was the late Pope.

Many of Carolina's art graduates are now heading art departments of various institutions: Bob Koch, director of the Princeton Art Museum; Joe Rankin, art librarian for the N. Y. Public Library; Russell Arnold, head of art at Atlantic Christian College; Joseph Holt, University of Florida; Leonard White, Meredith College; David C. Huntley, art professor in Illinois. Graduate Vig Huggins, Jr. is now on the art staff at UNC.

Among the most famous University alumni in the field of music are Thor Johnson, long - time conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra; Composers Hunter Johnson and Thad Jones; and the late Norman Cordon of the Metropolitan Opera. Mr. Johnson composed the music for Martha Graham's ballet, "Letter to the World." Roger Hall was manager of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra.

Music department administrators include Bryce Jordan, head of the music department at Texas Christian University; Hubert Henderson, University of Kentucky; Willis Gates, St. Andrews Presbyterian College; and William Sasser, Wesleyan College in Rocky Mount.

In the area of popular music, prominent figures are Lanier Davis, who has been in various New York musicals; and Hank Beebe, author of musical sketches in various revues and of the singing commercials for General Motors.

Wilton Mason, now on the staff of the UNC Music Department, composed the music for the very popular "Spring for Sure," presented some years ago on the campus and revived since.

Similar stories of success in the arts could be told by the Department of Dramatic Art and the Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures, which have sent such actors to Broadway, television and the movies as Sidney Blackmer, Shepperd Strudwick, Robert Carroll, Robert Armstrong, George Grizzard, Andy Griffith, Douglas Watson, Tom Avera, James Secrest, Edgar Daniels, Eugenia Rawls and Betsy Farrar Thurman. Robert Dale Martin is head of casting for CBS television. John Paul Nickell and Bruce Minnix made their way as television directors.

Familiar names and faces on television who got their start on the University would include Charles Kuralt, Nelson Benton and Roger Mudd of CBS news department. Barry Farber, like Charles Kuralt, was editor of the Tar Heel at UNC and is now a prominent radio commentator in New York. And don't forget that David Brinkley once walked across the campus — and tried to get in school!

Some years ago Paul Green wrote a number of movie scripts for Will Rogers, George Arliss, Janet Gaynor and Lionel Barrymore. His latest film work was on the script of the recent "Black Like Me." Both Frances Gray Patton ("Good Morning, Miss Dove") and Josephina Niggli ("Mexican Village"), who wrote one-act plays for the Playmakers, saw their books turned into successful movies. Arnold Shulman wrote the script for "A Hole in the Head" for Frank Sinatra. Howard Richardson's play, "Dark of the moon," was produced in New York, Washington and many other cities.

One of Joseph Mitchell's stories for the New Yorker served as basis for the popular Broadway musical, "Gypsy," last season — and his new book, "Joe Gould's Secret," comes out this fall. Richard McKenna's "The Sand Pebbles," a Book of the Month Club selection, will appear soon as a movie.

Playmakers

Walter Terry, dance editor for the New York Herald Tribune, is an old Playmaker. So are Whitner Bissell, who has appeared in countless movies and television shows (including "Peyton Place") and James Pritchett (Omnibus and Goodyear Playhouse). Other distinguished UNC alumni in the theater and entertainment world include Sam Greene, Merrill Hilton, David Hooks, Estelle Ritchie, Louise Fletcher, Sidney Shertzer, Jack Palance, David Sievers, Fred Young, Porter Van Zandt, Christine White, Frank Groseclose and Charles Williamson.

Lynn Gault, former Playmaker set designer, has turned to pottery and is working in his shop at Brasstown, N. C., where he turns out some of the most artistic pottery in the South.

various units of government. The Institute of Fisheries at Morehead City conducts research on marine life, not only to advance knowledge, but also to benefit the state's important fishing industry. The University's radio and television studios make the intellectual resources of the campus available to persons outside Chapel Hill.

A University must also continually interpret its functions to its alumni and to society. Otherwise, lack of understanding and appreciation on the part of the community for the University's functions could develop. This gap between University and state community could reduce the effectiveness of the University and thereby endanger its educational service to the state.

To reduce the likelihood of this development, the University maintains a development program under a Director of Development (Charles Shaffer). This includes an alumni association, a news bureau, and programs for fund-raising among individuals, groups and foundations.

Although much of the University's financial support is provided by the state, substantial additional funds are required to carry on the University's total education programs. Indeed, the University would not now hold the high place that it does in the educational world without these substantial contributions from private sources.

Educational Policy

As is indicated above, the teaching and research functions of faculty members are carried on at the departmental or school level. Broad educational policies, however, cannot be set by individual faculty members or departments. Such matters properly come within the purview of the entire faculty and administration. After considerable study, the General Faculty, recognizing that its large size (now about 1,000) made deliberations difficult, in 1947 adopted an "Instrument of Government" (or constitution) which provided for a Faculty Council, a legislative body which now numbers approximately 70 faculty members elected by faculty ballot. The Faculty Council, subject, of course, to the general regulations of the Board of Trustees, legislates in the area of broad educational policy including such matters as admissions, athletics, curricula and degrees, faculty welfare, student life, etc.

If the University were a small and simple institution with perhaps a single function, such as education in the liberal arts, it would require little or no administrative oganization beyond the school level. Since, however, it has the multifold activities described above, it cannot function effectively without administrative organization (central administration) above the school level. Students tend to refer to central administration as "South Building." Any inference that "South Building" is a single administrative official exercising all the responsibilities of "central administration" would be highly misleading. Actually, South Building is merely the physical location of a number of administrative offices.

Continuing growth, greater diversity, and increasing complexity of the University necessitate continuing reassessment of central administrative organization, the most recent of which took place in July 1965. Prior to this date, the University's academic programs were organized into two completely distinct and separate divisions — Academic Affairs and Health Affairs, each with a separate administrative officer.

Vice Chancellors

In order to bring all parts of the University together into a more effective working relationship, all schools and colleges (except the Graduate School) are now responsible to a single central administrator — the Vice Chancellor of the University (J. C. Sitterson). The Vice Chancellor's staff includes an assistant vice chancellor for academic affairs and an assistant vice chancelor for health affairs.

The Graduate School, research, advanced studies and related programs are grouped together under the Vice Chancellor for Advanced Studies and Research (E. D. Palmatier). The Vice Chancellor for Advanced Studies and Research is assisted by the Dean of the Graduate School and the Dean of Research Administration.

The new organization centralizes channels of administrative authority in order to strengthen teaching and research, achieve greater unity of purpose and increased effectiveness. It is hoped that this organization will increase the maximum availability of educational opportunities for students and faculty and promote an optimum utilization of all University resources in personnel and facilities. In other words, artificial barrier which formerly may have impeded free movement into al appropriate courses and curricula will be removed.

Hodges Heads Commission To Examine UNC Trustees

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Dan Moore announced today the appointment of former Gov. Luther H. Hodges as chairman of a nine-member study commission to probe the workings of the University of North Carolina Board of Trustees.

The commission was created by the 1965 General Assembly after Moore suggested the move in his legislative message last February.

The legislature directed the commission:

"To make a detailed and exhaustive study of the manner in which the trustees of the University of North Carolina are selected, the number which should constitute the board, the terms of office, the relationship between the trustees and the General Assembly, the relationship between the board and other agencies of the state."

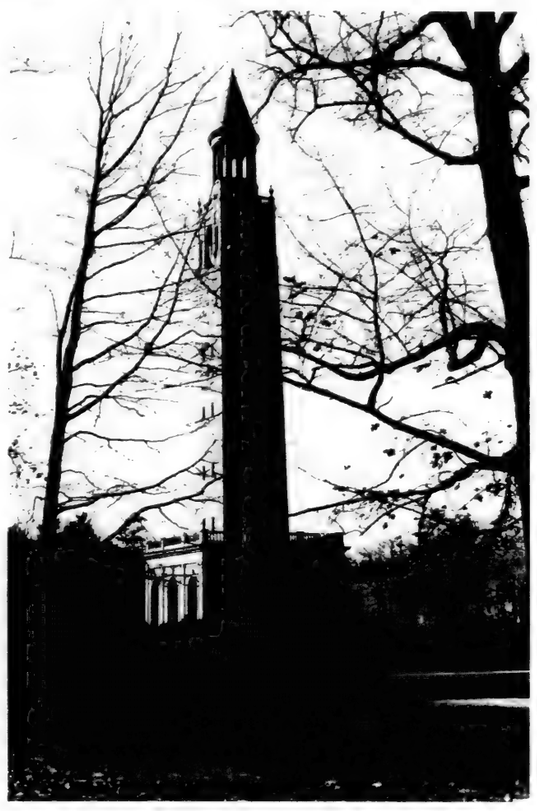
The study commission consists of five members appointed by the governor, two by the Senate president and two by the House speaker.

In addition to Hodges, Moore appointed Brodie S. Griffith, associate publisher of the Charlotte News; Dr. D. Grier Martin, president of Davidson College; Miss Naomi Morris of Wilson, and Dr. Robert S. Rankin, department of Political Science, Duke University.

Lt. Gov. Bob Scott, as president of the Senate, named xens. L. P. McLendon Jr. of Greensboro and Roy Rowe of Burgaw.

The two House members appointed by Speaker H. P. Taylor were Reps. Neill L. McFadyen of Raeford and Hugh A. Ragsdale of Richlands.

The study commission will report its finds to the 1967 General Assembly.



BELL TOWER, WERE U-DAY CEREMONIES BEGIN

U-Day Activities Slated For Today

There will be barbecue, fireworks, a combo party, folk music — and no classes after 1 p.m. at UNC today.

The occasion is the commemoration of the founding of the University 170 years ago.

By proclamation the United States' oldest state university has dedicated this day to honoring UNC Chancellor Paul F. Sharp.

After classes are dismissed, the day's events will run like this:

1:30 p.m. — Academic procession of faculty from Morehead - Patterson Bell Tower to Carmichael Auditorium.

2 p.m. — Convocation, Carmichael Auditorium. Participants will include Chancellor Sharp (who will deliver the only speech of the day); UNC President William C. Friday; Senior Class President John Harmon; William Snyder, editor of The Greensboro Daily News; and Dr. Corydon Spruill, faculty member.

4-5:30 p.m. — Open house in dormitories, fraternities and sororities.

6-7:30 p.m. Combo party and barbecue at Emerson Field, $1.50 per plate. (The music is free).

7:30 p.m. — Fireworks.

9 p.m. — Folk singer Glen Yarbrough, Woollen Gym.

Back U-Day Says Dickson

Student Body President Paul Dickson urged students not to boycott today's University Day proceedings because he was not invited by the faculty to represent the student body at the ceremonies.

The faculty voted last month to have Senior Class President John Harmon represent the student body at the event rather than Dickson.

Dickson has been criticized by members of the faculty and student body since his conviction for a Campus Code violation last summer.

"It has come to my attention that some students plan to boycott the convocation to protest the fact that the students will not be represented by the President of the Student Body," Dickson said in a press release issued yesterday.

"While I appreciate the feeling which has motivated such a decision," Dickson said, "I would hope there would be no such demonstrations as would mar the celebration.

"I am planning to attend and I hope the student body would do likewise," he said. "Today is not a day of disunity and despair, but one of celebration and new resolve."

Lyon Exchange Applicants

Applications are now being accepted for the 1966-67 "UNC-Year at Lyon."

The program, now entering its third year, is primarily for juniors, but is also open to anyone who has qualified and can adapt the year into his academic curriculum.

Requirements include a B average in all French courses, and an overall B- average. However, these requirements are flexible.

Applicants must have completed at least the equivalent of French 21, and they must carry the recommendation of one language instructor, his advisor and his academic dean.

In addition, a physical examination by a UNC doctor or by the candidate's family physician is required.

This year's brochure will soon be available in the main office of the romance language department, 216 Dey Hall. For applications and more information see Dr. Frautschi in the French Department.

UNC ROTC Among Nation's Largest Units

The total enrollment of 286 includes 145 midshipmen on full scholarships from the Navy.

The unit will participate in University Day, Veterans Day and Navy Day ceremonies in addition to annual drill competition in the spring.

The NROTC program was established here in 1949 at the request of university officials under President Frank P. Graham.

This year it was the first unit to conduct summer school courses preliminary to a two-year program leading to a commission in the Naval Reserve.

According to Captain Rex Warner, commanding officer, the NROTC unit in Chapel Hill represents a total annual expenditure — including scholarships, salaries, upkeep and purchases — of over $900,000.

Plans For Air Force Unit

"There's Gonna Be a Change In Me" is the tune being sung by the 235-man AFROTC cadet corps here this year.

Lt. Colonel Kenneth W. Slaker, new Professor of Aerospace Studies, told cadets at their first drill period of the year that he hopes to eliminate the old four-year program in favor of the new two-year program.

Two-year cadets will receive an intensive six weeks of training at summer camp and the complete the AFROTC program during their last two years of college. There are presently six two-year cadets in the program.

Slaker, who succeeded retiring Lt. Col. Gordon D. Kage late last spring, also announced that there is a quota of 36 juniors who can be enrolled in the Professional Officer Course each year. The program has become more selective, and applicants with less than a 2.0 grade point average will not be considered.

Slaker said in order to give cadets more time for their studies, there will be no more intramurals or rifle team matches for AFROTC. He also said the Mitchell Aerospace Flight, an honorary organization for freshmen and sophomore cadets in the four-year program, will be aolished.

He said that any rising junior in the corps could apply for AFROTC scholarships worth about $2,200 for the last two years. There are currently seven cadets in the program holding these scholarships.

Finally he said the present cadet group commander, Cadet Lt. Col. Ellis J. Harrington, will remain in command for both semesters. In the past the command has changed at the beginning of the spring semester.

Five Jurors Chosen In Opening Day Of Rinaldi Murder Retrial

By ED FREAKLEY
DTH Staff Writer

HILLSBOROUGH — Four men and one woman were selected yesterday to sit on the jury in the retrial of Frank Joseph Rinaldi, former UNC graduate student, charged with the Dec. 24, 1963, murder of his pregnant wife.

The special session of Orange Country Criminal Court convened yesterday at 9:30 a.m. and recessed at 5:30 p.m with Superior Court Judge George M. Fountain of Carrboro presiding.

Large Venire

More than 25 persons were called to the stand to testify to their competence as jurors. Most of them said they had formed an opinion as to Rinaldi's guilt and felt they could not render a fair decision.

The defendant appeared relaxed at the day's preceedings. He listened attentively as his attorney, Barry Winston of Carrboro, and District Solicitor Thomas D. Cooper Jr. of Burlington fired questions at perspective jurors.

Rinaldi, a former part-time English instructor at the University, was granted a new trial in late June in a 5-2 ruling by the North Carolina Supreme Court.

First Sentence

The first trial, which lasted a week and a half, ended in a conviction last Nov. 18 with a recommendation for mercy.

This automatically carries a life imprisonment sentence under North Carolina law.

The conviction was overturned on the basis of imcompetent evidence given at his trial last November.

Since the trial last year Rinaldi has spent 10 months in Central Prison, Raleigh. He was transferred to Orange County jail in Hillsborough about two weeks ago.

Principal evidence in last year's controversial case was the fact that Rinaldi was to receive as much as $40,000 in insurance payments for the accidental death of his wife Lucille.

At that trial Rinaldi and Chapel Hill insurance agent John F. Sipp said they found the body of Rinaldi's wife upon returning to Rinaldi's apartment after a shopping trip to Durham. Sipp told the court he was with Rinaldi between 8:45 a.m. and 1:35 p.m. on that Christmas eve day.

Witnesses testified that they had seen Rinaldi in various stores in Durham on the day of the murder.

Autopsy Report

A pathologist who performed the autopsy on Mrs. Rinaldi testified that she died of suffocation and set the time of death between 10 a.m. and noon.

He also said that "one or more blows to the head by a blunt instrument had probably caused the head injuries and cuts around her face."

First trial judge Raymond Mallary ruled out items taken from Rinaldi's apartment the day his wife was killed, because they had been obtained illegally by police.

They consisted of a bent flashlight and blood-stained sofa pillow.

Handyman's Testimony

Chief witness for the state last year was Chapel Hill handyman Alfred Foushee. He testified that the defendant had attempted to hire him to kill Mrs. Rinaldi.

The trial and selection of the seven remaining jurors will resume this morning at 9:30.

The prosecution is expected to call on the same witnesses they used last year.

The defense has not indicated who it will call upon.

About 70 people were present for the opening day of the new trial.

Holy Book Stops Bullet

'My Mother's Old Bible Is True' Says U. S. Soldier

GARLAND, N. C. (AP) — A North Carolina mother rejoiced with renewed faith and prayer yesterday when told the Bible she gave her soldier son saved his life in a Viet Nam ambush.

A sniper's bullet pierced the tiny New Testament that PFC. William Donald Parker had stashed in his helmet, remembering the instructions of his mother always to keep it with him.

"I told him to read it and it would help him," a proud Mrs. William T. Parker said. "I sure am glad I gave it to him."

Her son, William, who was 19 years old today, is the oldest of seven children, including 12-year-old triplets. The Parker family lives on a farm in North Carolina's Sampson County, 80 miles south of Raleigh. They raise corn and tobacco.

Mrs. Parker, who also works in a clothing manufacturing plant in Garland, said her son had written only two or three letters since joining the 173rd Airborne Brigade six months ago and being sent to Viet Nam.

"In all of them he was telling me to pray for him," she said. "He's not too religious really but he believes in prayer."

Mrs. Parker said the family attends Smith's Chapel African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church near their farm home and she does "a lot of praying by myself."

Not only does young Parker have his mother's prayers but also those of his 18-year-old wife, Rosalee, who is expecting a baby in late December. She lives with the Parker family but is visiting relatives this week.

Parker's father, a carpenter as well as a farmer, served in World War II. He received the Purple Heart and five Bronze Stars before being discharged with the rank of staff sergeant.

"I didn't have a Bible with me, but I prayed," Parker said. "The Lord was with me, I know, and my mother was back home praying too."

Parker said any man who carries the word of God with him in battle can count on faith to help him.

The sniper's bullet hit young Parker's helmet, plunged through the New Testament, and spun out the side, saving his life. All he got was a slice of skin taken off his skull.

Two other soldiers received minor wounds in the ambush in the "Iron Triangle," long regarded as one of the toughest stretches of terrain in South Viet Nam.

Not the least surprised that the New Testament saved his life, Parker said he knew God would protect him and "that's why I wore it up there."

His mother is making plans to send him another New Testament if he cannot find a replacement in Viet Nam.

Parker's younger brothers and sisters included Harry, 17, and Mary Louise, 16, who attend Clear Run High School where he graduated in 1964. Amos, 14, and the 12-year-old triplets — Larry Lee, Jerry Lee and Perry Lee — attend elementary school.

Southern Assn. To Hear President, Chancellor

Consolidated University President William C. Friday and UNC Chancellor Paul F. Sharp have been invited to testify before an executive session of the Southern Association of Schools and Colleges Nov. 28.

Friday announced yesterday that he and Sharp, along with the chancellors of other UNC campuses, received letters from the association asking them to testify in a closed session on the effects of the speaker ban.

The commission will hear these testimonies at their annual conference in Richmond, Va.

Friday refused to predict what action the council would take after his appearance, but added that final action was due on the accreditation question.

"You don't know yet," Friday said, "but the decision to continue accreditation would be their next move."

David M. Britt, chairman of the Speaker Ban Study Commission, said Sunday the group hopes to complete its report and submit its findings to Governor Dan K. Moore and the General Assembly.

"It is hoped that commission members will be able to get together in the not too distant future for purpose of deliberation and discussion," Britt said.

"After a decision is arrived at, it will then be necessary for us to prepare a report to be submitted to the governor and the General Assembly."

Britt said he hopes to make his report by mid-November. However, the Southern Association on Schools and College plans to decide on the accreditation question after Nov. 28.

Symphony Selects Pianist As Soloist

Pianist Jayne Winfield Reich has been chosen to appear as soloist with the North Carolina Symphony during the Orchestra's 21st annual tour in 1966.

North Carolina Symphony Director Dr. Benjamin Swalin announced that Mrs. Reich was selected from among five applicants in the instrumental division of the State Symphony's annual young artist auditions held recently at St. Andrews College, Laurinburg.

MRC Court Reports Rise In Number Of Offenders

Residence hall violations have been running rampant this fall.

In five cases tried this semester by the MRC Court, 14 defendants have received sentences ranging from official reprimand to indefinite probation, according to Court Chairman Bob Hunter.

Disorderly conduct and destruction of residence hall property have been among the most frequent charges, Hunter said.

The first case to come before the court involved two students charged with destruction of residence hall property, disorderly conduct and excessive consumption of alcoholic beverages.

One of the students was acquited of all charges. The other was found guilty of the last two. He received official reprimand and a $10 fine.

Indefinite residence hall probation was given to a student charged with disorderly conduct and destruction of dormitory property — specifically, pulling a sink from a bathroom wall.

He was also charged for damages.

The third and fourth cases involved gambling.

Seven defendants in the two cases were all found guilty and received a court reprimand.

Four students were charged with violating quiet hours — two of them charged with possession or use of an exploding device — in the last case to come before the court.

Three were found guilty.

Their sentences ranged from a $5 fine and residence hall probation to a $5 fine and official reprimand.

Hunter told the DTH that MRC representatives have been instructed to report all violations of residence hall rules to the Attorney General for trial by the court.

Wesley Building To Be Completed

By RAY LINVILLE
DTH Staff Writer

Contemporary design is one of the features of the Wesley Foundation's new home at 214 Pittsboro Street which will be completed this week.

The building combines brown-gray brick and white concrete slabs with crystal quartz. It was designed by Albert Cameron of Charlotte. Cameron has been given the contact to design the new undergraduate library and student union and book store.

The building costs $298,000. Furnishings and other accessories will raise the cost to $350,000.

Methodist Chaplain Bob Johnson said gifts from private foundations and three annual conferences of North Carolina Methodists paid all costs.

The building is two stories.

On the first floor are offices, a library, a chapel and an art gallery - coffee shop.

The library will house reference books for the Wesley teaching program and those that will aid University religion majors. Adjoining the library is a periodical reading room.

The chapel will be used for worship, drama and music. It is highlighted by a tangerine-red carpet and a pipe organ. The organ which takes two years to complete will not be installed until April.

"The chapel is designed like an amphitheater. The congregation will sit on three sides of the speaker," Johnson said. With two balconies the chapel will seat 250.

The art gallery will display various collections throughout the year. It merges with the coffee shop where pasteries and several brands of coffee will be served. The shop with 12 white tables and yellow chairs will seat 40.

"Throughout the year films, music and readings by students and faculty of poems and other literature will be presented," Banks Godfrey, associate Methodist chaplain, said. The coffee shop opens next week and will be available to student use until 1 a.m.

Upstairs are rooms or visiting lecturers, an apartment for the secretary, rooms for five students who will be servers in the coffee shop, a TV lounge and seminar room.

Behind the building is an enclosed garden and parking spaces for 40 cars. Godfrey said the coffee shop might expand to the garden during the spring.

The formal opening of the Wesley Foundation building will be Sunday, Nov. 7, at 4 p.m. when Dean Robert E. Cushman will speak at the worship service.

NEW WESLEY FOUNDATION BUILDING

Traffic Study Set

Dean of Men William G. Long will meet Friday with the University Traffic and Safety Committee to discuss rezoning of part of the Bell Tower parking lot.

About half of the 180 spaces now zoned for "E" (staff) sticker holders are being used daily. It is expected that part of that area will be considered for use by students.

A Look At University Day

It is only fitting that the nation's oldest state-supported university should place considerable importance on the observance of its anniversary.

This university opened its doors 170 years ago. Each year, since William R. Davie laid the cornerstone of Old East on October 12, 1795. That date has been set aside to honor those who built this school and those who continue to give it life. The ceremonies have been neglected only during the Reconstruction Era of 1870-1795 when the University was closed.

The historical significance of the day should be kept in mind when we consider today's program. There is added importance to this observance because it is also Chancellor's Day, an idea suggested by the faculty last spring. A resolution was passed calling on the faculty and student body to "set aside a day to honor the University, and in particular, Chancellor Paul Sharp."

First scheduled for late September, Chancellor's Day was to be an event separate from University. Construction delays at Carmichael Auditorium and other difficulties caused the fortunate combination of the two programs—fortunate because it makes the day doubly important.

Preparation for the day has been painstaking. A committee of 12 faculty members and 5 students has met almost weekly since late last May, planning the program. The committee requested the half holiday from today's classes and financed yesterday's special edition of The Daily Tar Heel.

Members of the General Assembly, the UNC Board of Trustees, presidents of all colleges and universities in the state, the staff of the Consolidated University office, alumni, and townspeople have been invited to the activities. And as Ackland Art Center Director Joseph Sloane, chairman of the planning committee, said, "We particularly want to invite the students and faculty, whose party it really is."

To demonstrate this concern, faculty members have been working with residence hall, fraternity and sorority residents for some time to insure interest in the activities. Campus housing units with suitable social rooms will have open house today, and faculty members have been encouraged to attend.

At a time when our University is being assailed from many sides, it is especially distressing to hear that a small number of students suggest boycotting or picketing today's ceremonies because the Student Body President was not invited to participate. When a show of University strength is needed, these troublemakers would have us prove once and for all that we are as irresponsible as many accuse us of being.

We need not kid ourselves. No matter how few their number, these "protesters" will appear to represent us all because it is an inescapable fact that students are almost always viewed collectively. If these people want to protest, let them write nasty letters to the members of the University Day Committee. A petty, childish display today will destroy, rather than create, any sympathy for the cause of these malcontents.

Is it too much to ask that we all just enjoy a day that was meant to be enjoyed?

Barbie And The Reds

The Russian magazine Nedelya has really missed the boat in its attack on that American institution, the "Barbie doll."

The magazine said a few days ago that the makers of the curvaceous little doll, with the wardrobe big enough to fill a medium sized department store, have exploited the "urge for property and the desire to be liked.

"In this doll," the article said, "girls from the capitalistic world embody their hopes and see their fates.

"This was the basis of the devilish plan of the manufacturers who never troubled themselves about the development of different features of character in children."

Actually we think the creation of the Barbie doll is more likely a part of a sinister communist plot designed to ruin the economy of this nation.

Ask any father who has given in to his daughter's demands for one of the little playmates. With calculated precision the girl is seized by the "Barbie doll syndrome" which is satisfied only by the acquisition of all of Barbie's friends. And of course the immense wardrobe must be purchased for each doll. Before Dad knows what has happened, he has forked over the month's rent or grocery money for rest of the year for a plastic family.

Maybe they didn't really invent Barbie, but the Communists should have taken a closer look at this phenomenon before they fired their guns at such a true ally.

Talk With Chane-Kee Inmate Shows Truth Of Freud's Psychiatry

Freudian psychiatry spawned a generation of part-hating children, according to a University of Illinois researcher.

Dr. O. Hobart Mowrer says that in the past psychiatrists often unfairly blamed the misdeeds of children on their parents.

But now, he adds, the psychiatrists recognize their previous mistakes, and the parents are somewhat relieved.

Probably a lot of youngsters once felt a lot more innocent than they should have. At least this is the way things seemed ten years ago when I visited Chane-kee prison.

"Why'd you do it," I asked one resident of Chane-kee's death row who had stabbed his boss, murdered his entire family, held up a bank, robbed a filling station and raped his neighbor's daughter—all in one day.

"Just a minute," he said, "and I'll give you the reason. Warden, go upstairs and get me my Encyclopedia Riptannica."

After the guard returned with the book, the prisoner, who had a third-grade education, excitedly pointed to the section on Freudian psychiatry.

"Here it is — right there!" he exlaimed. "The experts say a defective introjected parent and an unsatisfactory family relationship can cause a person to stab his boss, muder his offspring, hold up a bank, rob a filling station and rape his neighbor's daughter."

"But that's not the entire story," I said. "Surely there must be other explanations."

"Yes, there are," he replied. "Dad and Mom made me acquire a poor attitude toward my ego, though the ego, I admit, can take itself as an object like any other object, observe itself like any other object, critize itself and do heaven knows what besides with itself."

"Yet," I interrupted, "you, not your parents, were the criminal in the end."

"I know," he sighed. "Nevertheless, the super-ego serves as the vehicle of tradition and of all the age-long values which have been handed down from generation to generation."

"How do you relate this to your own misdeeds?"

He looked at me as if I'd lost my marbles. "You mean you actually have the nerve to suggest that personality is not only a product of past experience but is also constantly engaged in an on-going social process?"

"Well not exactly," I confessed.

"That's better," the prisoner happily remarked. "Say — I was just thinking how goals and ideals as well as norms and moral standards derive from the social and psychological interaction between parents or parent substitutes and the child. No wonder I robbed that filling station!

"And furthermore," he added, "an individual's response to sets of expectations concerning behavior and to other persons with whom he comes into contact will be affected by the prsonality he has earlier acquired — i.e. the one acquired through Mom and Dad.

"That's why I murdered my boss."

"What about the ruthless slaying of your entire family?" I asked.

"For an explanation of this specific action," the prisoner declared, "I just refer you to Freud's major work dealing with the structure and functioning of personality, its disorders and the development of methods for treating these disorders."

"And the rape of your neighbor's daughter?"

"My parents created a cultural interference with the instinctual, biological needs. Don't believe those quacks who say the problem is rather an incapacity or failure at the interpersonal, social level of human functioning."

Just as I was leaving the room, the prisoner said he hadn't told me everything.

"Damn it!" he yelled. "I wouldn't be in such a fix if my parents and I had not believed that psychiatrist who was such a nut on Freud."

Agenda Delayed

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Tonight I, like many of my fellow legislators, attended legislature with the intention of working on the many pieces of legislation now before our body. However, we were not permitted to do this nor were we permitted to discuss the very strong and controversial address by Rep. Rose. Instead, the body was adjourned by the speaker twenty minutes after we had convened. This is a more blatant neglect of responsibility that that about which Rep. Rose spoke. Although we, as the elected representatives of the student body, were put in office to serve our constituents, we are not being permitted to do so. There is a lot of important legislation on the agenda which needs to be acted upon if student government is to accompliah anything this year. I would like the opportunity to help provide such action. The Dickson administration has been working diligently since last spring on reforms and new projects which will benefit every student at our University. A revised administrative procedure for student government, a reformed judicial system, a review of the residence college system, and a new look at student government in general are but a few of the goals which could become realities if the legislators could ever get to them.

Vital issues of any sort should certainly be brought before the legislature, but they should not stifle the functioning power of that body. If I have been elected to legislate, I request the right to do just that and not to attend legislative sessions which are a mockery of student government.

Letters To The Editor

Cheerleaders 'Don't Care'

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

This letter is in reference to the photo spread on the Carolina cheerleaders in the October 6 Daily Tar Heel.

Although the spread did not overtly praise the cheerleaders, it did put them in a favorable light. This did not seem correct to me.

As a freshman, I was surprised by the actions, or lack of actions, of the cheerleaders at the last two games. I thought that they would be just as excellent as everything else is here. But they were obviously insincere, devoid of any true spirit, and lacking in any cheers, except for a few minor wavings of arms. As the cheerleaders went through their simple movements they seemed to sneer at the crowd. One particular male cheerleader was more interested in putting his arm around the other female cheerleaders than in cheering. Their entire performance can be summed up in the words, "I don't care."

I do not know why these people chose to be cheerleaders but they certainly do not appear to be interested in the job for cheering's sake.

Spelling Errors

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I have staunchly defended the DTH for two years. As a journalism student, I found it to be reasonably fair. But this year's policies are too much.

Since there are many different opinions on the Dickson case, there are naturally going to be letters differing with the DTH's editorial stand and on the kind and amount of coverage given the affair. And the DTH has printed critical letters.

But I have noticed something which I think is directly contradictory to current journalistic ethics. And that is the practice of leaving misspellings in only those letters uncomplimentary to the DTH. The (sic) deftly inserted behind the error shows the sharp wit of the editor.

I have friends, Republican and Democrat, liberal and conservative, pro-and-anti-DTH, who make grammatical errors talking to me. I would be stupid if I tried to ridicule their grammar, thereby distracting from the value of their opinions. Besides, I make enough errors myself.

I am sure that if the DTH editor will reach deep down into his conscience, he will admit that at least once during his reporting days he made an error later caught by the copy editor, who is paid to keep things correct. Not everyone can afford an (sic) copy editor. I had to let mine go last week when they raised the student special to 50 cents.

Friday's paper had a letter with two (sic)'s in it, and strangely enough, the letter was sharply critical of the DTH. The errors: adding an "e" to Chancellor Sharp's name (careless, but I have known people who spelled it that way); and omitting "ali" from "editorialize." In the next-to-the-last line of the letter, "editorializing" is spelled correctly. Did the DTH have mercy and correct the second "editorializing" or did they print the letter knowing fully that the first error was probably a careless one, since he got the word right later?

I'm getting sick.

Dual Standards

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The UNC administration recently pledged to end "dual standard" verdicts by UNC honor councils. Unfortunately, these verdicts cannot logically be changed unless significant alterations are made in men's and women's rules.

Thus if the administration is to be logical in its attack on the student judiciary, they must not only refuse to tolerate dual verdicts, but they must also strike out against the dual court system and dual social regulations for men and women.

They must, in fact, choose between imposing curfew hours and housemothers on the University's male population or eliminating most of the girls' rules and letting them live with the freedom of Carolina Gentlemen.

Both of these ideas have unpleasant ramificatons that would send shudders resounding through the halls of this cen[illegible] of learning.

At great expense housemothers, spies, and the like might be able to keep the 9,000 plus male students in their dormitories, fraternities and apartments after 11 p.m. on weekdays and after 12 or 1 p.m. on weekends. And soon the University would be relieved of this financial burden: most males would transfer to colleges and universities without curfews and house mothers.

The girls would be just as upset over their rule change. Freedom would require that they discipline themselves. Having a set curfew gives them a good excuse to terminate a bad date. It also assures them of adequate "beauty" sleep.

Even if Carolina coeds did't reble against this new system, their parents and the state legislature certainly would.

Something effective, however, can be done about dual standard verdicts. The punishment for women breaking their curfew rules are too severe. Coeds are sent packing for spending the night outside the dormitory without the permission of the "authorities."

I believe they should be reprimanded the first time, put on probation the second, and suspended if they make a habit of it.

In this way the University could proudly announce to the state: "UNC's judicial system has made great strides toward eliminating unfair and discriminatory verdicts. Our men and women now get the same punishment for spending the night together."

If North Carolina's enlightened politicians and newspaper editors speak out against this new punishment as being too lenient, let them recall their college days and slowly their mouths would close.

Jack P. Tate
416 Ehringhaus

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

We are writing in regard to your editorial of October 7 concerning dual standards for men and women at the University of North Carolina.

We do agree with your opinion that different penalties should be handed out to men and women students because there are two different judicial codes. However, we don't agree that the system should be overhauled so as to formulate one code for all students, men and women. The purpose of the women's judicial system would appear to be for protecting the women students. As we see it, the purpose of the men's judicial system is to keep the men in line, i.e. living like "Carolina Gentlemen." Combining the two sexes under one code would necessitate treating all the students as Carolina Gentlemen, or all as Carolina Ladies, thereby causing the women to lose their "protection" or the men to lose their freedom.

We must decide if Carolina is a University or a prep school.

Rude Audience

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The last two Tuesday evening recitals at Hill Hall have been marred by incredibly rude audiences who insist on being late. Last week, Prof. Matthews, pianist, waited and gazed icily from his piano stool until the last of the embarrassed stragglers was seated. However, his freeze-out had no effect on this week's audience at Dr. Kremer's organ recital. Scads of arrogant, misdressed students and chatting faculty strolled in while he was performing.

These audiences displayed not only bad manners but also a low consideration of the artists, the music, and the members of the audience who had arrived on time. Perhaps these people are taking the cultural opportunities at Carolina too much for granted.

And would the motorcyclist who insists on parking directly outside of Hill Hall auditorium please refrain from revving his engine during concerts?

The Budget Committee will meet from 8-9 p.m. in the Woodhouse room in GM.

NSA Delegates Will Answer Questions Wednesday Evening At Gerrard Hall

UNC's 12 delegates and alternates to last summer's National Student Association congress will answer questions and meet the public Wednesday night at 9 in Gerrard Hall.

The delegation, led by campus NSA Coordinator Eric Van Loon, will describe the workings of the congress, the issues of this year's congress, and their evaluation of the week-long meeting.

Questions on NSA and criticism from the audience are welcomed.

This year's delegates were Teddy O'Toole, Wright Doyle, Sandra Burden, Roger Davis, Jeff Davis, Bill Scott, Mary King, Bob Powell, Steve Jolly, Phil Kirstein, Cathy Cannon and Van Loon.

Other UNC affiliated students present were Student Body President Paul Dickson and NSA National Supervisory Board member Pete Wales.

A new VW is cheaper at twice the price.

How's that for an outrageous claim?
A new VW at around $1700 (depending on accessories) costs less than a 4-year-old Something Else at $850.
We knew you wouldn't believe it. So we've proved it.
Let's say you plan to keep your next car 5 years (and drive a total of 75,000 miles). Here's how it might work out:

	New Volkswagen	Used Something Else
Price	$1,700	$850
Gas @ 32¢/gal	828 (29 mi/gal.)	1,600 (15 mi/gal.)
Tires @ $28 ea.	112 (40,000 mi/set)	336 (20,000 mi/set)
Oil @ 60¢ qt.	42 (2 qts fills it)	57 (needs 5 qts)
Anti-freeze	0 (air-cooled eng)	45 (water-cooled eng)
Cost for 5 years	$2,672	$2,888

So you're at least $206 ahead if you buy the VW. We didn't even count the extra $100 insurance, theft, vandalism and registration fees in many states.
If you buy the new VW, you won't have to worry about what the last owner said it. And you won't have to put up the expensive guarantee that can hit on a Something Else.
Now then. We don't have a crystal ball, but we do have one interesting clue to the future.
After 5 years, the used car will be a candidate for the junk heap. But the VW will be ready to go another 5 years.
(Check the classified ads for what you'll get for your Something Else. It'll be between $600 to $900, depending on what you've got.)
But you can do much better than that. Sell your VW after 5 years at a profit.
(Think of the money you'll save by driving it for another 5 years.)

Talbott Featured

"Tar Heels have a new Charlie Justice" headlines a story in the October 16 issue of "The Sporting News." Junior quarterback Danny Talbott is the subject.

"Through the years," said author Gene Warren, "there have been many North Carolina players compared with the great Justice, who made All America twice during his Tar Heel days 1946-49. But none seems to come closer to filling the qualifications than the current number 10 — Danny Talbott.

"He's as fine — or better — a passer as Justice was," continued Warren, "and has the same know - how in the running department. Before he completes his college career, Danny may also be quick-kicking and punting, weapons of which Justice made maximum use."

Talbott was not the only Tar Heel performer gaining national attention. All America halfback Ken Willard, in his first season as fullback for the professional San Francisco '49ers, made the front page of this week's "Sports Illustrated."

Willard is shown hitting an opposing line in one of San Francisco's early season games.

Sandy Shuts Out Twins

L. A. Wins Again

LOS ANGELES — The "puny" Los Angeles Dodger hitting attack gave Sandy Koufax the best support he has had all year, and the prize lefty cruised to a 7-0 shutout over the Minnesota Twins. Monday's win gave the National League Champs a 3-2 edge in the World Series.

Backed by 14 hits and errorless fielding, Koufax limited the Twins to four singles, struck out 10 and walked only one.

Meanwhile, his fielding and hitting counterparts were pounding three Minnesota pitchers for at least one hit in every inning, and putting the final strangling touches on the vaunted Twins power attack with three double plays.

Los Angeles shortstop Maury Wills started the Dodgers toward their third straight Series win when he rapped a double leading off in the first. He crossed the pate with the only run Koufax needed when old pro Jim Gilliam drilled a single.

Gilliam came around to score when Twins' infielder Frank Quilici misplayed a grounder with two out.

Twins' starter Jim Kaat, who beat the Dodgers in the second game, was chased in the third when Willie Davis rifled a single, stole second (the first of his three steals) and came home on Lou Johnson's single. Then Ron Fairly doubled to score Johnson and finish Kaat.

LA tallied its final two runs in the seventh against Jim Perry. Fairly led off with his third hit, a single to center, and moved to second on a sacrifice. Koufax, who had fanned in his three previous plate appearances, then shot a single to center to score Fairly. Wills doubled for his fourth hit of the day and tenth of the Series to score John Roseboro who had walked ahead of Koufax.

Koufax snuffed out the first 12 batters to face him, but lost his no-hit bid when Harmon Killebrew looped a single off the glove of a diving Willie Davis in center field. Killebrew was erased on a double play.

Joe Nossek barely beat out an infield single to deep short in the seventh, but Frank Quilici blooped a single down the right field line leading off the ninth, and pinch - hitter Sandy Valdespino followed with a solid smash for a single to right to pose the only threat against the stylish lefthander.

But Koufax was equal to the occasion, fanning the Twins' top clutch man, Zoilo Versalles, and inducing Nossek to line into a double play to end the game.

Dodger Manager Walt Alston has nominated left Claude Osteen, who blanked the Twins on Saturday to hurl for the leaders. Sam Mele of the Twins has not yet named his starter.

Lawyers Dominate Murals

The boys in Law School make you wonder if they're studying for a degree in law or one in tag football. Law IV chalked up their second straight win by thumping the NROTC Dolphins, 42-0.

Richard Vinroot led the rout with three touchdowns and Sammy Thompson chipped in with two. Claude Freeman added the other TD.

In another Monday game the Navy boys took it on the chin again as the NROTC Operating Rods were blanked by the New Nine, 24-0. Bob Jewel, Ike Grainge and Doug Evans scored TD's in leading the New Nine to their second straight shutout victory.

Doug Helms had a busy day in leading Ehringhaus D over Ehringhaus A-2, 23-8. Helms scored all three of his team's touchdowns and added an extra point for his day's work. Larry Simpson provided all eight points for A-2 with a TD and a safety.

The Intramural program will take a breather today for University Day, but will pick up again with the intramural track meet on Wednesday and Thursday. Preliminaries will be held on Wednesday and finals the next day. Tag football will resume on Friday.

Circumstantial Evidence Is Not Enough Jurors Say

By ED FREAKLEY
DTH Staff Writer

HILLSBOROUGH — Four more jurors were selected yesterday in the retrial of Frank Joseph Rinaldi, charged with the murder of his wife in 1963. Two of the new jurors told the court they could not convict the 36-year-old former UNC graduate instructor on circumstantial evidence.

Rinaldi was convicted last Nov. 18 on a chain of circumstantial evidence presented by the state. The jury recommended mercy which in North Carolina carries an automatic life sentence.

The State Supreme Court later granted Rinaldi a new trial on the grounds that first trial Judge Raymond Mallard had admitted prejudicial and incompetent evidence.

The venire of 59 prospective jurors was exhausted by the state and defense at mid-afternoon.

New Venire Called

Judge George M. Fountain, presiding over the special session of Orange County Criminal Court, recessed the court at 3:10 directed a special venire of 125 to be selected to report this morning at 9:30. Three jurors and an alternate must still be chosen.

Court officials immediately began selecting the special venire.

Rinaldi is accused of killing his four-month pregnant wife in their Chapel Hill apartment on Christmas Eve, 1963

She was found dead with a scarf knotted about her head and she had been beaten about the face.

He and his wife, Lucille, 34, had been married since July, 1963. They had been childhood sweethearts at Waterbury, Conn.

Jurors Selected

The two jurors chosen yesterday who said they could not convict a man on circumstantial evidence alone are Vater J. Johnson, a Negro janitor here at the University, and Edward McPherson, a Hillsborough mason contractor. Both made the statement after being approved by the state.

The other jurors seated Tuesday were E. M. Fowler, a printer who works in Durham and resides in Chapel Hill, and William D. Dorsett, an Efland sales manager for the Curtis Breeding Co.

The five jurors seated Monday include Bruce DeGraffenreid, a Negro worker here at the University; Mrs. Nina Wallace of Chapel Hill, wife of an assistant professor at N. C. State; William Hogan, Chapel Hill dairy farmer; Lee Crabtree, Cedar Grove farmer; and Donald E. Stewart, the Chapel Hill architect who designed Carmichael Auditorium.

In Courtroom

The parents of Mrs. Rinaldi sat at the front of the courtroom. Rinaldi's father and brother sat directly behind him.

Mrs. William C. Friday, wife of the president of the Consolidated University, was excused by the state during the morning session.

She stated that she was "nervous as a cat." She also told the court she did not want to sit on the jury because "my husband would not like for me to serve."

Mrs. Friday said she was opposed to capital punishment.

The state used its fifth of six challenges in removing jurors to reject Mrs. Friday. Several others were rejected for this reason. Many were turned down because they said they had formed an opinion on the case and did not feel they could render a just verdict.

Solicitor Thomas D. Cooper Jr. has said he will seek another first degree conviction. Cooper is assisted by Hillsborough lawyer Robert Satterfield, who is serving "as a personal favor" to Cooper.

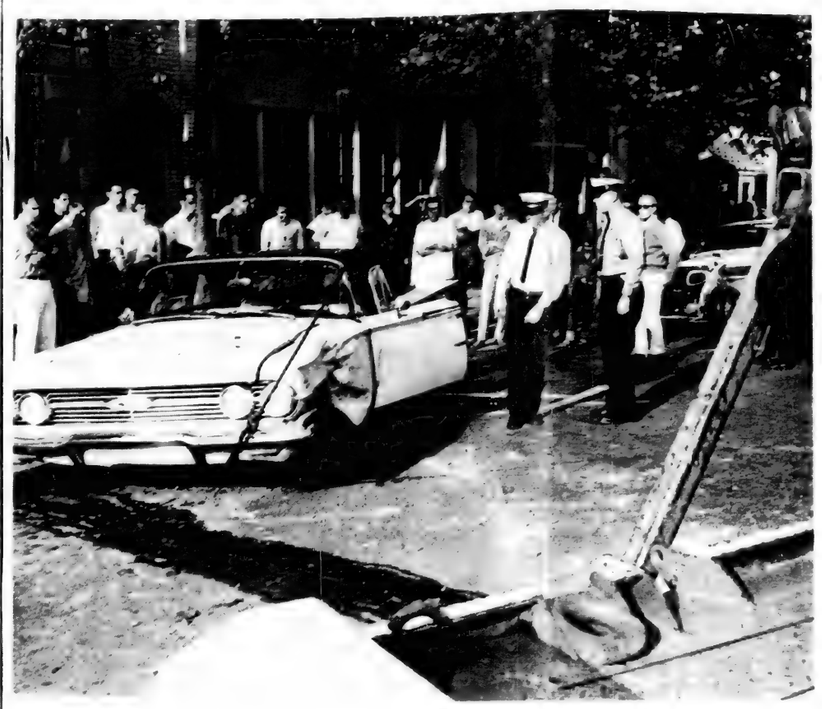
Rinaldi Defense

Rinaldi's defense is headed by Barry T. Winston. Winston is assisted by Gordon Battle, who worked with him at the trial last year, and Victor Bryant Sr. of Durham, a UNC trustee.

There were only a handful of about 26 spectators in court yesterday, and most of them were part of the original venire.

Chief evidence against Rinaldi, who has pleaded not guilty at both trials, is the testimony of Negro handyman, Alfred L. Foushee who said Rinaldi attempted to hire him to kill Mrs. Rinaldi.

Rinaldi based his defense at the first trial on the testimony of John F. Sipp, Chapel Hill insurance agent who said he was with Rinaldi in Durham during the time of the murder.



ONE OF THE cars damaged in yesterday's accident on E. Franklin St. is being towed away. Chapel Hill policemen supervise the activity as a small crowd watches. Five automobiles were involved in the accident.

Five Autos Collide On Franklin St.

A stuck gas pedal triggered a five-car accident on East Franklin St. yesterday afternoon about 3:30. No one was hurt, but damage was extensive.

According to police reports, Mrs. Sally H. Frazier, 150 Hamilton Rd., was pulling out of a parking place near the Village Cafeteria into the eastbound traffic lane when her gas pedal stuck.

Police reported that she swerved into the west-bound lane, sideswiped two cars in the inside lane and struck a fourth in the outside lane. This car was knocked into a parked vehicle.

The two sideswiped cars, driven by Gilbert H. Godfrey, 201 N. Greensboro, Carrboro, and Kenneth C. Joyner, 114B Todd, Carrboro, were still operable after the accident.

Investigating Officer Victor Johnson of the Chapel Hill Police Department estimated that Mrs. Frazier's car was going 30-35 miles per hour when it struck a vehicle driven by Allen W. Markahm. Markahm's car was knocked into a parked car belonging to UNC student Jerry W. Butler.

Butler's car was parked about 150 feet from the spot where Mrs. Frazier had been parked.

UNC Had First Semper Fidelis

UNC has the distinction of having the alpha chapter of the Semper Fidelis Society, an organization founded to further the interests of the Marine Corps on college and university campuses.

The national society has begun here Oct. 9, 1952 and in the past 13 years has spread to all parts of the country. Semper Fidelis chapters are now located on 51 campuses.

The group meets the first Tuesday in each month. At these meetings the Marine Corps' role in the modern military institution is discussed.

The meetings feature guest speakers, films and other training aids.

The big social event of the year falls on Nov. 10 — the Corps' birthday.

Persons interested in finding out more about the Semper Fidelis Society may contact Bill Hatch (966-5248) or John Lovell (968-9156).

APO Rush

Alpha Phi Omega National Service Fraternity will hold fall rush tonight and tomorrow night at 7:30 in the Morehead Planetarium Faculty Lounge.

All men, including freshmen, interested in service to the campus and community are invited. No formal invitation is necessary.

Senate Abandons T-H Repeal Try

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield, D-Mont., yesterday shelved for this session the bill to revoke the power of the states to ban the union shop.

Mansfield told his colleagues that the unsuccessful attempt yesterday to invoke closure and shut off the debate had made it clear that he cannot get action on the bill at this time.

His action made it likely that Congress will be able to wind up the 1965 session shortly. Republican Leader Everett M. Dirksen of Illinois had said earlier it might be possible to adjourn by Oct. 23 if members buckle down.

In Monday's vote, supporters of the bill mustered only 45 senators for cloture as compared with 47 against. Thus it did not win even a majority although two-thirds was needed.

"In view of the margin of yesterday's vote, I no longer find myself looking through a glass darkly," Mansfield told the Senate.

"The image is clear, the Senate does not wish the leadership to press the attempt to take up 15B at this time."

The bill, passed by the House and urged by President Johnson, would repeal Section 14B of the Tart-Hartley Law.

That section permits the states to outlaw union shop contracts under which workers are required to join a union.

Dirksen, leading the opposition to repeal, said he will keep his supporters geared to oppose the measure in the new session starting in January.

In The New Auditorium

Comments ranged from "It's really cool" to "Wonder if they'll ever finish it?". But all-in-all, students seemed to radiate a great deal of pride yesterday as they walked into Carmichael Auditorium for the first time.

The occasion for the christening of the long - awaited edifice was Chancellor Paul F. Sharp's University Day address.

A crowd of about 4,000 people was on hand — and there was no scrambling for seats, a situation previously almost unknown to most UNC students.

The great orange beams which told the story of the coming building last spring were gone yesterday.

Cool Carolina blue covered the rafters as well as the nearly 9,000 seats.

Workmen had been careful to remove all their hammers and saws, but the rough main floor and partially - constructed basketball goals told the story of more work to come.

Officials plan to have the auditorium completed before basketball season this year.

Sharp Asks State's Faith In University

By ANDY MYERS
DTH Staff Writer

UNC sang itself happy birthday yesterday, for the 170th time.

Amid convocations and dedications, barbecues and fireworks, it was fitting that Chancellor Paul F. Sharp reaffirmed the University's faith in the student and asked for the State's faith in the University.

Although he never mentioned the Communist speaker ban law in his speech in the new Carmichael Auditorium, Sharp carefully drove in the point that the University "has passed the critical mass" stage, and to view it in the traditional sense is only confusing.

"External Forces"

Sharp said that "external forces would reduce the university to an indoctrination school or would create an atmosphere of ideological conformity."

However, he added, these forces "are neither overriding nor are they permanent."

"From time to time, they will have their brief day," he said, but "the university builds for eternity."

"Of all the revolutions of our age, the quiet intellectual revolution on the university campus, touching almost every field of thought as it does, is the most subtle and pervasive," he said.

Harmon Speaks

John Harmon, president of the senior class, spoke in behalf of the students. Referring to the crisis of the university and its threatened loss of accreditation, he said the students "are all sorely conscious of our present problems."

"Minorities always shout the loudest and always seem to be noticed first," Harmon said "Let the silent majority raise its voice in support of our chancellor."

"Remember, sir, it is our fight too . . . we beg you to enlist our help." Harmon received a loud ovation from fellow students for his short speech.

Sharp spoke to some 300 faculty members and almost 4,000 students and guests. President William Friday; William Snider, executive editor of the Greensboro Daily News; Professor Corydon P. Spruill; and Harmon, also spoke.

Speaking over live statewide television, Sharp said the intellectual revolution is very difficult for the layman "and professionals alike" to interpret. For this reason, he appealed to the people of the state to exercise restraint to keep the University free.

Public Pressure

Changes in the University, Sharp said, "have left nearly all of us troubled and with a feeling of inadequacy. The general public around us is sorely confused since it tends to see the university in its older image as a small, compact institution, sensitive to public pressure and responsive to well - defined public needs."

"Thus the voice of the public rather plaintively asks, 'But don't we own the university?'" The legislators also ask, 'But don't we pay for the university?' And the trustees ask, 'Why can't we know what is happening?'

Sharp said this confusion extends to the administration and the students. "The facts are," Sharp said, "that as long as we persist in thinking of the university in traditional, simple, and essentially rural terms most of us will remain bewildered and frustrated.

"The modern university, having passed through its critical mass stage, had developed a life of its own that must be respected by all of us if the university is to prosper." The people, the legislators, the trustees, the administration and the students all have the power to destroy the university, he said.

But we must ask, "Who has the power to energize, to build, to create and to interpret?" We ignore reality if we see the university in a traditional sense, Sharp said.

"Vested Interests"

He asked the political leaders of the state to use restraint in submitting to "intense" pressure from "vested interests." Otherwise, "we will surely surrender educational leadership and quality education to the private universities."

Sharp said much of the confusion stems from the "cultural mix and diversity of students and faculty on the campus," And that student concerns often sound "unfamiliar and even frightening to some."

He said "the gulf between the serious students and the Mickey Mousers was never wider." Some students, in their search for "the authentic" life and self - identity, are robbed of purposeful motivation and become "academic casualties."

To an observer these students are often frightening and unfamiliar, Sharp said. This leads to confusion in viewing the university.

Search for "Authentic"

Sharp added that it is not always best for the university to help release the "full potential" of every student in his quest for "the authentic."

"If a student's great potential is as a rascal, please excuse me from my obligation. What if his fullest potential is as a selfish, self - indulgent bigot?

"He may have a high competence in his professional field, and even a great love

Phi Delts Named Best Campus Frat

Phi Delta Theta social fraternity was named the best all around fraternity on campus for the year 1964 - 65 at a meeting of the Interfraternity Council Monday night.

Zeta Beta Tau, Delta Kappa Epsilon and Delta Upsilon fraernities were first, second and third runners up respectively in the competition.

The best fraternity trophy is presented to the house which accumulates the highest point total in academic and intramural athletic competition.

The IFC elected Lindsay Freeman, Dan Howe and Warren Wills to fill three vacancies on the IFC Court.

Two proposals redefining the status of inactive fraternity brothers were proposed at the meeting, and the body will vote on them next week.

Sterling Phillips of Beta Theta Pi proposed that inactives without minimum grade averages be allowed to eat and party at their fraternity houses and pay necessary house bills and assessments.

Neil Thomas of Kappa Sigma proposed that inactive rules be abolished altogether.

A suspension of the rules to consider the two proposals immediately failed to carry the necessary two - thirds majority of the body.

Ken Mann of Pi Lambda Phi moved that the IFC vote to extend to IFC Court members the power to fine any fraternity which plays its jute box loudly enough to disturb other houses on Sunday through Thursday nights.

Current IFC rules provide for the fining of houses only when the IFC receives complaints from the police or townspeople.

Vote on this proposal will also be held next week.

Fraternities planning rush parties over the holidays may send out invitations beginning Nov. 1.

The tenative date of Oct. 28 has been set for the annual fraternity highway clean-up day.

Pledges are sent to pick up trash along highways entering Chapel Hill.

Junior Weekend

The entire campus is invited to combo parties Friday and Saturday nights when the Class of '67 holds its long - awaited Junior Weekend.

Sounds of the "Hysterics" will be heard Friday from 8 p.m. to midnight. Saturday the "Jets" will play from 8 to 12 p.m.

Both parties will be in the Naval Armory. No admission will be charged.

NSA On The Line

Tonight there will be an occasion that the opponents of the National Student Association can hardly afford to pass up. At 9 p.m. in Gerrard Hall the entire delegation that attended the NSA congress in Wisconsin last summer will take the platform and lay the organization open to discussion.

NSA Coordinator Eric Van Loon said, "I'll start the program off with an introduction and one person who served on each of the five full committees at the congress will tell about the issues in that committee. They will give a critique of the results from our point of view, but our hope is to have mostly discussion from the floor."

The delegates and alternates who are supposed to be present are: Roger Davis, Phil Kirstein, Bob Powell, Bill Scott, Sandra Burden, Steve Jolly, Kathy Cannon, Teddy O'Toole, Mary King, Wright Doyle and Jeff Davis.

Van Loon says that the group approached the congress with varying degrees of skepticism and approval. Nevertheless, they all came home with the conviction that NSA is not so bad after all and we ought to stick with it.

Tonight they want to explain why they feel as they do, and every student who has ever complained about the lack of a chance to find out about NSA should attend — or quit complaining.

As just a couple of topics to be discussed, we suggest NSA's stand on the following:

— Endorsement of unconditional condemnation of U. S. intervention in the Dominican Republic.

— Support of U. S. action to have Red China admitted to the United Nations.

— Endorsement of immediate cessation of bombings and offensive military action in North Viet Nam and separate peace talks with the communist National Liberation Front.

— Endorsement of the Berkeley riots as "responsible action" and a pledge of legal support for those affested.

— Support for free public higher education.

— Opposition to tax credits for families with children in college.

— Endorsement of rent strikes, sit-ins and school boycotts to oppose slum conditions in the North.

About Teaching Teachers

The Raleigh News and Observer

A course or two in junior college education provides the young teacher with the orientation he needs. Instruction, evaluation, the psychology of the late adolescent, the uniqueness of the community college are topics which prepare the aspiring teacher for his role . . .

This depressing preachment is put forth in the Quarterly Journal of the State Department of Community Colleges to describe special graduate training needed by teachers of junior college students. It comes, not surprisingly, from a professional teacher of teachers at Appalachian State Teachers College.

Anyone familiar with the fine work of many skilled and really knowledgeable teachers in our public schools knows that their how-to-teach training is often put to good use, most especially in the early grades. But it is just as obvious that the fascination of some with how-to-teach training is a substitute for greater knowledge of what they teach.

At some point in the maturing process of young people, teachers must stop interposing their "genius for creativity," as some choose to call the guidance they give to children, and allow students to learn to think for themselves. The college teacher of English should know more about literature than the proper organization of materials or the personalities of his students. Similarly, a college teacher of chemistry ought to stimulate his class through his superior knowledge of chemistry and allied sciences, not the latest — not even the most irrefutable — discoveries in adolescent psychology.

If colleges are to educate young men and women instead of guide children they need something other than teacher-college teachers.

Student Survey On Dual Standards Shows Opposition To Two Courts

By LYNNE HARVEL
DTH Staff Writer

"Dual standards" in the Student Judiciary has been a long standing practice in the University. A recent example of this practice has brought much comment from the administration and the students, but no action. As a member of the student body, how do you feel about "dual standards" and what can be done to rectify this situation?

Janet Moorefield, freshman, Danbury

"If girls are to be accepted at the University on equal standards with boys then they are to be judged equally. In cases which concern both a boy and a girl in the same offense, both should be tried by the same council."

John William Brent, Law, Chapel Hill

"Both defendants should be tried together before one court. At present, the problem is the two court system. Women expect more of their own kind. A more of society is more harshly judged by women. It is unfortunate that one person received an official reprimand, and the other party received a suspension from school. The reprimand would have been sufficient for both parties. At present the system works tolerably well.

Armistead Maupin, Jr., senior, Raleigh

"I don't believe in duels, but if we must have a standard, it ought to be fifty paces at dawn.

Susan Hayes, sophomore, Wilkesboro

"The penalty should be equal for both people involved in a trial. The boy should not receive a lighter penalty merely because he is a boy. Also, a position in Student Government should have no bearing on the verdict of the trial. The only solution to the present problem is a new set of rules which cover both sexes. The ones in effect now are primarily for an all male school."

Ed Bristol, freshman, Morganton

"The situation of dual standards should not exist. In order to maintain respect in the judiciary system, these practices must not exist. It is unfair to the student body and degrading to the judiciary. It is possible to leave the question up to the attorney general, and if it is constitutional, he could sponsor a move for a referendum, and bring the question before the students."

Eva Lee Blaine, senior, Chapel Hill

"While the judiciary system is run on a dual standard girls will have to bear the responsibility for their actions. If a girl breaks one of the women's rules, it does not necessarily mean that the boy has broken one of his rules. Therefore, until the rules are the same for both girls and boys, the girls must accept the responsibility and the penalty. A better system could be developed if the punishment and judgment could be made to fit the crime.

David Harris, junior, Snowhill

"It is wrong to let dual standards exist. It is a Victorian attitude, an anacronism. There is no reason for the girl to suffer more than the boy; it defeats the aim of justice. We should use student initiative to bring about a change."

Bonnie Coats, freshman, Selma

"As long as there are two sets of rules, this system will exist. Under the present system of rules and regulations the judiciary is set up in the only way possible. The girls rules should definitely be changed."

Don Perry, sophomore, Asheville

"As far as the judicial system is concerned it is not a particularly dual standard. It is only following the patterns of the administration. As it stands now, the situation is similar to a state which has laws against Jews or Negroes. The standards could be for the morality of the women students, or in the attitude of the administration and the facility."

Cecelia Grosse, freshman, Greensboro

"As long as the student government is patterned after the federal government, we should have an equal basis for judgment and punishment as in the federal courts. The same sentences should be given in the same case."

Ann Mayer, graduate, Fairborn, Ohio

"The dual standard can't be maintained under any system of justice. The only solution to the problem is to abolish all rules for student living, regulations on dress, etc. It is very discriminating to have rules for women and not men."

Van Cornelius, junior, Huntersville

"Dual standards are inherent in a dual system of rules at a university. As long as there is duality in rules you can expect disparity in the decisions of the judicial councils. I would like to see the women's rules eliminated, but this is, of course, not feasible. The punishment for women should be lessened. The change should be lighter for women, rather than more severe for men. There is too much made over hours. This is primarily an education center. Social life should be a personal affair.

Betty Anderson, graduate, Hillsborough

"I don't particularly like the idea of dual standards. We should have progressed away from that sort of thing. It is a practical situation, though, on the campus because of the lack of maturity. But there is no logic in having a girl who is of age living in a dorm under the rules of undergraduates."

Nurses . . . And 'Typical' Coeds

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I wish to express my appreciation for the Barnard cartoon appearing in the Oct. 9 Daily Tar Heel. The girl in the cartoon typifies almost every girl that I have seen on the UNC campus. I have never seen a more unnatural group of females in my life. They walk around as if they were in strait jackets. Why do they always appear in groups of four to eight? They are obviously afraid of something — perhaps the great mythical college male who is constantly on the prowl for an easy target. I find it extremely unpleasant to be constantly confronted with mumimes in dresses, and I find it extremely difficult to associate them with what I consider to be girls. Therefore, I petition you, young ladies, to loosen up a little and act more like yourselves. I am sure that we Carolina Gentlemen are not all that dangerous.

James T. Hudson, Jr.
302 Graham

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

My search to find a girl in Nurses Dorm who has not had a date since last October has been quite unsuccessful. But then, there are no residents in the dorm who even resemble the unsightly character in Thursday's cartoon.

Also, all residents of Nurses Dorm are not nursing students. Many are in general college or in other professional fields of study.

The Carolina Gentlemen might be interested to know that even though some of us wear white caps, white uniforms, white hose, and white shoes during the day — we change into more casual clothes at night and on weekends.

I certainly hope that the typical Carolina Gentleman sees us more clearly and with more realism that does the cartoonist who seems to be in dire need of glasses.

Jeannie Papineau
253 Nurses Dorm

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The "Barnard War" seems to have caught the Nurses Dormitory a little off guard. As president of the dorm, I can only conclude that his insistence on carrying on such ridiculousness stems from a desire to spread enmity through the campus at a time when unity of purpose presses down on us harder than ever before.

Having checked our roster, I find no such girls listed as the ones who wrote the DTH the first letter. If they exist, I sincerely hope they find dates wherever they are.

NSA 'Services' Questioned, Second UNC Vote Suggested

What is the NSA?

If you don't know, you needn't be embarrassed. You have lots of company.

NSA are the initials of the National Student Association, an organization of about 300 American colleges and universities which makes itself prominent — insofar as it makes itself prominent at all, which is not very far — by annually adopting a retinue of resolutions best described by the term "weird." Among this year's list are the following, calling for:

— Unconditional condemnation of U.S. intervention in the Dominican Republic.

— American sponsorship for the admission of Communist China into the United Nations.

— Endorsement of rent strikes, school boycotts and sit-ins to oppose nasty conditions in Northern cities.

These are not at all inconsistent with previous proclamations of the NSA. In years past it has urged:

— Repeal of the Internal Security Act of 1950.

— The readmission of Cuba to the Organization of American States.

— The curtailment or abolition of the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

— Opposition to loyalty oaths for students receiving federal grants.

— Approbation for Fidel Castro and his "educational reforms." (This one has to be a joke.)

I do not charge that the NSA is an arm of the International Communist Conspiracy, or that it is manipulated by its leaders for shady and sinister causes. I do not even claim that it is a child of the radical left, though this seems obvious. Were the activities of NSA not so obscure, or had its achievements ever risen above the level of insignificance, I imagine there would appear some loud opposition to the organization's peculiar political enunciations. As things are, most students have either never heard of NSA or ignore it and wonder why others don't do likewise.

The reason we don't ignore NSA is that we can't afford to. As a student body we pay $1,471 a year to maintain access to the organization's services. Which prompts the excellent question: What services?

Judging from the impressive list of student leaders who last year identified themselves with Carolina Students for USNSA, the student government establishment had become convinced that, with what facilities NSA had to offer, it would preside over the greatest collegiate advances since the introduction of oral contraceptives and the snap-top beer can. However, after an extensive but obscure dissertation on the importance of our remaining part of the "international student community," one gathers that the sole tangible benefit the University receives from NSA that it cannot obtain elsewhere is access to about six dozen colorful "how-to-do-it" pamphlets. Disregarding the fact that after 170 years we should have a pretty fair idea of how to do almost anything, except materialize 1,000 parking spaces out of the ether, one finds that these pamphlets are so abstruse as to render themselves practically useless.

True, NSA provides an Insurance Trust which offers low-cost life insurance to university students. However, many students purchase life insurance prior to their college entrance. In addition, numerous companies offer similar reduced-rate coverage to persons under 25.

Also true, NSA furnishes to students in member schools identification which entitles the bearer to benefits while traveling abroad. I understand, however, that these papers are next to impossible to obtain, and I haven't noticed hordes of Carolina students scurrying to Europe, anyway.

Indeed it is found that the principal function of the NSA is its annual congress, at which resolutions are discussed and adopted regarding "the student in his role as a student," whatever that is. There is no doubt that, for our delegates, the summer convention was an enlightening and enriching experience. But for the rest of us, affiliation with the NSA is for the most part unimportant, sometimes obnoxious and always expensive.

One more point: Some have suggested that Carolina remain in the NSA to continue what politically moderating influence we exercise in the organization. I suggest that these persons join the Ku Klux Klan and exercise their moderating influence in that organization; and further that they ought to pay $1,471 a year for the privilege of doing so.

In the debate before last year's referendum, a perceptive writer asked, "Where are the elusive achievements of the NSA? Did we ever hear of them before the present controversy? Will we ever hear of them afterward? Has the NSA made itself felt in your life at Carolina?"

A year later, we can answer these questions.

The achievements of the NSA are, as always, in the imagination of the organization's friends.

No, we didn't hear of any before, and we haven't heard of any since.

And the only way NSA has made itself felt in most of our lives at Carolina has been with the most bizarre assortment of political incantations this side of the Progressive Labor Party.

Last November we had the opportunity to join the growing list of colleges which have left the NSA, but we were persuaded, albeit by the most narrow margin, to allow the organization another year to prove that it's worth its weight.

NSA didn't take long to prove the opposite.

The time for a second referendum upon us.

–Have Faith In UNC, Says Sharp–

for Beethoven. But if his idea of solving our complex social issues is with mob action and violence, with police dogs or crematoriums — stop the world, I want to get off!"

Sharp said reference to the university as a "knowledge industry" is disheartening. The university is concerned with the "bridge between generations," Sharp said, and the bridge should not be weakened.

"We now require of ourselves a positive orientation," Sharp said. "In these strivings I am confident we will find new, if not altogether adequate answers."

"I do not share any lack of faith in our students," he said.

"I believe that the number of students who wish to reduce the American university to something resembling the banana republic models, torn with open strife, confused by frequent demonstrations, and lost in a wonderland of excitement for its own sake, is very small."

Sharp said a state university symbolizes "the finest traditions of the state." It "is a symbol of rationality, amid passion and hate; it is a symbol of free inquiry and free thought in a world of conformity and tyranny; it is a symbol of corporate good conscience, when the voice of conscience is sorely needed."

Fred Cates Named Road Bond Chairman

Fred Cates of Hillsborough has been named Orange County chairman of the Governor's Committee for Better Roads.

The announcement was made by Robert P. Holding Jr. of Smithfield, Chairman of the Governor's Committee.

A local committee will be set up to coordinate all educational efforts in the county in behalf of the $300 million road bond issue, which will be voted on November 2nd.

Materials used in the promotional effort include many thousands of bumper strips, printed brochures and placards.

The bond issue would enabl the state to meet more than three - fourths of its total road needs in the next five years without increasing taxes, Mr. Holding said.

More than a hundred town and country governing boards and civic organizations have endorsed the bond issue, he said.

The county campaign will be aimed at informing voters of the benefits of the bond issue to every citizen of the state and getting out the vote on November 2nd, Mr. Holding said.

Music Professor To Play Title Role In 'Mikado'

Joel Carter, professor of music, will get a chance to practice what he teaches this weekend when he plays the title role in "The Mikado." The Carolina Playmakers' production of the Gilbert and Sullivan musical comedy will run Oct. 15-17 in Memorial Hall.

Another UNC faculty member will also be in the show. Walter Smith, professor of statistics, takes the part of Ko-Ko, the Lord High Executioner.

The cast also includes Anne Peacock as Yum-Yum, Campbell Read as Nanki-Poo, Margaret Buxton as Katisha, Kenneth Smith as Pooh-Bah, Supsan Quinn as Pitti-Sing, Judy Logan as Peep-Bo, and James Slaugher as Pish-Tush.

Tickets for "The Mikado," as well as season tickets for the year's five major productions, can be purchased at the Playmakers Business Office, 214 Abernethy Hall and at Ledbetter-Pickard's in downtown Chapel Hill.

John Lauritzen wanted further knowledge

He's finding it at Western Electric

When the University of Nevada awarded John Lauritzen his B.S.E.E. in 1961, it was only the first big step in the learning program he envisions for himself. This led him to Western Electric. For WE agrees that ever-increasing knowledge is essential to the development of its engineers—and is helping John in furthering his education.

John attended one of Western Electric's three Graduate Engineering Training Centers and graduated with honors. Now, through the Company-paid Tuition Refund Plan, John is working toward his Master's in Industrial Management at Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute. He is currently a planning engineer developing test equipment for the Bell System's revolutionary electronic telephone switching system.

If you set the highest standards for yourself, both educationally and professionally, we should talk. Western Electric's vast communications job as manufacturing unit of the Bell System provides many opportunities for fast-moving careers for electrical, mechanical and industrial engineers, as well as for physical science, liberal arts and business majors. Our Mr. Perfect

Save your hugs and save your kisses
For Fauntleroy — he never misses.

Fauntleroy is perfect, football fans. He never misses.

I really hate to gloat, you understand, but I just had to say something about last Saturday's football picks.

I got 'em all. Of course I have explained the situation to you in the past. I control games — not predict them. If I decide that a team will lose — well, they lose with no questions asked.

Let me give you a brief rundown of last Saturday's picks:

I picked Georgia over Clemson and Ol' Frank Howard thought he had another plan. Clemson was even ahead at half time 9-6. But you have to play these things cool, you understand. Georgia had an easy time in the second half.

In the Duke - Pittsburgh game, I even allowed Pitt to score the first touchdown before I shut the door in favor of the Blue Devils.

I did manage to keep the Maryland - Wake Forest game close, but there was never any doubt. I picked the Terps and Wake Forest should have stood in bed.

Ah, but this is too painful — just let me briefly carry on.

Tennessee was permitted to defeat South Carolina. Princeton beat Cornell. Michigan State jumped on Michigan. (The Wolverines made me angry when they nosed the Tar Heels — they were ungrateful.)

The Davidson game was the real question mark. I couldn't sleep a wink Friday night. But I came through in flying colors, fans. Davidson nosed out OPEN DATE in a thriller.

But enough of this. Save those dimes and nickles, fans. Put in on a sure thing. Saturday's Tar Heel will have the answers. Place your bets on ol' Fauntleroy.

Currie Is Released

Bill Currie, the voice of the Tar Heel radio network, plans to be on the air again this Saturday when North Carolina meets Maryland here in Kenan Stadium.

Currie became ill during the fourth quarter of the UNC-N. C. State game last Saturday and was rushed to Rex Hospital in Raleigh.

LA Goes For Four

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

After getting off to a poor start, the Los Angeles Dodgers today are shooting for their fourth straight win and baseball's World Championship as they are hosted by the Minnesota Twins in the sixth game of the World Series.

LA leads the Series, 3-2, after falling behind 2-0

Claude Osteen, the hard - luck lefty, started the Dodgers on the rebound by shooting blanks at Twins' bats for a 4-0 shutout in the third game. Then Drysdale roared back from his first-game battering for a five-hit, 11 - strikeout, 7-2 win.

Next, Sandy Koufax, baseball's premier pitcher, cast his spell and cruised to a 7-0 win which put the Dodgers in the Series lead.

During the three games at Dodger Stadium, the LA pitching staff allowed only two runs, and its ERA for the five games so far is a sparkling 2.04. This is in direct contrast to the Twin hurlers, whose ERA is 4.07.

Contrary to the way things went during the season (.245 team batting average) the LA'ers have been pounding Minnesota pitching for a .302 average and 10 hits per game. The American League Champ's team average is .213.

Dodger shortstop Maury Wills has ten hits in 22 at-bats to lead the hitters, and he and Willie Davis have stolen three bases each.

Rcn Fairly has been the big run - producer, batting in and scoring five runs each. In short, everyone has been hitting, and infielder Jim Lefebvre, who had five hits in 10 trips before being injured in the fourth game, should be ready to resume his timely additions to the hitting department today.

The Twins probably sang "There's no place like home" all the way back from Los Angeles yesterday, and naturally they are hoping the home field victory pattern will hold true.

But the Dodgers have different ideas. They want to wrap it up today.

Osteen will go after his second win of the Series when game-time rolls around at 2 p.m. EST today. The Twin pitcher has not been named.

Gene Rector

ASSISTANT DTH SPORTS EDITOR

From 30 to 35,000 fans will see a determined band of Tar Heels this Saturday when the men of Coach Jim Hickey take on Maryland's Terps at Kenan Stadium.

"Since the Virginia loss," said Hickey, speaking at his Tuesday press conference, "we have to win all our remaining conference games if we hope to take the title.

"Maryland should be another tough game," he said. "They have good personnel and they are playing hard. We must get ready to go or we'll be left out."

Hickey was pleased with last Saturday's performance against N. C. State.

"It was a good solid game," he said. "We did what we had to do to win.

"Actually," he continued, "it was one of the hardest games we have had all year — a solid team effort.

"Talbott called a fine game and Lampman had perhaps his finest day at running back.

"But there were no really outstanding performances," he added. "The team's mental attitude was greatly improved over the Virginia game."

Chief scout Emmett Cheek had a more complete picture of the Maryland Terps.

"They have a real good football team," he said. "The line is their strong point and they really come at you.

Size and experience are the strong points of that Maryland line.

"All seven starting linemen will be at least juniors," said Cheek, "except at left guard. Here a sophomore will replace an injured veteran.

"Both tackles and ends are 220-230," said Cheek. "The center is 215 and the guards are 205 and 210."

Maryland coach Tom Nugent is not using as many trick formations this season as he has in the past.

"He doesn't really need all of those formations this season," said Cheek. "Both his backs and his line are hard-nosed. They are not as fast as some of Nugent's boys in the past, but they go at you and go at you until they break you down.

"The terps run off tackle as well as anyone in the country," he said. "Their line blocks for the rushing offense much like the Ohio State line.

"Maryland does have its problems," said Cheek. "Their quarterback hurt his shoulder in the first game with Ohio University. He threw only one pass against Syracuse and was constantly overthrowing his receivers last week against Wake Forest.

Intramural Track Meet Begins At Fetzer Field

By BILL HASS
DTH Sports Writer

The first part of the two-day intramural track meet will begin this afternoon at 3:30 with about 60 teams entered.

Finals will be held in field events for the residence hall and graduate divisions from 4:15 to 5:30 p.m. The events are the shot put, discus, high jump and broad jump.

Preliminaries will be held in residence hall, grad, and fraternity divisions in the running events. The 60 and 100 yard dashes will have preliminaries and semifinals and the 440 and 880 yard relays will stage semifinals.

On Thursday there will be finals in all running events for each division plus finals in the half-mile run. Finals in field events for the fraternities will also be held.

Organizations have been limited to one team, but each may enter three men in any event. Each individual will be allowed to compete in only two events.

Individual winners will receive small plaques and team winners will receive large plaques. Scoring in the meet will go by five points for first place, three for second, two for third and one for fourth.

The next big special event sponsored by the Intramural Department will be the Co-Rec Sports Carnival on Oct. 28. All entries must be in by Oct. 20.

Baby Booters Throttle Imps

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

DURHAM — UNC's freshman soccer team followed the example set by the varsity, opening their season here Monday with a 5-0 thrashing of the Duke frosh.

Pacing the win for the booters was Wisdom Ngambi, an African center forward who broke the game open with a trio of third quarter goals.

Landay Anderson got the club off to a rousing start, slamming home a goal in the opening moments of the first period, which stood for a 1-0 halftime lead.

However, Ngambi put the match out of the reach of the Blue Imps with his third quarter flurry, and forward Warren Helman rounded out the rout with a tally in the final period.

Commenting on his team's opening match, Frosh Coach Clarke Herdic said: "Our backfield played exceptionally well, and Duke only got three shots during the entire game. We looked pretty good, but there is a lot of room for improvement."

Next frosh soccer match is Friday, when Clemson is met on Fetzer Field.

Chapman Top Rusher

North Carolina quarterback Danny Talbott slipped to third place among AC backs in total yards rushing and passing last Saturday.

Virginia's Tom Hodges leads the pack with 720 yds. Duke's Scotty Glacken has 549 and Danny has chalked up 541.

The figures in pass completions stand 51 for Hodges, 50 for Talbott, and Glacken is third among aerial artists with 36 bull's - eyes.

Carolina's Max Chapman is the conference's pace setter in the rushing department.

The Tar Heels rank third in the AC in total offense, fifth in rushing offense, third in pass offense, fifth in total defense, third in rushing defense, and seventh in pass defense.

Undefeated Duke ranks either near or on the top of the list in five out of the six departments.

From The Associated Press

Viet Nam Offensive 'Successful'

ANKHE, Viet Nam—The biggest U. S.-Vietnamese operation of the war came to a virtual end in South Viet Nam's highlands yesterday and the American commander declared it a success.

The offensive, launched Sunday, was more a measure of pacification than an attempt to kill large numbers of Viet Cong, said Maj. Gen. Harry Kinnard.

He said a civil government will move into the scene of the operation, the Suai Ca Calley.

"This will be the first government influence in the area since the war began," he told a newsman.

Thirty-four Viet Cong were reported killed and 93 others captured in the four-day operation 280 miles northeast of Saigon.

But reports from captured Viet Cong indicated the bulk of the Communist forces, tipped to the offensive, pulled out Saturday.

RFK Wants Red China At Geneva

WASHINGTON — Sen. Robert F. Kennedy urged yesterday that Red China be invited to join the disarmament talks in Geneva when they resume in January to make them more "meaningful" by including all the nuclear powers.

The New York Democrat, in a far-ranging Senate speech, also declared that France, by developing its own nuclear force, is setting "a dangerous example" for other European nations which sooner or later will feel the need to do the same.

While Kennedy touched on a variety of World problems, he emphasized aneed for the United States to accelerate its efforts to prevent spread of nuclear weapons.

He said this country must "enlist the help of the United Nations, and all other nations — including Communist China — in an effort to prevent nuclear catastrophe." The Chinese, Kennedy said, could pass on their nuclear capability to nations which do not have such a capability now.

Ike Denounces Demonstrations

NEW YORK — Former President Eisenhower, on the eve of his 75th birthday, said yesterday "I think its terrible" for Americans to demonstrate publicly against United States policy in Viet Nam.

In a steely voice and with his eyes flashing, he asked, "What do they know about it?"

Eisenhower discussed the question at a new conference held in connection with publication of his latest book, "Waging Peace." It comes out on his birthday, today.

He also said:

1. He received an informal promise in 1959 from the governments of India and Pakistan not to go to war over Kashmir.

2. He is worried that "some kind of moral deterioration" has set in among Americans, as evidence by efforts to evade the military draft, and signs of diminishing respect for law and order.

LBJ Up And At 'Em

WASHINGTON—President Johnson, spending more time out of bed, moved about today "with less pain and less strain." But official business was kept to a minimum.

Johnson's increased mobility was reported by Press Secretary Bill D. Moyers who also disclosed that the president's heart specialist, Dr. Willia Hurst, was heading home to Atlanta in view of the patient's steady recovery.

A major goal now is the rebuilding of Johnson's strength, so he won't tire so easily.

"He does tire," said Moyers. But he reported the doctors believe an increasing diet of solid foods will remedy that situation.

Johnson confined his official chores to some paper work and report reading. That's the way the doctors like it at this still-early stage of recovery from Friday's gall bladder surgery.

Indonesian Youth Protests Reds

JAKARTA, Indonesia — Young demonstrators stoned and sacked a Red youth headquarters here yesterday in support of the Army's anti-Communist campaign, reputed now to have the tacit approval of President Sukarno.

About 2,000 strong, the mob smashed windows, seized documents and broke furniture in the Communist Youth Hall only 100 yards from Sukarno's palace. The Hall has been a traditional gathering place for anti-Western street demonstrations.

As in other such raids since Moslem youths burned the headquarters of the Indonesian Communist Party (PKI) here last Friday, the demonstrators shouted for destruction of the party and the death of its fugitice leader, D. N. Aidit.

"Hang Aidit," they cried. "Crush the PKI."

They made a bonfire of the documents and broken furniture.

Tshombe Out — Kimba In

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo—Moise Tshombe is out and one of his old associates in the Katanga secession is in as premier of the Congo by decree of President Joseph Kasavubu.

Kasavubu dismissed Tshombe's 15-month-old government as not conforming to the Congo's "constitutional norms, the election results or the imperative political equilibrium" and named Evaristed Kimba, 39, to form a new one.

This settled at least temporarily a difference between the chief of state and the chief of government of this troubled Arfican nation as to tenure.

Tshombe, who was brought back from exile in Junly, 1964, to help cope with rebellion, popular unrest and financial difficulties, had said he should remain in office as long as Kasavubu did. Kasavubu said Tshombe would stay only as long as he wanted him to.

Rinaldi Jury Is Seated

Testimony To Begin Today

By ED FREAKLEY
DTH Staff Writer

HILLSBOROUGH — The Court presided over by selection of a 12-member jury and two alternates was completed late yesterday afternoon for the retrial of Frank Rinaldi, former UNC graduate instructor charged with the December, 1963, murder of his wife.

Testimony begins today in a special session of the Orange County Criminal Court presided over by Judge George M. Fountain.

Chapel Hill Police Captain Troy Durham is expected to be the first witness for the state.

Alternates Ordered

The jury consists of eight men and four women. Both alternates are women. Judge Fountain ordered them chosen because the trial is likely to be lengthy.

Three women were seated yesterday morning after the state and defense had turned away seven prospective jurors. First chosen was Mrs. Inez Reynolds Privette a Chapel Hill housewife and former legal secretary.

Miss Della Ann Burnette a Mebane teacher was selected as the 11th member. The jury was completed with the seating of Sarah Elizabeth Cranford, a research associate in the School of Public Health at UNC.

The first alternate was chosen after the noon recess. The state and defense then proceeded to run through more than 25 people before selecting the final alternate.

Five jurors were selected Monday and four were seated on Tuesday.

Jurors' Statement

Two of the jurors selected Tuesday told the court they would not convict the 36-year-old Rinaldi on circumstantial evidence.

He was convicted last Nov. 18 on a chain of circumstantial evidence presented by the state. The jury recommended mercy which in North Carolina carries an automatic life sentence.

The State Supreme Court in a 5-2 ruling granted the defendant a new trial this summer on the grounds that first trial Judge Raymond Mallard had admitted prejudicial and incompetent evidence.

Large Venire

Judge Fountain had called a special venire of 125 after the original venire of 56 was exhausted Tuesday.

State Solicitor Thomas D. Cooper has said he will seek another first degree conviction against Rinaldi for the alleged killing of his pregnant wife in their Chapel Hill apartment on Christmas Eve, 1963.

He and his wife, Lucille, 34, had been married since July, 1963. They had been childhood sweethearts at Waterbury, Conn.

Mrs. Rinaldi's father, William D. Begg Sr., a retired Waterbury policeman is expected to be among those testifying today.

Her brother, William Beggs Jr., an attorney in Waterbury, made frequent notes during the questioning of the prospective jurors.

The selection of jurors at last year's trial took two days opposed to the three days it took this time.

Many people were excused from duty because they said they already had opinions as to the defendant's guilt or innocence and felt they could not render a just verdict.

Several were dismissed by the state because they said they did not believe in capital punishment.

Rinaldi sat quietly between two of his three attorns listening to the questioning of his jurors. Frequently following a recess he conferred with his father and mother who were seated behind him in the courtroom.

SPU Will Fast – Not Demonstrate

"International Days of Peace Special — Soup 15 cents."

When you see this sign displayed tomorrow near the serving line of your favorite restaurant, don't be surprised. It will be part of a town-wide program operated by the Student Peace Union to raise money for the sick and starving victims of the Viet Nam war.

The Peace Union is asking residents of the Chapel Hill area to do without one meal tomorrow and eat soup instead. They ask that the money saved be donated to the SPU who will give it to CARE, Inc. for the purchase of food and medical supplies.

The drive is in conjunction with the International Days of Protest, a world-wide call for demonstrations from the Viet Nam Day Committee of Berkeley. Two days of protest against American involvement in Viet Nam, Oct. 15-16, will be staged on four continents and in over 30 American cities.

Local SPU chairman Charles (Chuck) Schunior of Evanston, Ill., said that the decision of the local group to stage a fast instead of a march represents a change in tactics. "People would notice a huge demonstration," he said, "but they wouldn't understand it in a political and moral context.

"Our aim is to approach people on a more intellectual level," Schunior said. "We want to get them thinking about what is going on in Viet Nam."

Other organizations involved in the world - wide movement have indicated that they will stage large demonstrations and civil disobedience acts against the War in Viet Nam.

Schunior said the local SPU has purchased space for an advertisement in the Chapel Hill Weekly explaining their reasons for the fast and enlisting the aid of local citizens.

Information booths will be established by the SPU and other student groups concerned with the problem in front of four eating establishments on Franklin Street and in Lenoir Hall, the Pine Room and Chase Cafeteria. Though all other eating places will be equally affected, these restaurants have been chosen because of their central location.

In Y-Court a political booth will be set up for discussion of the political beliefs of the SPU with interested members of the student body.

THEY ALSO MARCH WHO SIT AND WAIT? One faculty member found the walk from the Bell Tower to Carmichael Auditorium for Tuesday's University Day procession too long. Clad in full academic regalia, he sat on a wooden post near Woollen Gym and later joined the procession there.

Eskimos Discover Booze First Time

What happens when a group of people suddenly gains access to liquor for the first time?

This recently happened to the Baffin Island Eskimos and the results were almost predictable, according to John J. and Irma Honigmann, UNC sociology professors.

First there was overindulgence and public drunkenness, violence, inability to perform on the job, sexual promiscuity and other general alcoholic problems.

In their article "How Baffin Island Eskimo Have Learned To Use Alcohol," appearing in the latest issue of "Social Forces," The Honigmann's have traced the Eskimo's use of alcohol since 1960.

Enthusiastic

As expected, a number of the Eskimos immediately took advantage of their new opportunity with child-like enthusiasm.

But the reasons they continued to drink and their final handling of the situation were not so predictable.

Dr. Honigmann said they first started to drink in 1960 without being completely aware of the consequences. They drank too much and weren't able to perform their daily routines.

Fines and jail sentences failed to decrease these drinking problems, so officials made regulations to curb the ease with which alcohol could be purchased.

The local tavern owner was no longer allowed to sell beer to be taken off the premises.

Waiting Period

Customers at the liquor store were required to wait for three weeks after placing an order before they could pick up their booze.

Dr. Honigmann feels that these measures aided in reducing trouble. However, he thinks the rules were not the sole reason the public drunkenness and criminal offenses declined.

Instead, he feels, possibly the Eskimos by this time had learned to modify their use of alcohol and to drink more cautiously.

Why They Drink

Why did the Eskimos drink at all?

Here the Honigmanns differ with other theorists. Unlike some natives, Eskimos don't drink to assert their equality with whites or to flaunt illegal drinking.

Nor, the Honigmanns feel, do they drink because of boredom or as an attempt to escape from the pressures of town life.

The Honigmanns feel that the Eskimos have found alcohol as a source of happiness. They "drink to realize the effect of alcohol, to promote an optimal degree of intoxication, which instigates good feeling, relaxation and a sense of gaiety."

To Achieve Happiness

An important point, however, that the Honigmanns make is that while they drink to achieve happiness, Eskimos also feel that alcohol is bad and drunkenness is dangerous.

This apprehension helps them control their drinking.

Most regular Eskimo drinkers, according to the Honigmanns, are among the stable and sophisticated townspeople.

Those who stay out of trouble usually are regular job holders.

The article concludes: "They have learned to drink and stay out of trouble."

Get Well, Doggone It

WASHINGTON (AP) — Three get well cards that delighted President Johnson came in the names of the White House dogs, the beagle "Him" and the white collie "Blance," White House spokesmen said today.

Members of the President's staff, who were not identified, arranged to send the cards, which had photographs of the dogs pasted on them and were addressed to "Mr. President Johnson, U. S. Naval Hospital, Bethesda."

The first, showing the beagle, read "Dr. Master: You can see that I'm feeling sad because you're in the hospital," and was signed "Him."

Two others with the two presidential dogs together said: "We're sorry you're sick. Please hurry home." And, "Dear Master: We hope you're feeling better." Both of these were signed "Him and Blance."

From the first day he was in the hospital for his gall bladder operation, President Johnson expressed a desire to see the dogs, but so far they have not been among his hospital visitors.

Recall Petition Still Circulating

A petition demanding a recall election for president of the student body has gained some 1,000 signatures, according to Sharon Rose, the student legislator demanding Paul Dickson's recall.

Miss Rose, Student Party legislator from Spencer Dormitory, said yesterday that she had hoped the petition would be completed by today, but added that she expectes to gain the necessary 1,900 names by Friday.

"They are being circulated in the boys dorms," Miss Rose said. "We probably have over 1,000 names by now."

Spencer Dormitory, housing 160 girls, turned out 100 per cent for the recall, she said.

He will explain USIA's role in helping achieve United States foreign policy objectives, "correcting misconceptions abroad and refuting the distortions of adversaries," a statement from USIA said.

"C" AS IN CONFUSION — With campus parking regulations changing almost by the hour, it's a little difficult to keep up with all the different stickers. We thought things were getting straightened out until we found this motorcycle with a "C" automobile sticker on it.

Twins Drop LA 5-1; Final Game Today

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

The "magic" of the home park held true for the sixth straight game as Jim Grant pitched and batted the Minnesota Twins to a 5-1 conquest of the Los Angeles Dodgers which sent the World Series into the seventh and final game.

Grant, who won the Series opener and then was hit hard in the fourth, spaced six Dodger hits and smashed a three-run homer in the sixth inning which wrapped up the decision.

Now, the eight-day, six - game struggle has been reduced to a single game decision, and the tale will be told tomorrow when the probable pitchers will be Jim Kaat for Minnesota and Sandy Koufax for Los Angeles.

Bob Allison, a bust at the plate with only one previous hit, dished into a Claude Osteen serving in the fourth inning and powered a home run into the lower left field pavilion. The blow scored Earl Battey, who had reached first on an error, and gave Minnesota a 2-0 lead.

The Dodgers made their strongest bid in the sixth inning when Dick Tracewski and Maury Wills stroked on - out singles. Grant however, who allowed no hits in the top four innings, retired Jim Gilliam and Willie Davis on pop flies to squelch the treat.

Then, in the bottom of the same inning, with the Dodgers still very much in contention, the Twins blasted LA's strategy to put the game out of reach.

Reliever Howie Reed walked Allison, and with two out, the outfielder stole second With the pitcher due to bat next, Reed issued an intentional base-on-balls to Frank Quilici.

Then, just to prove it was his day, Grant drove Reed's first pitch to him — 392 feet into the left-center field bleachers to plate three runs and send the count to 5-0.

In the seventh, Dodger right fielder Ron Fairly became the first player to hit more than one homer in the series, when he couted his second solo round-tripper more than 400 feet to right-center.

But the blow merely served to avert a shutout, as Grant forced the Dodgers down the chute for his second win of the Classic.

Maury Wills collected his eleventh hit during the game, and needs three today in the finale to break the record of 13 which Bobby Richardson of the Yankees set last year.

Jim Kaat is the definite Twin starter, and Sandy Koufax will likely be LA Manager Walt Alston's choice. If Koufax starts, he will be pitching with only two days rest, as he did during the final two weeks of the regular season, and as Grant did so successfully today. However, Alston could conceivably go with Don Drysdale, who last pitched on Sunday.

WILSON TO ADDRESS SL ON DUAL STANDARD'

SP Floor Leader Don Wilson said yesterday he will address Student Legislature tonight concerning the University administration's recent policy decision on the "dual standard."

The administration has refused to accept unequal sentences for male and female violators of the same campus code rule.

Legislature meets at 7:0 p.m. on the top floor of New East.

Special Flight To New York

A chartered UNC to New York flight has been organized by a group of UNC students for Thanksgiving holiday.

It was announced yesterday that 60 of the 100 seats—$46 per person, round-trip—have been taken.

Any students or faculty members living in the New York-New England area are invited to take advantage of this reduced-rate flight.

Interested persons may contact Al Warren (966-5212) or Joel Simpson (929-5288).

A $20 deposit must be made by all passengers by Tuesday. The remainder of the charge is payable anytime before Oct. 28.

The flight will depart from Raleigh-Durham Airport Wednesday, Nov. 24 at 2 p.m. The return flight will leave La Guardia Airport, New York, Sunday, Nov. 28 at 2 p.m.

Warren said yesterday that members of the group organizing the flight hope to form a metropolitan club which will be able to offer similar chartered flights, maybe at lower rates.

Of Time And Thomas Wolfe

Chapel Hill's Tom Wolfe is not unlike the weather.

Everybody talks about him, but nobody does anything about it.

Nearly half a century has elapsed since the gaunt and lonely adolescent first stalked into "Pulpit Hill" and began to absorb the bitter-sweet images that would find their fruition on the pages of "Look Homeward, Angel."

Nearly half a century has spun by while scholars and historians and critics and sociologists have probed and dissected and analyzed and eulogized. It has been a half century of prideful self-discovery for the University.

It has been a half century of talk.

With the exception of the Thomas Wolfe Collection in the library, there is no token on this campus — no building, no plaque, no statue — that even vaguely hints at the fact that one of the eternal giants of world literature once wrote his themes on toilet paper in a dingy room in Old East.

There is no tangible symbol at the University that might serve as an inspiration to undergraduates and a reminder to those who have gone before.

We are wondering why.

We would like to see a statue — an angel perhaps — erected in some conspicuous location on campus. Polk Place suggests itself. The stretch of green between South Building and the Library is the intellectual hub of campus and would offer a symmetrical site for a monument of this sort. The inscription would borrow Wolfe's own words.

"To Thomas Wolfe
who came to this University in 1916.
O lost, and by the wind grieved,
Ghost come back again."

The angel would face westward, towards Asheville, towards home.

Armistead Maupin, Jr.

It Could Be Verse

It's one of those little things — one of those subtle, lilliputian annoyances that nibble away at our patience without ever taking a really big chomp.

But it nibbles all the same.

For three years it has nibbled and we have stood it. We have gritted our teeth at ball games and pep rallies and assemblies and we have stood it. We can stand it no longer. We must, and we shall, bring this abomination out into the open.

Hark the sound of Tar Heel voices,
Ringing clear and true,
Singing Carolina's praises,
Shouting N.C.U.

That's what it says. Shouting N.C.U.

Why, surely you've heard of N.C.U. It's the brightest star above whose radiance shines so clear. It's the priceless gem that receives all our praises. It's the only word that rhymes with "true."

To be sure, there is an institution in Durham by the name of N.C.C. Furthermore, the General Assembly has recently decided that a similar institution exists in Raleigh by the name of N.C.S.U. But, search as we might, we are unable to locate this N.C.U.

If only that aspiring Oscar Hammerstein of the dim past had bothered to substitute the word "free" for the word "true," it might have then been possible to replace N.C.U. with U.N.C.

But perhaps this is too much to ask of the man who stole his tune from the Cornell alma mater.

Armistead Maupin, Jr.

The Leftovers

It has been well over five months since the Students for a Democratic Society set up shop in Chapel Hill to provide "a meeting place for liberals and radicals."

We don't know a great deal about what this organization is doing at Carolina, but we hear they had a grand time last summer.

At their national conclave in June, they decided to strike any mention of opposition to Communism from their constitution.

The New Leader, the rather stuffy left-wing journal, did not take the matter lightly. In its opinion the Students had stepped a little too far out of line.

On September 27, the League for Industrial Democracy an organization with strong socialist leanings and the parent of SDS, decided once and for all to cut off funds from the fledgling group.

LID executive secretary Tom Kahn pointed out that the chief reason for cutting off the money was the fact that his organization was on the brink of losing its tax-exempt status. We suspect that the old fogey radicals of the LID were also growing a trifle nervous about the activities of their junior counterparts.

Perhaps it was the decision to scratch criticism of Communism from the constitution that prompted the distrust of the parent organization.

Perhaps it was the statement by SDSer Clark Kissinger to the effect that the organization should send men into army camps to urge inductees not to fight in Viet Nam.

Then again, it might have been the pictures of Lenin hanging on the walls of the New York SDS office.

Letters To The Editor

The Daily Tar Heel welcomes letters to the editor on any subject, particularly on matters of local or University interest. Letters must be typed, double spaced and must include the name and address of the author or authors. Names will not be omitted in publication. Letters should be kept as brief as possible. The DTH reserves the right to edit for length or libel.

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Your cartoon in The Daily Tar Heel of October 9, 1965 has prompted us to voice our opinions on the ever-present debate as to "Who is Snobbing Whom and Why."

Being females we, of course, are biased to our side of the argument; however, being rational human beings, we attempt to see both sides.

So our boys at UNC think that the majority of the Coeds are self-centered, snobbish, over-dated, over-rated, pseudo-naive products of mass production. They complain that the coeds are unfriendly and walk, talk and elevate their noses in a far too superior manner for the quality of their merchandise.

As the products of girls' schools, and having been members of the T.G.I.F. (Thank God It's Friday!) Union for two years, we feel qualified to say that there is a Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde difference in the Carolina Gentleman during the week and on the weekend.

Our main argument centers around the fact that a girl is chastized for not smiling or speaking when passed by a member of the opposite sex. It has become evident that should the girl in question be a "knock-out," upon smiling she sets herself up for an instant "snow job." On the other hand, should she be slightly less than Miss Campus Queen, she is the immediate recipient of innumerable crude remarks and other low-blows to the ego.

So, what is a girl to do? She either walks around exposing herself to the elements, or dons her mask of stone for protection.

Another fact which has received too little attention is that the Carolina Co-ed has not been the one to acclaim her superiority. She did not build her pedestal nor did she ascend it on her own. Nevertheless, she now stands there in the minds of her male counterparts, forced to weather the storm which accompanies such a position.

This campus is a two-way street upon which we both must walk. Therefore, we believe that a few changes need to be made. Would it be so difficult for both parties to give a little, and accept each other for what they are?

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

By now it is history. Those four little Carolina freshmen nurses do not, have not, and will not exist. Their imaginary complaints to you, however, were not necessarily all deceitful lies. I have received numerous phone calls from the Nurses Dorm in the last week complaining of my "harshness" toward the lovelies in my former letter of October the eighth. I tried to convince them that I was not really sore at them for that low flying broom which bent my car antenna (though it was costly to replace). Realizing that Halloween is approaching, I have not been unduly annoyed by the consistent buzzing of the water tower and our dormitory, but I would truly appreciate it if the nurses would either get their brooms "T" stickered, or park them in a larger broom closet rather than in our visitors parking area. I have offered to send each of the unfortunate freshmen nurses a small token of admiration — just to show that there are no hard feelings.

As for the Carolina Coeds who have supported my views, especially the Texas-oriented women of Winston, I feel that perhaps they are more representative of the student body. Surely, neither the nurses nor the girls of Whitehead, who come out only on Ground Hog Day, can complain of being unduly undated. The only consolation may be that since everything is bigger in my home state of Texas, perhaps somewhere we have bigger dogs.

Raincoat Division Nurses Defend, Texan Charges

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Carolina students may be classified in any number of ways — according to school or major, dorm, home town, dining hall preference (haven't you ever noticed that the warp and woof of Pine Room People is different from that of Lenoir Hall People?) There are many possibilities, but only one classification system neatly and simply divides the Carolina Zoo into two personality species. Leopards and tigers are distinguished by the cut of their coats, and Carolina divides into the Navy Blue Raincoats and the Tan Raincoats. Anyone not immediately recognizable on a rainy day as a NBR or a TR is simply a leopard without his spots or a tiger without his stripes.

As a result of a staggering amount of research involving extensive interviewing, compilation and tabulation, the author's encyclopedic knowledge is ample for telling the two species apart on the sunniest of days. The following are but a few of the findings:

Navy Blue Raincoats never write their parents but sometimes go home on weekends; Tannies write once a week but avoid home, preferring to ask for money through the mails.

NBR Boys played in the Sex Bowl, and TR Girls played in the Sex Bowl.

Tan People are neurotic about stepping on cracks in the sidewalk; Navy Blue People are un-neurotic about stepping on Tan People.

NBR's think Mad Magazine is sophisticated adult trash; Tannies think it's trash for little kids.

Ten people signed up for an average of 5.73 matches on their Operation Match questionnaires; Navies averaged 13.99.

Tan Raincoats once read a filthy book for its literary merit.

If your raincoat coesn't match you, either you were on LSD when you bought it, or your mother bought it for you. To right such a serious error, you must find someone of the opposite species and same size to exchange with, or begin reading your horoscope every day. The stars are never wrong.

UNC Presidents

Dr. Chase Led UNC In Campus Expansion

(This is another article in a series on Presidents of the University.)

By OTELIA CONNOR

HARRY W. CHASE

The University has been fortunate in that it has always found the right man to head the University in its chronic states of crises. The only period in its history in which it seems not to have been confronted with a life and death situation was in the relatively quiet period between 1835-1861, during Governor Swain's administration.

President Chase was the man of the hour in the decade of the twenties after World War I, when greatly increased attendance at high school made it imperative for the colleges to take care of the ever-swelling numbers who wished to enter.

"President Venable's background and training was in the field of science. The University he projected reflected in every aspect his devotion to the scientific method and sound scholarship. He was a superb teacher, scientist and organizer."

"President Edward Kidder Graham was a humanist. Literature and philosophy were basic in his training. He saw his task as that of having the University develop, in student and citizen, the ideals of service, civic - mindedness, and inner spiritual resources. The University had its greatest development in the field of ideas and spirit under E. K. Graham."

President Chase had a different background. Born in Groveland, Mass., 1883, graduated at Dartmouth, 1904; M.A. at Dartmouth, 1907-08; Ph.D. Clark University 1910; trained in the fields of theoretical and social psychology; he came to the University as a professor of Psychology in the Department of Education, 1910. When President Venable resigned the presidency in 1914, Dr. Chase became one of President Edward Kidder Graham's chief assistants until Graham's death, October, 1918. Upon the death of Dean Stacy, January, 1919, Chase became Dean of the Faculty.

In April, 1920, in the presence of a "notable gathering, Harry Woodburn Chase, tested as versatile scholar, teacher, and administrator, assumed the duties of the presidency of the University to lead it through what proved to be one of the most distinctive and thrilling decades of its life."

The physical expansion of the campus under Chase in the twenties, the development of the South Campus and the off-campus expansion to the east and southeast have been reviewed previously.

Among the academic accomplishments under Chase were the development of a scientific Department of Sociology around which could be built a School of Public Welfare, an agency which would train county officers, enabling the University to render distinctive contributions to the development of the human wealth of North Carolina; the training in the graduate school of the experts in all fields essential to the upbuilding of North Carolina and the South; the establishment of an institute for research in the field of the social sciences to study the social aspects of the life of the State and region; the building up of a great library and the training of librarians to supply expert service to schools, colleges and public libraries of the South.

He developed courses in psychology, and introduced in the curriculum the clinical viewpoint and applied psychology.

To train experts for the South's rebuilding, President Chase established the departments of music, psychology, sociology, and journalism, the schools of commerce and public welfare, engineering, and library science, re-direction of the Graduate School, establishment of the Institute of Government, the development of the Southern Historical Collection, and the organization of the University of North Carolina Press, all of which were essential in effecting the transition of the University from the status of a college to that of a well-rounded university. It was admitted to the Association of American Universities in 1922, an organization of universities in the United States and Canada which had obtained notable distinction in the fields of graduate study and research. UNC became the 25th university to be admitted.

President Chase transferred the Law School, which was a coaching school for bar examinations when he took office, into a real professional law school in the modern sense.

President Chase was not satisfied to have a good local or provincial school. His insistance upon the attainment and maintenance of national standards was in sharp contrast to the administrators of other Southern institutions.

The position of the University in the education development of the state, the South, and the nation were greatly enhanced under President Chase's administration, and under his leadership it became "one of the notable universities of the nation."

The crowning glory of Chase's administration was his loyalty to principles of academic freedom and the right to teach and investigate, as demonstrated in his fight against the Pool Bill, and any outside interference in the effective adherence to these principles. Thus the University came to full stature and maturity under his superb leadership.

In 1930, President Chase was called to the presidency of the University of Illinois. From there he went to the presidency of the University of New York.

Koob Egdelwonk, Boy Thief

An Ann Landers fan is pretty mad because she isn't "getting much help from the outside" while "trying to raise our son to be an honest, law-abiding citizen."

She wrote the syndicated columnist that her son had swiped an ash tray from a hotel room and the only reaction of the manager after being informed of the theft was:

"Your boy doesn't owe us anything. We want people to take our ash trays. It is good advertising."

The youngster probably wasn't a bit surprised. Earlier, he had argued in front of his mother that he was only carrying off a "souvenir."

Ann Landers said she herself has been told "people are expected to walk off with items bearing the name of the establishment."

Koob Egdelwonk, a good friend of mine, saw the Landers column and decided to see if he also could collect a few "souvenirs,"

"What happened?" I asked him.

"Well," Koob said, "first I visited a local gas station and said I wanted my tank filled up.

"Then I drove off without paying for the gasoline.

"The next day, I stopped by the station to see the people's reaction, and you know what they said?"

"What?"

"They asked if I could go to Nevada to check out their gasoline. They said they admired my acceleration, and when I expressed shock over their unusual attitude, they assured me it was perfectly normal. The service station attendant explained his company 'admires drivers with tigers in their tanks. They're good advertising.'"

"Where'd you go after that?"

"Next," he said, "I dropped in a drug store and walked off without paying for some hair tonic."

"And?"

"It was another case of jungle beasts. The clerk snickered and said I shouldn't strive for dignity and honesty. 'We go for tigers — not lions,' she declared.

"After shoplifting at several other places and each time getting praised, I decided to call it a day.

"But when I got home, I found that all my possessions were lying on the sidewalk. Seems my landlady had evicted me for not paying the rent."

Texas Holds On To No. 1

The Texas Longhorns maintained a slipping grip on first place this week in the Associated Press football ratings. The Razorbacks of Arkansas have a golden opportunity to move into number one as they take on Texas Saturday in a nationally televised contest.

Arkansas puts a 16-game winning streak against the Longhorns. Texas has lost only once in the last 26 games, to Arkansas last year by one point. The battle traditionally goes a long way towards deciding the outcome of the Southwest Conference race.

Nebraska gained a stronger hold on second place and Michigan State remains fourth in the ratings. Duke was the only ACC team receiving votes.

1. Texas 4-0
2. Nebraska 4-0
3. Arkansas 4-0
4. Mich. State 4-0
5. Georgia 4-0
6. Southern Calif. 3-0-1
7. Purdue 3-0-1
8. Notre Dame 3-1
9. Florida 3-1
10. Miss. State 4-0.

Lucky 13

There's a surprising statistic beside the name of Bob Hume when University of North Carolina superlatives are charted. It reads: MOST PASSES CAUGHT, 13. Hume doesn't find that number unlucky at all.

As a matter of fact, the 6-1, 190 pounder from Memphis, Tenn., considers himself quite a fortunate guy. Due to the misfortune of a teammate.

Hume, who will start at wingback for the Tar Heels against Maryland, was considered an also - ran defensive back when the season opened. He had been shifted from end, where he played both offense and defense last season. But he wasn't seeing much duty in workouts.

Then came a shocker for the coaching staff. Bud Phillips, of Charlotte, who looked especially bright as a pass receiver on the wing, separated a shoulder. But was doing so well he had the job all to himself. Carolina, for a day, was a team bad in need of a wingback.

The first name that came up was Jimmy Byrd, the squad's smallest but pluckiest member. He was a quarterback, but he would volunteer his 157 pounds for tackle if the need arose. Then someone suggested Hume. He had size, good speed and some experience from the previous year.

Hume, who moved ahead of Jimmy because of his physique, soon had the staff happy. He set about doing his job and in no time at all moved like a veteran. His best game to date was against North Carolina State last Saturday. He caught six passes, many on key downs.

"Another good thing about Bob is his blocking," notes Assistant Coach Vito Ragazzo. "He tries to knock somebody down every play. He's eager and he's done us a real fine job."

Incidentally, Phillips is back but he must work his way back into a starting role.

Big Swede With Big Goal

By BOB PAGE
DTH Sports Writer

Kenth Svensson traveled 6,000 miles in September to reach 183 feet by May.

The milage is roughly the distance from his home, Lund, Sweden, to Chapel Hill. The footage is his goal in track.

He wants to return home next year with a discus throw of 183 feet, which is what he figures will be needed to qualify for the European Track and Field Championships in Hungary next summer.

Svensson is the first recipient of a full athletic grant-in-aid for track at Carolina.

Kenth had definite reasons behind his bold decision to leave home and come to Carolina: more and better coaching, weather, good athletic facilities, the experience itself and a good education.

A year ago, Svensson was throwing the discus about 169 feet. Last August he reached 172-6 his longest official throw.

However, he received individual coaching only about twice a month during the short season there which runs from late May to late September. He plans to work all year round here.

UNC track coach Joe Hilton says, "Kenth is one of our brightest prospects. Frankly, I think he's ready to do better than 172 right now. He's thrown better than 180 feet in practice."

In April Kenth graduated from a school that is comparable to a junior college in the U. S. He is 21 and because he competed for a year after age 20, the NCAA allows him only two years of varsity eligibility.

How does one learn enough about a school in a foreign land to decide to spend three years with it? And how does a track coach decide to sign up an athlete he has never scouted?

The answer is Dr. Carl Sarndal, who did post graduate work in biochemistry here and helped with the track team. He just happens to be from Stockholm, Sweden. He served as a two-way communication link between Svensson and Hilton, who became impressed by the athletic and academic records and Sarndal's reports on Svensson.

Tommy Clark, UNC's former three-time ACC high jump champ, helped. Clark competed abroad, including Sweden, in Amateur Athletic Union meets. His accounts of the athletic program, facilities and coaching at Carolina appealed to Svensson.

The first record Svensson can shoot for in varsity competition is the new school record, 164-5 1-2 Bo Wood in the spring at the Penn Relays. The ACC mark, was set at the Penn Relays this year at about $167'.

Svensson's last meet for Carolina should be in May, 1968. . . place your bets!

Attention All Prospects

Coach Dean Smith is requesting all candidates for the freshman team to report to Woollen Gym dressed and ready to go at 7 p.m.

Larry Bown, who made the first team All-ACC squad as a guard here as a senior in 1963 and who later made the first team Olympic squad, will coach the frosh. This will be his first year as a coach.

Anyone who wants to go out for the varsity must see Coach Smith by Friday. Varsity practice will start next Monday.

Last winter Smith's team won its last seven games in regular season and finished 15-9 for the year. Big wins included two triumphs over nationally ranked Duke and a victory over ACC tourney champ N. C. State at Raleigh.

All American Billy Cunningham is gone but Smith has Larry Miller coming up to join Bob Lewis, who averaged 20 points a game last year as a sophomore.

There will also be an organizational meeting of the freshman and varsity wrestling squads on Friday at 4:30 in the wrestling room. Coach Sam Barnes urges all prospects to attend.

The last time UNC was shutout in Kenan Stadium was by LSU in 1961, 30-0.

Jim Hickey is the twenty - eighth varsity football coach at UNC.

Foster Fitz-Simons, veteran Playmakers director - choreographer, is staging the production, with settings by Tommy Rezzuto, costumes by Irene Smart Rains, and lighting by Russell Graves. James Holmes, composer of "Con Amore," is musical director and conductor.

Playmakers Business Manager John W. Parker announced that good seats still remain for all thre performances. Reserved seat tickets are available at the Playmakers Business Office, 214 Abernethy Hall, and at Ledbetter - Pickard's. Tickets will also be available one hour prior to each performance at the box-office in Memorial Hall.

Homecoming Panel Picked

Judges have been chosen for the Homecoming Queen Contest to be held next Wednesday in the Ram Club Room in Kenan Fieldhouse.

Entries for the 6:30 p.m. event will undergo the scrutiny of Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey, Athletic Director Chuck Erickson, Mrs. Douglas Fambrough and Mrs. Diane Wells of the women's physical education department.

Entries will be accepted at the GM information desk until 6 p.m. Monday. Any organization may sponsor as many entrants as it wishes, at $5 each.

The name and address of the entrant and the name of the sponsor must accompany each entry. All entries must be UNC students, and the girls should wear cocktail dresses for the contest.

Yack Picture Schedule

Final pictures for the Yack will be taken from Monday, Oct. 18 through Wednesday, Oct. 27. Senior women should wear black sweaters and pearls. Other women should wear black sweaters.

Men must wear dark coats and ties. No madras can be worn.

Oct. 18-22 — late juniors ($1 fee)

Oct. 18-19 — medical technology, physical therapy, dental hygiene, and all nurses.

Oct. 20 — law; late medical technology, physical therapy, dental hygiene, and nurses ($1 fee). None of these categories except law will be accepted later.

Oct. 21-22 — law, pharmacy, dentistry, and first year social work.

Oct. 25 — medical school and public health; late law, pharmacy, and dentistry ($1 fee). Only medicine will be accepted at a later date.

Oct. 26 — medical school and public health.

Oct. 27 — late medical school and public health ($1 fee); late fraternity and sorority ($2 fee).

Students who cannot come on the scheduled day may come earlier.

Many Approaches Made — Foushee

By ED FREAKLEY
DTH Staff Writer

HILLSBOROUGH — Alfred L. Foushee testified yesterday that Frank Rinaldi attempted to hire him "a dozen or more times" to kill Mrs. Rinaldi in 1963.

Foushee, a 28-year-old Negro and chief witness for the state, told the court "Each time I said no."

Frank Joseph Rinaldi, a former UNC graduate instructor, in charged with the Christmas Eve murder of his 34-year-old pregnant wife in 1963.

Gordon Battle, one of three defense attorneys, asked the Negro waiter on cross examination if he didn't hit Mrs. Rinaldi over the head to rob her "and tie something around her head to keep her from screaming."

Foushee sternly said, "I did not."

Rinaldi, 36, was convicted last Nov. 18 but was granted a new trial by the North Carolina Supreme Court this summer because first trial Judge Raymond Mallard "admitted incompetent evidence." Rinaldi had been sentenced to life imprisonment.

Foushee testified that he was working in a Chapel Hill restaurant when Rinaldi first approached him and hired him to clean his apartment.

Foushee said that after he cleaned the defendant's apartment he met Rinaldi about a week later and was asked if he was interested in "making a lot of money."

"I asked him if it was hauling whisky or dope," Foushee said, "but he said it was more horrible than that."

"He told me he wanted me to kill his wife. He said he wanted me to strangle her, or choke her, or even rape her. I told him I couldn't do it. He asked me if I knew anyone who would do it for $500. I told him I didn't."

Foushee testified that he later told the owner of the restaurant where he worked about the Rinaldi offer.

Foushee said he saw Rinaldi on Dec. 24, the day of the murder, at Eastgate Shopping Center.

He quoted Rinaldi as saying, "Al, Al it's over . . . it's done."

Under cross - examination, Foushee admitted he had held several jobs after being fired as a waiter.

He told the court he did not have a key to the Rinaldi apartment.

Mrs. Rinaldi was found dead in the apartment after she had been beaten about the face and a scarf had been tied around her head.

Earlier in the day the prosecution presented evidence attempting to show the motivation for the murder of Mrs. Rinaldi.

Robert J. Courville, Raleigh district manager for the Prudential Insurance Co., testified his firm issued a $20,000 double indemnity policy on June 3, 1963, with Frank Joseph Rinaldi named as the beneficiary Courville stated the application for the policy was received on June 4, 1963. It bore the name of Mrs. Rinaldi's maiden name, Lucille Begg, as the applicant.

The policy was forwarded by John F. Sipp, an insurance agent in Chapel Hill. Sipp was the primary witness for the defendant at the first trial last Nov. 18. He testified last year saying he was with Rinaldi n a shopping trip to Durham during the time of the murder.

The state attempted to show there were possible arguments between Rinaldi and his wife, but the defense strongly objected and Judge George M. Fountain sustained the objections.

An aunt of Mrs. Rinaldi's, Miss Lucy Begg, of Waterbury, Conn. which is also the home of the defendant and his slain wife, told the jury the couple had "two very bad arguments." Judge Fountain ruled the statement out of order.

Solicitor Thomas B. Cooper Jr. asked her, "Did you know they had any fights?" Objections were sustained.

A red-faced Rinaldi listened closely and frequently handed notes to his attorney as the state began the fourth day of [illegible]

Chapel Hill Police Captain Coy Durham, first witness in the trial testified that when he arrived at the Rinaldi apartment on the day of the murder Mrs. Rinaldi was sprawled on the floor and was wearing pajamas, housecoat and shoes.

Her face was badly beaten and a scarf was knotted about her head, Durham said.

A lamp was lying on the floor and her purse was open, with several letters scattered on the floor.

Durham said he found Rinaldi and Sipp in the dining room of the duplex apartment.

...naldi told him someone "has killed and robbed my wife."

Sipp, Durham said, told him he and Rinaldi had been on a shopping trip to Durham.

Sipp was quoted as saying Rinaldi opened the door, going inside and saying "My God, someone has killed my wife."

Mrs. Rinaldi's brother, William D. Begg, Jr., a Waterbury attorney, told the court of the Rinaldi marriage in Waterbury on July 31, 1963. He said they left Waterbury Sept. 1 to go to Chapel Hill and that his sister came back "rather unexpectedly" about eight days after she had left.

The defense objected to his words, "rather unexpectedly" and this was sustained by Judge Fountain.

Begg said his sister lived during that time with his aunt, Miss Lucy Begg. He said Lucille Rinaldi returned to Chapel Hill Dec. 19, adding "that was the last time I saw her alive."

Begg, in reply to a question by the solicitor, said his sister and Rinaldi "didn't go together constantly. They dated about six months before they were married." He added they had associated for at least 10 years.

Later, under cross examination, Begg was asked if his sister and Rinaldi had not dated together since their senior days in high school. He said they did not.

Dodgers Take Series, 2-0

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

The blazing fastball of Sandy Koufax cooled the bats of the powerful Minnesota Twins yesterday, as the Los Angeles Dodgers claimed baseball's World Championship.

Pitching practically the entire game without the use of his usually untouchable curveball, Koufax yielded only three hits and struck out ten while blanking the Twins for the second straight time.

Left fielder Lou Johnson gave the Dodgers all the runs they needed when he led off the fourth inning with a homer off the left field foul pole screen. Ron Fairley, who tied Maury Wills for the Series lead in hits with 11, followed Johnson's big blow with a double to right, and scored a just-to-be-sure run on Wes Parker's single.

That was LA's third straight hit, and it chased Twins' starter Jim Kaat. But four relievers held LA scoreless the rest of the way.

Those two runs and a fielding gem by Jim Gilliam, however, were all Koufax needed for the biggest of his 28 wins of the year. Except for yielding a pair of walks in the first, the lefty faced trouble only once.

That was in the fifth, when a double by Frank Quilici and a walk to Rich Rollins put Twins at first and second with one out. Gilliam made the play - of - the - game when he flagged down a scorching grounder by Zoilo Versalles back of third and forced Quilici at third. Joe Nossek ended the Twins' best chance to score when he hit into a forceout.

Koufax had retired 12 in a row when Harmon Killebrew singled to left with one out in the ninth. But the Dodger ace refused to be trumped, as he struck out Earl Battey and Bob Allison to wrap up his team's third World's Championship since moving from Brooklyn eight years ago.

Scooter Hit Telephone Pole

No one was seriously injured. About $400 damage was done to the vehicle.

Parking

Four parking areas will be closed to parking and traffic at 11 p.m. tonight.

The areas being restricted are the area between Woollen Gym and the Tin Can, Bell Tower Road between Bell Tower and Parker Dormitory, the Ram Varsity parking lot behind Kenan Field House, and the area behind the nurses dormitory adjacent to South Gate No. 6.

Students Give NSA Report

By JOHN GREENBACKER
DTH Political Writer

Twelve delegates and alternates to last August's congress of the National Student Association described the congress' activities and answered critics before a crowd of 25 in Gerrard Hall Wednesday night.

Five delegates described the activities of each of the congress' five main committees and listed the important resolutions and directives which the congress passed for the committees.

The education committee of the congress passed four important bills formulating programs to educate present and future college students about financial aid they may obtain, according to delegate Bob Powell.

The congress approved these measures, and also directed the NSA national directors to support the Higher Education Bill passed by the U. S. Congress this year.

The committee on student in

The committee on student involvement in society obtained the congress' approval of resolutions objecting to the treatment of student demonstrators in Alabama, criticizing the administration of President Johnson's War on Poverty program, and recommending improvement in the War on Poverty in rural areas of the nation.

Delegate Teddy O'Toole who served on this committee, said mismanagement and corruption in the War on Poverty prompted NSA criticism of the program.

Berkeley

The committee on student rights passed a controversial resolution supporting last year's demonstrations by students at the University of California at Berkeley.

The congress felt the resolution was justified because Berkeley administrators had stopped all campus political activity and offered no means of student redress, according to delegate Sandra Burden.

Bills calling for sex education in college classrooms and defining the role of a student government on campus were also passed by this committee.

The congress committee on universities and the university community passed some non - controversial legislation, including resolutions advocating the inclusion of graduate students in campus affairs and the improvement of university life for commuter students.

UNC-CH presented its program for the establishment of campus residence college systems, according to delegate Jeff Davis.

The most controversial legislation to be passed by the congress came from the committee on international affairs

Resolutions condemning South Africa for its apartheid policy of segregation, and the United States for its intervention in the Dominican Republic in violation of the OAS charter were passed.

Dictators Salazar of Portugal and France of Spain were criticized, but the body had no criticism for Eastern European nations because of their changing policies, according to delegate Wright Doyle.

The congress criticized the United States for intervening in Viet Nam, but said U. S. presence in that country was necessary to guarantee the freedom of the people.

Red China in U. N.

A resolution calling for U.S. support of Red China's admission to the United Nations was also passed.

During the question and answer period, the delegates revealed that they had nearly split their seven votes in the congress on the Dominican and Red Chinese resolutions, but were nearly unanimous in their support of the Berkeley resolution.

Criticize NSA

Armistead Maupin criticized the delegates for supporting the resolution against "Alabama justice" while not condemning the Watts riots in Los Angeles.

Jim Smith attacked the delegates for not supporting what they "knew" was the student body's position on the Red China and other resolutions.

Members of the delegation said NSA resolutions on controversial national and international issues were necessary to direct the NSA national directors when attending international student conferences.

NSA benefits, such as low cost accident insurance, student government guides and student discount travel cards were described.

Maupin called on Student Government to disaffiliate SDS and the SPU."

Calling for continued affiliation, Doyle asked that more conservatives join NSA and help modify the organization's radical stands on some issues.

Women's Visiting Extended In New Dormitory Rules

By FRED THOMAS
DTH News Editor

The Residence Hall Visiting Board Wednesday signed into effect a new set of regulations which completely change womens' visiting privilieges in men's residence halls.

The new rules provide for extension of hours, grant access for couples to previously restricted residence hall areas and permit the use of some dormitory social rooms, snack bars and lounges on weeknights.

Men's Residence Council Chairman Sonny Pepper yesterday described the ratification of the new regulations as "a real milestone in residence hall social privileges."

Pepper has concentrated on the revision of campus visiting rules since his appointment as chairman of the MRC.

The proposal was implemented by Pepper; Penny Scovil, of the visiting board; Dot Fulchum, of the Dean of Women's Office; and Fred Schroeder, assistant dean of men.

Under the new agreement, a visiting board — consisting of representatives from the Men's Residence Council, Women's Residence Council, Dean of Men's office and Dean of Women's office — will visit all residence halls at the beginning of each semester to determine if social facilities are suitable for guests.

A committee of three persons from each residence hall, appointed by its president and approved by its executive committee, will be responsible for the use and maintenance of respective social rooms.

An adequate number of chairs and sofas to commodate a reasonable number of people must be in each social room. Floors, walls and all furnishings must be in acceptable condition.

Entrances to social areas must not go through any living area. (Special provisions are made for Morrison, Old East and Old West floor social rooms.)

Two copies for a social activities form must be submitted before any planned social activity. One copy will go to the Dean of Men's and Dean of Women's offices. The Dean of Women's office will notify local girls schools that the planned event is a University-approved function.

The second copy will be for the MRC financial files.

Pepper pointed out that these forms will be required only for activities which involve all residents of a dormitory—i.e., a party which involves expenditure of residence hall funds.

Such functions must be chaperoned by either a married graduate student, a housemaster or a faculty member.

Individual couples may use social facilities at any approved time.

General rules:

Women will be permitted in designated social areas and entry halls only. All residence hall conduct rules must be observed.

These privileges will be restricted to those residence halls approved by the visiting board. Violators of any rules will be liable to prosecution by residence council courts.

Use of first-floor social rooms only in Grimes, Ruffin, Manley, Mangum, Aycock, Graham, Stacy, Lewis, Everette, Connor, Avery, Parker, Teague, Battle - Vance - Pettigrew (TV room in Vance only) and Alexander (basement TV room only) will be permitted Friday, 7 p.m. to 1 a.m.; Saturday, 2 p.m. to 1 a.m. (football weekends, 4:30 p.m. to 1 a.m.); Sunday, 2 p.m. to 11 p.m.

Lobbies, snack bars and first - floor lounges in Ehringhaus, Craige, and Morrison—Monday through Thursday, noon to 11 p.m.; Friday, noon to 1 a.m.; Saturday, 10 a.m. to 1 a.m.; Sunday 20 a.m. to 11 p.m.

Morehead College Social Room (basement of Graham), Joyner first - floor social room (Teague basement), Craige Red Garter Room, Carr social room — Monday through Thursday, 7 p.m. to 11 p.m.; Friday 7 p.m. to 1 a.m.; Saturday, 2 p.m. to 1 a.m.; Sunday 2 p.m. to 11 p.m.

Old East, Old West and Morrison floor social rooms may be used for planned social events only — Friday, 7 p.m. to 1 a.m.; Saturday 7 p.m. to 1 a.m.

In Morrison, women must use designated elevators, and only male students will be allowed to go onto wings.

Pepper said that although these rules will hold in most cases, permission may be granted for a change in hours for a special event by contacting the visiting board.

No Deadline For Petition

The Oct. 10 deadline for the recall petition has been dropped, according to Sharon Rose Student Party legislator who demanded President Dickson's recall.

David Keel, of the ZBT House, who is collecting the petitions from around campus, said yesterday that more than 700 names have been counted.

However, most fraternities, sororities and men's resident halls have not turned in copies yet, making the total more than 1,000.

Keel said the deadline was dropped because it would be difficult to collect the required number of signatures and count them before Oct. 19. Some 1,900 names are needed to make the petition effective.

Cheerleader Tryouts Set

Tryouts for varsity and freshmen cheerleaders will be held at Kenan Stadium next week.

Head cheerleader Jerry Houle said yesterday that practices for all interested students will be held Monday through Thursday afternoons at 4.

New cheerleaders will be selected Friday. Six men and six women freshmen will be chosen along with two alternates. Two or three men will be added to the varsity squad, he said.

A SAD STORY—The little red envelope under the windshield can cause all kinds of complications. For a special report by DTH Phogographer Ernest Robl on the towing away of illegally parked cars by campus policemen, read tomorrow's Daily Tar Heel. Space limitations prevented the report from being printed today.

PHI MU ALUMNAE

All alumnae of Phi Mu who are interested in joining the local alumna group are asked to contact Mrs. Reed McCracken at 942-1116 after 6 p.m.

NSA Group Meets Today

The student's role in college policy making will be the topic of discussion at this year's National Student Association regional meeting to be held Friday and Saturday in Greensboro.

Dean of Men William G. Long will give the keynote address. Student representatives will also hear remarks by Al Lowenstein, former N. C. State professor who managed Hubert Humphrey's vice presidential campaign.

The two-day meeting will feature workshops and seminars on aspects of the main topic.

UNC delegates will sit on committees dealing with judicial reforms, course evaluation, student rules, student awareness programs and student representation on faculty committees.

Nearly 40 colleges and universities in the Carolinas and Virginia have been invited to send delegations to the meeting.

Duke Tickets

The Daily Tar Heel has received several letters complaining that tickets to the North Carolina - Duke football game were sold out without UNC student having had a chance to get one.

But it ain't so.

The game is a sellout all right but North Carolina student tickets haven't even been put on sale. They won't be until about two weeks before the game.

And in the last 18 years no Carolina student has been unable to get tickets to the UNC-Duke game if he tried to buy them before the reserved student tickets were turned over for sale to the general public.

'They Wouldn't Understand'

We disagree.

Odorous is a better word.

This august assemblage has made many intellectual and artistic contributions to the campus of the University. About three years ago, for instance, they showed their concern for the historic buildings at Carolina by inscribing them with painted facsimiles of the SPU emblem.

But their enthusiasm did not stop there. Through the years they have shown their constructive dedication by picketing the Naval Armory, writing clever sayings on the steps of South Building, picketing South Building, writing clever sayings on the steps of the Naval Armory, picketing President Friday, and writing clever sayings on the steps of President Friday's home.

During 1965 Orientation Week they even took note of the fact that many incoming freshmen were depressed and discouraged about their new life at the University. Staging an elaborate extravaganza with the Hound Dog Missile in Y-Court, they provided a refreshing comic relief from the monotonous grind of registration.

We've got to admit it. Up till yesterday, they were a pretty funny group.

At that time, SPU chairman Charles (Chuck) Schunior of Evanston, Illinois, announced the manner in which he hopes to see the "International Days of Peace" observed in Chapel Hill.

On October 15 and 16 (today and tomorrow-, the Peace Union is urging all local residents to forego one meal and eat soup instead. This effort is in conjunction with the International Days of Protest, a worldwide call for demonstrations from the "Viet Nam Day Committee of Berkeley." During these two days, massive "demonstrations" and acts of civil disobedience will be staged on four continents and in over 30 American cities to protest U.S aggression in Viet Nam.

SPU chairman Schunior pointed out quite clearly why his group has decided on using the "fasting" tactics in Chapel Hill.

"People would notice a huge demonstration," he remarked, "but they wouldn't understand it in a political and moral context."

You are right, Mr. Schunior. They wouldn't understand it.

They wouldn't understand why American students — students blessed with the liberties that are unique in our Republic — would want to undermine the efforts of those who are seeking to preserve our liberties. They wouldn't understand how even the most disrespected element on campus could find the stomach to direct its bitter fanaticism abainst other young Americans who are dying for them in Viet Nam.

No, Mr. Schunior, they wouldn't understand it all.

So, it seems, you settled on the soup idea. You decided to ask people to fast and save their money and give their money to you, and, ultimately you would to CARE. No one is insensitive to the plights of starva-

The SPU must have realized that no one objects to CARE. No one is insensitive to the blights of starvation and sickness that exist around the globe today. No one can tolerate the sight of a needless death.

Some of us, however, grow a little nervous when the SPU becomes the middleman for the money.

It is a well-known fact that booths were set up at the recent Peace March on Washington at which campus radicals could pledge aid — both personal and financial — to the forces of the Viet Cong. The possibility that Carolina students might indirectly be furnishing similar aid is both repulsive and frightening.

Mr. Schunior pointed out that a political booth will be set up in Y-Court for discussion of the beliefs of the SPU. We think this is a healthy idea and we urge all thoughtful Carolina students to drop by and ask a few pertinent questions.

Just don't stand too close.

More Public Opinion Polls On Section 14(b)

By ROBERT KEISER

Mr. Hennessey: "But these open shop min say they're f'r unions."

Mr. Dooley: "Shure, if properly conducted. No strikes, no rules, no contracts, no scales, hardly iny wages 'an dam few mimbers." Thus, Finley Peter Dunne cogently expresses a liberal's reaction to attacks on the union shop. Conservatives, such as William Otis writing in the DTH, however, argue with some facts and figures and raise some important questions, and liberals must deal with these.

Supposedly, one poll has illustrated that 67 per cent of the electorate feel that "an individual should have the right to hold a job regardless of his affiliation (or nonaffiliation) with a union." Such a figure suggests that President Johnson and a majority of both houses of Congress want to repeal 14(B) against the will of the overwhelming majority of the American people. On the other hand, if we consider the results of a June Gallup poll, we discover entirely different results. Asked: "Do you think a person should or should not be required to join a union if he works in a unionized factory or business?", 49 per cent, less than an absolute majority, answered one should not be required to join a union, and almost as many, 43 per cent, said one should be required.

Even these figures, however, do not capture the realities of public opinion. In fact, many of the people who responded to the poll could care less about 14(B), and if we measure intensity of attitudes, we probably would find a majority of the strongly-concerned favor repeal. Ohio and California Republicans discovered this by suffering stunning defeats in the 1958 elections when they made "right to work" a major issue in their campaigns.

Otis' figures on union growth are no more relevant. What if unions have grown proportionately more in the open - shop states? This is to be expected; they are the states with the most workers available to be organized. What liberals argue is that the repeal of 14(B) would increase the rate of union growth to a much larger level.

Conservatives disagree with this approach because they believe the union shop violates individual freedom. And we must admit it does take some amount of freedom away from the worker. Yet, before we get all excited, we should examine the problem of freedom more fully. The only restriction placed upon a worker concerns the payment of dues in a plant where a majority of his fellow workers have voted for the union shop. He still can refuse to join the union or take part in picketing, and he can even cross a picket line. In addition, he can participate in union activities and he can try to persuade a majority of his fellow workers to terminate the union shop.

Moreover, we must consider other freedoms to promote in work life. Those who espouse the "right to work" should support a full employment policy, guaranteeing every American a job, maybe even a decent job. Second, effort could be generated to increase the worker's freedom of control over his work life — over matters like type of work, procedures of doing it, and other working conditions. And third, adequate wages are necessary if the worker is to possess the freedom to seek a more creative life for himself and his family. Freedoms such as these mean much more to the worker than the trivial freedom of 14(B), and unions, despite all their faults have led the fight for many of these.

In the opinion of many, an individual should not be required to pay dues to a union, because some are corrupt. But good unions should not be injured on account of bad ones; the solution to this problem is not 14(B), but stricter corrupt practice acts and a better educated worker. Yet, it is argued that good unions should not need the union shop, and if they do, this only reflects upon the worth of unions. To say the least, this is a hard requirement to place on an organization whose function involves conflict and bargaining with a powerful opponent. Workers, unfortunately, or less educated, more apathetic and less likely to participate in organizations than are middle - class people. Even a good union, therefore, can be seriously injured by the prohibition of the union shop. To admit this does not question the worth of unions; rather it casts judgment on a society which allows so many of its members to be unprepared and unfit for democracy.

More than anything else, the repeal of 14(B) has symbolic value. For years, business has thought the South to be a last refuge from unions, and labor has resigned itself to this, also. If 14(B) is repealed, labor leaders might believe they have a chance here, and increase their organizing activities. Unions possibly could educate the working - class whites and the Negroes on their common economic interests, and this would make the South a center of liberal action. Then, we really could begin to talk about individual freedom. That's why we desire to repeal 14(B), and failure this year does not preclude success in the next one — Everett McKinley Dirksen notwithstanding.

End The Battle

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I feel that this nonsense involving the Nurses' Dorm should come to a crashing halt. As Miss St. John (President of Nurses' Dorm) pointed out in her letter of October 13th, the names of the mystical foursome do not appear in her roster or I might add, in the yearbook either.

Thus it is becoming increasingly obvious that some joker is playing the gadfly and trying to create disharmony for its own sake. And it's deplorable to see your staff cartoonist continue to stultify himself by his fatuous sketches.

Let us then bring this internecine dichotomy to its deserved finale and stop pitting male against female. There are other very serious problems affecting this University that need to be discussed and debated. Let us drop this childish pettyness and move ahead to the really important issues confronting Carolina.

Recall Petitioners Should Present Student Leaders

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Since the first article concerning the Dickson case was published, nothing of importance has been added. The case presented at that time by a group of student leaders has merely been knocked around in a mud-slinging controversy. I was not a student here at UNC last year as I was on active duty in the U. S. Navy. Therefore, I feel that I have no say in regard to the Dickson case itself. However, when the reputation of this University is at stake, then it is of great importance to me. The Dickson case seems to be growing statewide attention more and more each day. Conscientious citizens are beginning to question this case. It is time for action.

First of all, the Dickson case has never fully been presented to the student body. I have learned a few more facts each day by reading the newspapers from nearby cities. It seems that they know more about what is happening at this University than the students. If the student leaders who advised Dickson to render his resignation did so out of concern for the Student Government, then they should present the case. They have failed to follow through in their belief, unless this was just a hoax to make themselves appear in a better light to the student body. It is their responsibility to see that the student body is given an unbiased explanation of both sides of this case. They assumed this responsibility when they asked Dickson to resign on behalf of the student body. If there is to be a recall petition circulated among the student body, then it should originate from these same student leaders and not from any Tom, Dick or Harry on campus who might hold a grudge against Dickson. Several of these petitioners have come knocking at my door, but they do not represent any responsible group, political or otherwise.

The Dickson case has become like a rolling stone which will cause an avalanche unless it is stopped. The student body will not let it slow down, nor will the citizens of this state. They are becoming concerned about what type of institution they are supporting. Furthermore, no worthwhile legislation will be completed by the Student Government until this matter is cleaned up once and for all. It will remain a constant thorn in anything they attempt to accomplish.

Therefore, I challenge those student leaders who requested Dickson to resign. I challenge them to carry through with the responsibility they assumed. I challenge them to stop this rolling stone which they started. For if they do not, then the burden rests upon their shoulders and not Dickson's. Dickson has presented his case. Now the student body must present their case, either in a "vote of confidence" or else in a recall of the student president. There is no other road.

Story Importance Is Key To News

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

"Hey, you're supposed to be on our side!"

So say some Student Government officials when The Daily Tar Heel tosses barbs next door.

"Play it down. It could hurt the University." Instead, the DTH gives the story banner headlines.

"Scandal-sheet newspapering! We told you to play that story down. Don't play it up again."

Attempts at arm twisting such as that statement are common in newspapering. They are generally matters of form — points of honor to groups whose interests are being pickled in printing ink. The arm-twisting groups know they won't succeed, and the newspapers ignore them.

However, so much squealing has come from some SG leaders recently that it seems they really think The Daily Tar Heel is abusing its function.

This only shows a misunderstanding of the DTH's purpose. The Daily Tar Heel is not in business to promote the best interests of Student Government or the University. It tries to do both those things, but it is in business to report the news.

The Daily Tar Heel should not play down news out of concern for the University. A university newspaper should determine the play it will give a story by weighing two factors: importance of the story and student interest in the events concerned. Any story that commands great student interest and is important to the future of the University should be given full play — banner headlines and all.

LETTERS

The Daily Tar Heel welcomes letters to the editor on any subject, particularly on matters of local or University interest. Letters should be typed, double spaced and include the name and address of sender. Names will not be omitted in publication. Letters should be kept as brief as possible. The DTH reserves the right to edit for length.

True, a story may be withheld until the likelihood of unnecessary damage is at a minimum. But, once a story is printed, it should be played according to its newsworthiness. That's journalistic honesty.

If SG leaders realize that The Daily Tar Heel is a real newspaper and not just a Student Government subsidiary, then the squealing should stop. The DTH cannot regard some institutions as "more equal than others." Its barbs may hit next door as well as in Raleigh.

The Great Tow

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Jay Brilliant has blasted the traffic cops in a recent critique of the October 2 dragnet towaway. In part he is griping about "undefined and imaginary borders of the insufficient spaces alloted." What struck me, however, was not his resentment of the regulations and their enforcement, but his flamboyant descriptions of both the style in which the towaway was executed, and of the copper mentality that lies behind this style.

A rather sagacious analysis of police attitudes is implicit in Brilliant's observations. The dragnet towaway shared many stylistic peculiarities with the bombing of North Viet Nam, Operation Match, and any number of similar activities. It was suffused with the same preoccupation with smooth, machine-like coordination at all levels of command, the same painstaking preparation to insure success in all contingencies and to muffle obstructive criticism by secrecy before the fact and inflated verbiage after (front page article on Tuesday, October 5), the same organizational pride in whipping chaos into order, subjugating nature, or overcoming natural human lethargy and self-centeredness, the same compulsion to actually use a system once it has been established.

What I object to is Brilliant's unwillingness to let the policeman have his fun. Dragnet towaways and similar police operations are the only sources of ego exaltation the profession provides. Admittedly, towing charges are annoying in themselves, but Brilliant should have stomached the ego degradation which seems to have nauseated him worse than the charges.

Isn't the policeman entitled to something? Should we criticize the corner cop for the thoroughly human desire to experience in a small way the satisfactions of operational command, as long as the results of the operation satisfy the public's interest?

Aside from the simple justice involved, it would certainly be unwise to do anything that would weaken the appeal of operational command, for it is precisely by governmental and corporate operations that we are inadvertantly laying the foundation of mass economic affluence on which we can build a truly humanistic society one day long after I have given up the ghost.

Baboonery

Quote of the Week—By Dr. John Buettner Janusch of Duke University, as he prepared to embark on a long-term study of prosimians:

I enjoy working with baboons and lemurs because the baboons remind me of my colleagues on university faculties and the lemurs remind me of undergraduates. Lemurs are bright-eyed, bushy-tailed and can't believe the world is the way it is. Baboons, on the other hand, are intelligent, sociable, clever, untidy and you can't trust them.

Draft Call Continues Rise, Reaches Post-Korea High

WASHINGTON (AP) — The military draft continued to climb steeply as the armed services asked yesterday for 45,224 draftees in December—an increase of 8,774 over the November call of 36,450.

It is the biggest request to the Selective Service System since near the end of the Korean War, when 53,000 men were inducted into uniform in May 1953.

The rising calls are in line with President Johnson's decision to build up the armed forces to deal with the conflict in southeast Asia and keep needed strength elsewhere. Plans are to increase U. S. forces by 340,000 men, bringing the total to about three million.

The Marines, who for the first time since the Korean War resorted to the draft in the quota set a month ago, asked for 5,024 men in December. That compares to a November request for 4,050 draftees.

The army's share of the December quota is 40,200, compared to a request of 28,400 for November.

The Navy, which asked for 4,000 men in November — the first such call since 1956 — made no request for a December quota.

The Air Force continued to ask for no draftees, confident of meetings its manpower needs with voluntary enlistees.

The Army procurement objective for enlisted men with no prior military service in December is 47,900 of which it expects 7,700 to be voluntary recruits.

The Marines are counting on 3,400 volunteers to fill out their no-prior service procurement goal of 8,424.

Today's announced quotas brings the total of draftees since September 1950 to 3,243,324. Quotas fell as low as 3,300 men a month a little more than a year ago.

But a lag in enlistments and then the buildup ordered because of the deepening U. S. involvement in Viet Nam led to the steeply rising inductions.

Although enlistments have risen in all the services since Johnson announced plans to double draft calls, the volunteer system has not been adequate. The draft always has served as a prod for young men to sign up with the service of their choice.

The Good Doctor Barnes, North Carolina's professor of wit and wrestling who teaches English on the side, has posted his annual literary lure.

Sam is out to capture a rare animal. One with the balance of a tightrope walker, the dedication of a distance runner, the strength of a barbell addict and the courage of a kamikaze pilot.

In short, he wants wrestlers. He wants warm bodies who are willing to learn. No talent, no previous experience necessary, he says, just lots of guts.

Two years ago, keeping in line with the American-Russian Big Bomb agreement, he advertised: "Frustrated by the test ban? Still want to Atomize? Try Wrestling."

And last fall he took a cue from both political parties and announced: "No previous experience necessary, just extremism in attending practice and moderation in living habits.

"If you have been rejected by Alpha Phi Omega, Beta Gamma Sigma, Carolina Playmakers, Carolina Quarterly, University Book Ex, The Daily Tar Heel, the Debate Squad, the Yackety Yack . . .

"Try wrestling."

These posters aren't Barnes' only recruiting weapons. No sir, not by a long shot. He's armed with a warm smile and a firm handshake too.

No scholarships, no Kenan Stadium, no Carmichael Auditorium, but a smooth tongue and style he has. And he's no slouch with a quote.

When it comes to talking about his team he makes other coaches sound like coaches. Of course, that may be because he use to be a sports writer himself, before he went crooked.

His teams don't do badly either. If Maryland has nailed down the conference championship at least Barnes' men have tacked down second place.

This year he is not saying he will dethrone the Terps but he is saying that he will have his best team in the last 15 years.

He says he has covered all the exits, that his boys can quit, elope, fail out or break their collective necks and still he will have enough left to win.

Still Barnes is looking for warm bodies. And this time the literary lure goes like this:

"DO YOU WANT TO DEMONSTRATE . . . prowess and mental agility and the virtues of clean living?

" . . . FAVOR NON-VIOLENCE . . . on the part of Maryland, Duke, N. C. State . . .

". . . ENDORSE FREE SPEECH . . . in the face of truculent referees? Try wrestling."

Barnes will hold his first session this afternoon at 4:30 in the wrestling room. All tightrope walkers, distance runners, barbell addicts and kamikaze pilots, here's your chance.

Harriers Hit Wake Forest

North Carolina's cross country team will try to get back on the victory trail when it hits Wake Forest in Winston-Salem today.

Wake Forest, considered one of the better teams in the ACC, will feature Paul Snell, one of the finest distance runners in the conference.

Three Teams Share Honors In Intramural Track Games

By BILL HASS
DTH Sports Writer

Everett Hall, Med School and Chi Psi Fraternity were the winners in the intramural track meet held on Wednesday and Thursday.

Everett scored 24 points to claim first place in the residence hall division. Ruffin was second with 15 points, Old East was third with 8, followed by Morrison I and Morrison G with 6, Aycock with 5, Ehringhaus D with 5 and Alexander with 5.

Roger Efird of Ruffin won the 60 and 100 yard dashes with times of 6.9 and 10.8, Everett Hall took first in the 880 and 440 relays with times of 1:46 and 52.05. Bob Everett of Ehringhaus D took the half-mile run with a 2:06.7.

In the field events, Sonny Kornegay of Aycock won the broad jump with a leap of 19'4". Allen Tew of Old East captured the high jump at 5'10". Gary Rowe of Morrison G won the discus with a throw of 106'6 1-2" and Dick McLain of Everett put the shot 38' to win that event.

Chi Psi's 17 points were followed by St. Anthony's 13, DKE's 12, Sigma Nu's 12, SAE's 9 and Zeta Psi's 8.

Burwell of Sigma Nu was a double winner in the 60 and 100 yard dashes with times of 6.9 and 10.85. Bronson Van Wyck of DKE took the half-mile run in a time of 2:15.7. St. Anthony won the 880 relay with a new record time of 1:42.7. Zeta Psi won the 440 relay in 49.65.

Sandy Worth of PiKa took the high jump at 5'9 ". Hoppy Ancarrow of SAE set a new meet record in the broad jump at 20'6". Bill Johnson of Chi Psi put the shot 43'3" and hurled the discus 134'6" to win both events.

In the grad division, Med School's 31 points barely nosed out Law School, which racked up 30. Peacocks were next with 11 points, Botany had 10 and Naval ROTC 9.

Rich Harris of Law School ran 6.75 to win the 60 and 11.1 to win the 100. Jacobson of Business School won the half-mile run in 2:04.6. Med School grabbed the 880 relay in 1.46 and Law School took the 440 in 50.7.

The most points ever scored by a single team in Kenan Stadium was 65 — by the Tar Heels in 1928 against Wake Forest.

Varsity And Frosh Meet Soccer Foes

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

North Carolina soccer goes all-out today as the varsity booters open ACC warfare at N. C. State and the Tar Babies host Clemson's Tiger - Cubs at 3 p.m. on Fetzer Field.

Coach Marvin Allen's upper classmen have powered their unbeaten way to three non-conference romps, rolling up 20 goals to just one for the opposition.

"We've beaten State for the past three-or-four years," Allen said yesterday, "but it is always a close match." Last year's score was 4-1 for UNC took a few brief moments away from the workout to say:

"This is one we won't take lightly. It's our first conference match, and it's just as important as any we'll play all season.

The Wolfpack has been on the winning end of the score in two of its first three matches — losing to Maryland, 7-0 and defeating Appalachian State (4-2) and East Carolina (7-2).

Frosh Coach Clarke Herdic, whose youngsters beat Duke 5-0 last Monday, faces a Clemson team which is an entirely unknown quantity.

The last tie game played in Kenan Stadium was in 1956. It was 6-6 against Wake Forest.

Frosh Seek Second Victory

By RON SHINN
DTH Sports Writer

DTH sports writer Ron Shinn flew to Charlottesville this morning to cover the UNC-Virginia freshman football game. Look for his account in Saturday's Tar Heel.

Carolina's Tar Babies hit the road today for an encounter with the Virginia frosh that should tell Coach George Barclay exactly what his team has.

UNC opened the season Sept. 25 with a 9-0 win over N. C. State but has now gone three weeks without seeing action. This will be the first game for Virginia since its scheduled opener with VMI last week was rained out.

Barclay says that his squad is in top shape for the clash. Guard Frank Coble and defensive tackle Wayne Busick, both of whom missed the first game because of injuries, are in excellent condition.

The lineup is basically the same crew that started against State.

Barclay doesn't think that the three week layoff will hurt his team. "We've scrimmaged with the red shirts and are in fine shape. That shouldn't be a factor."

COMPARATIVE COSTS

Policeman Tells Court About Talk With Rinaldi On Night Of Arrest

HILLSBOROUGH, N. C., AP — A police officer testified Friday accused wife - slayer Frank Rinaldi asked him following his arrest, "How can you stand to sit in the same room with me after what I've done?"

Sgt. James Ferrell of Chapel Hill made the statement as new evidence was introduced at Rinaldi's second trial on a charge of first degree murder in the death of his pregnant wife on Christmas Eve, 1963.

The state scored a key victory when Judge George M. Fountain ruled that the jury be allowed to consider statements police said Rinaldi made following his arrest a few hours after his wife was killed.

During the morning session, the jury of eight men and four women was sent from the courtroom while Judge Fountain heard the testimony. After ruling the evidence competent, the judge ordered the jury returned to the courtroom.

Defense attorneys took exception to the ruling.

Repeated Statement

Farrell said Rinaldi repeated several times, "How can you stand to sit in the same room with me?" The officer said the statements were made at the Chapel Hill Police Department.

Rinaldi, 36, of Waterbury, Conn., a one-time graduate student and former University of North Carolina English instructor, was convicted last November, but the jury recommended mercy, which meant a mandatory life sentence. The State Supreme Court granted him a new trial on the basis of errors.

Rinaldi's wife, Lucille, 34, was found dead in their duplex apartment at Chapel Hill. A scarf was tied over her nose and mouth and she had been beaten on the head and face.

The state contends a $20,000 double indemnity insurance policy was the motive for the slaying.

Det. Sgt. Howard Pendergrath testified Rinaldi told him, "I assume you are looking for a motive. I guess money and women would be the biggest."

SBI Agent

F. G. Satterfield Jr., a State Bureau of Investigation agent, quoted Rinaldi as saying the police might think he killed his wife for three reasons: 1. financial difficulties; 2. money, and 3. another woman.

Satterfield said Rinaldi told him "he did not go with other women. He also advised he had had several conferences with a minister and that he (Rinaldi) was thinking about going into the ministry. He also advised he had had psychiatric trouble and had been hospitalized for psychiatric treatment while at Chapel Hill."

Art Exhibit Has 3-Man Jury

The forthcoming North Carolina artists' exhibition, jointly sponsored by the North Carolina Museum of Art and the North Carolina State art Society for the 28th year, will mark a return to judging by a three-man jury. Since 1960 the annual classic for State artists has been judged by one-mand and two-man teams.

Serving on the jury this year are Edward G. Bryant, associate curator at the Whitney Museum of American Art, New York City, Seymour Lipton, well - known sculptor and teacher, and C. V. Donovan, director of "Quadrennial Exhibition of American Painting, 1966" at the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts. Donovan is repeating as a judge, having been on the jury of 1960 when he was director of the Krannert Art Museum and head of the art department at the University of Illinois.

Judging will take place following the Nov. 11 deadline for entries.

According to General Curator Ben F. Williams, the prospectus announcing the competition and giving rules and regulations have been sent to all State artists on North Carolina Museum of Art register. Any eligible artist who has not yet received a copy should notify his office immediately, Williams said.

All native North Carolinians and others who have lived in the State for 12 months immediately preceding October, 1965, or for any period of five years are eligible to enter.

Paintings in any medium, prints, drawings, and sculpture may be submitted, with a maximum of three works allowable from each artist. Only two works may be in the same category.

Terps Bring Clean Conference Record

By PAT STITH
DTH Sports Editor

Maryland, the pre-season pick to win the war called ACC football and undefeated after its first battle, will play North Carolina here today under an odd condition.

The Terps are underdogs by one touchdown.

And that probably delights Tom Nugent's men. They were the underdog when they met UNC last year in the Oyster Bowl at Norfolk. They won that one 10-9.

Maryland is 2-1 overall, with a win over Ohio University in its opener, a loss to Syracuse, and then a close-call 10-7 decision over Wake Forest last Saturday.

North Carolina, on the other hand, has done as well against stronger competition. The Tar Heels are 1-1 in the ACC and 1-1 in the Big Ten.

If playing in Kenan Stadium is an "advantage," it is one Carolina might be better off without. Both wins have come on the road, both defeats have been at home.

Carolina's offense utilizes the pro set and the "I" formation — which is Nugent's own baby. His Terps will rely primarily on the "I" which he invented while coaching at VMI in 1949.

The Tar Heel attack will feature the AC's number one rusher, halfback Max Chapman. He has averaged 4.6 yards per carry for 320 yards in four games.

Quarterback Danny Talbott, who leads the team in scoring with 31 points, is the conference's number three total gainer, behind Tom Hodges of Virginia and Scotty Glacken of Duke.

Talbott has completed 50 passes so far, chiefly to end John Atherton (10), wingback Bob Hume (13) and Chapman (11).

Maryland will field a backfield worth watching. Man for man, it is as big as any UNC will face. Quarterback Phil Petry is 6-1, 205, wingback Andy Martin also goes 200, tailback Doug Klingerman is 5-11, 198, and fullback Whitey Marciniak is a sawed-off 5-10, 218 pounds.

Nugent will also bring the man who whipped Carolina last fall, soccer-style kicker Bernardo Bramson. He came from Chile to Maryland on a soccer scholarship but took a liking to football and now devotes full time to it.

Bramson may be known by more numbers than any other man in football. Every time he boots a point he changes jerseys so that his number corresponds with his total points. He wound up with 44 last fall, only 10 fewer than UNC's Ken Willard scored.

For the first time all season, North Carolina is completely well with the return of defensive halfback Gene Link to duty. Maryland lost both starting guards last week against Wake.

A crowd of some 30,000 is expected for the 1:30 p.m. kickoff.

Student Legislature Votes Against 'Soup Fast' Day

By JOHN GREENBACKER
DTH Political Writer

Student Legislature approved a resolution which urged students not to participate in yesterday's "soup fast" for Viet Nam by a vote of 22 to 17 Thursday night, but the resolution will be reconsidered by SL next week.

The "soup fast" was sponsored by the Student Peace Union, Students for a Democratic Society, the Durham-Chapel Hill branch of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, and 62 concerned citizens.

Supporters of the fast urged students to go without a full meal at some point during the day Friday and send their extra food money to CARE through the sponsors.

The money and checks will be sent to CARE by the sponsoring organizations to help reconstruct the village of Cam Ne in South Viet Nam, destroyed last summer by U. S. and South Vietnamese troops while fighting the Viet Cong.

The resolution, introduced by representatives Clark Crampton and Jim Smith of the University Party, was "entered on the minutes" of SL after a successful parliamentary maneuver by Student Party representative Joe Chandler.

This proceedure delays finalization of the legislature's approval of the bill and guarantees reconsideration at the next SL meeting.

"Contributions made through the Student Peace Union might be interpreted to demonstrate greater support on campus for that organization than it might connote," the resolution said in part.

"The Student Legislature goes on record as urging those members of the Student body who wish to contribute to CARE to make their contributions directly to that organization," it reads in part.

The resolution said the sponsors of the fast were "dubiously representative" of the student body.

Jim McCorkle, president of SDS, criticized the resolution's sponsors yesterday for not including the name of his organization and the WILPF with the SPU as sponsors of the fast.

He assured all those who took part in the fast that the money collected will be sent directly to CARE.

Opposition to the resolution during the SL session also came from Speaker Pro Tem Jim Little (SP), who told the legislature it was highly irregular for the body to pass any resolution against a campus organization.

Ehringhaus Protest

Bill Long (SP) presented to the legislature a resolution unanimously passed by the Ehringhaus College Senate which urged student political leaders not to manipulate Ehringhaus' seats in Student Legislature.

The protest was prompted after student political parties had popular candidates run for SL in Ehringhaus. When the candidates were elected, the parties moved them out of Ehringhaus and gave the SL seats to other party members.

Wilson Attacks Administration

SP Floor Leader Don Wilson criticized Dean of Men William G. Long and unnamed University administrators for not consulting student leaders before announcing their refusal to accept "double standard" punishments given by the student judiciary.

In a letter to the chairmen of the honor councils and the Attorney General, Long said unequal punishments given to male and female students for the same violation of student codes would not be accepted in the future by the Administration.

"Without consultation, a series of policies has been announced," Wilson said. "This letter has seeds of crisis within it."

Wilson said that because of a lack of clarity in Long's letter there is serious question as to how the student judiciary is to change its proceedures.

He said Long's letter may be interpreted to mean the councils can no longer consider the individual circumstances of a case in which two or more persons are involved.

He called on student leaders to disregard Long's "unilateral decision" in the matter and support joint efforts by students and administrators to resolve the problem.

Appointments

SL approved four resolutions naming Student Government presidential appointments.

The appointment of Ralph Grosswald as chairman of the Student Credit Commission was attacked by University Party representatives because Grosswald has had no experience on the commission and allegedly has had no business experience.

His appointment was approved after Sandy Hobgood (SP) and Sharon Rose (SP) testified to Grosswald's ability.

MHC States Its Position On Gentlemen And Ladies

A statement concerning the Carolina gentleman's responsibility toward his date was issued yesterday by the Men's Honor Council in connection with numerous Campus Code Cases tried recently.

The statement does not deal with the "dual standard," but comments only on the policy taken by the Men's Council in those cases involving male students.

A great deal of controversy has been generated over the so-called "dual standard," referring to the different sentences given students by the Men's and Women's Councils.

Men's Honor Council Chairman Van McNair said, "Definite measures toward solving the problem of the 'dual standard' are being taken. However, until these plans can be put into effect, it is necessary that every student be aware of the Council's policy concerning the man's responsibility."

This is the statement in full:

"There is a lack of understanding about the male student's role toward the co-ed and toward the girl who is not a co-ed. The Men's Honor Council has taken definite stands on the matters. Since this is the policy adhered to in such Campus Code trials, all students should know what the policy is.

"First of all, it is the Council's belief that the Carolina gentleman has an obligation to help his date obey women's regulations. This is a positive responsibility, meaning that some definite effort must be made to prevent the girl from violating her rules.

"If the co-ed desires to stay out overnight and her Carolina date in no way attempts to change her mind, he has committed a Campus Code offense. It is his duty to remind her to be in on time and not to influence her to do otherwise.

"The Code itself states that the student must 'see to it, insofar as possible, that his fellow students conduct themselves as ladies or gentlemen.' This statement is the basis of the Council's decision.

"It should be noted, however, that the Council does not view such Campus Code offenses to be flagrant violations. The usual penalty is an official reprimand.

"The co-ed, under the present system, must assume the major responsibility unless she has been forcibly persuaded by the gentleman.

"Another matter has arisen before the Men's Council, one dealing with the male's role toward the girl who is not a co-ed.

"If the student desires to keep a girl out overnight, and even if he persuades her to do so, he is not guilty of a Campus Code violation — that is, if his action does not reflect on the University or on his own connection with the University.

"This is a matter of private morals, and the Council cannot be a judge on such matters. Only the individual can decide in this case if his action is gentlemanly or not."

UNC Student Is Acquitted

A student charged with intending to keep a co-ed out overnight was found not guilty by the Men's Honor Council Thursday night.

The defendant told the council that because it was the last night of second session summer school, he thought the girl was no longer under University regulations for women — specifically the night curfew.

The council decided he had no responsibility to the co-ed since he was ignorant of her status as a student; and furthermore, that his conduct could not be judged ungentlemanly since his was a matter of private morals apart from the University society.

Petition Nearing Goal

A petition demanding a recall election for UNC student body president was reportedly near completion late yesterday.

Sharon Rose, one of the petition's sponsors, told the DTH, "I feel sure we will have the required signatures tonight. It is impossible to say exactly how many we have since many of the petitions are still out."

At 9 a.m. yesterday about 1,130 signatures had been tabulated according to David Kiel.

Miss Rose said if the names were secured by last night the petition would probably not be presented to Student Body President Paul Dickson before Monday.

Dickson is attending the NSA Regional Conference in Greensboro this weekend.

The petition originally called for an election to be held on or before Oct. 19. However, it was announced yesterday that the deadline had been dropped "because it would be difficult to collect the required number of signatures and count them before Oct. 19."

Noted Carolina Poet Killed In Auto Accident

Poet Randall Jarrell, 51, an instructor at UNC-G, was struck and killed by an auto Thursday night, police reported yesterday.

One of America's best known contemporary poets, Randall was killed walking along the 15-501 by-pass by a car driven by Graham Kimrey of Sanford.

No charges have been filed against Kimrey.

Orange County Medical Examiner Dr. Loren McKinney sais the autopsy was performed by the pathology department of the UNC school of medicine. Results will be known "in a couple of days," McKinney said.

Jarrell received the 1963 National Book Award for his collection of poems, "Woman at the Washington Zoo." He was poetry consultant to the Library of Congress and visiting lecturer at Princeton in 1951-52 and at the University of Illinois in 1953.

The English instructor toured the country last year as a Phi Beta Kappa lecturer of universities. Randall has served as poetry editor of The Nation, the Partisan Review and the Yale Review.

Yack Picture Schedule

Final pictures for the Yack will be taken from Monday, Oct. 18 through Wednesday, Oct. 27. Senior women should wear black sweaters and pearls. Other women should wear black sweaters.

Men must wear dark coats and ties. No madras can be worn.

Photos will be taken from 1-6 p.m. on the following schedule:

Oct. 18-22 — late juniors ($1 fee)

Oct. 18-19 — medical technology, physical therapy, dental hygiene, and all nurses.

Oct. 20 — law; late medical technology, physical therapy, dental hygiene, and nurses ($1 fee). None of these categories except law will be accepted later.

Oct. 21-22 — law, pharmacy, dentistry, and first year social work.

Oct. 25 — medical school and public health; late law, pharmacy, and dentistry ($1 fee). Only medicine will be accepted at a later date.

Oct. 26 — medical school and public health.

Oct. 27 — late medical school and public health ($1 fee); late fraternity and sorority ($2 fee).

Students who cannot come on the scheduled day may come earlier.

Groups Collect $97 And Heckles

By DAVID ROTHMAN

The Student Peace Union, Students for a Democratic Society and other organizations collected $97 yesterday by urging students to do without their lunches and have soup instead.

There was also a peace rally held in "Y" Court.

The $97 will go to CARE to purchase food and medical supplies for Vietnamese peasants.

Another collection took place at dinner time.

Jim McCorkel, chairman of UNC Students for a Democratic Society, said the idea of the "soupfast" had "originated after a discussion between SPU chairman Chuck Schunior and myself."

He denied that the SPU was solely responsible for the project.

The fast was also sponsored by the Chapel Hill - Durham branch of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom and 62 signers of an add in The Chapel Hill Weekly, a pamphlet at the rally claimed.

McCorkel said the "soupfast" had the support of local clergymen, including Norman Gustaveson, YMCA director, and Banks Godfrey of the Wesleyian Foundation.

SPU chairman Schunior explained the views of the participants at the "Y" Court rally do not necessarily represent his group officially.

One of the participants, Laurence McGilvary of Winston-Salem, unemployed, described his occupation as "professional peacenik."

Then he added: "I think I'll revamp that last word . . . It's 'peace worker.'"

Another participant busily haranged the crowd, suggesting "those god-damned Marines" withdraw from Vietnam.

Worried about such remarks, McGilvary said: "We shouldn't be depicted as beatnik fags; doing so is like calling all Republicans white supremists or Nazis."

Paul Scott, a graduate student in English, complained the SPU's critics have all "ignored (the issue of Vietnam) in favor of soup."

Pulpit Hill: 1916 And 1965

An office punster accused us yesterday of crying Wolfe a little too often.

He was referring, however lamely, to our suggestion that a memorial of Thomas Wolfe be erected somewhere on the campus.

Few students are aware of the fact that the man was ever a student here, and even fewer have read his delightful passages on Carolina life in Look Homeward, Angel. For instance:

"Jim Trivett lived with several other students from his community in a lodging-house near Mrs. Bradley's but closer to the west gate of the university. There were four young men banded together for security and companionship in two untidy rooms heated to a baking dryness by small cast-iron stoves. They made constant preparations for study, but they never studied: one would enter sternly, announcing that he had 'a hell of a day tomorrow,' and begin the most minute preparations for a long contest with his books: he would sharpen his pencils carefully and deliberately, adjust his lamp, replenish the red-hot stove, move his chair, put on an eyeshade, clean his pipe, stuff it carefully with tobacco, light, relight, and empty it, then with an expression of profound relief, hear a rapping on his door.

Come in the house, goddamn it!' he would roar hospitably."

Sound familiar? This was Chapel Hill in 1916.

Other segments of the book are equally applicable to contemporary Carolina life. Students traveled to Durham for much the same reasons that they do today.

" 'Wait a minute, " whispered Jim Trivett. 'I think this is the place.'

"They had turned away from the centre of the dreary tobacco town (Durham). For a quarter of an hour they had walked briskly through drab autumnal streets, descending finally a long rutted hill that led them, past a thinning squalor of cheap houses, almost to the outskirts. It was three weeks before Christmas: the foggy air was full of chill menace. There was a brooding quietness, broken by far small sounds. They turned into a sordid little road, unpaved, littered on both sides with negro shacks and the dwellings of poor whites. It was a world of rickets. The road was unlighted. Their feet stirred dryly through fallen leaves.

"They paused before a two-story frame house. A lamp burned dimly behind lowered yellow shades, casting a murky pollen out upon the smoky air.

" 'Wait a minute,' said Jim Trivett, in a low voice, 'I'll find out.'

"They heard scuffling steps through the leaves. In a moment a negro man prowled up.

" 'Hello, John,' said Jim Trivett, almost inaudibly.

" 'Evenin', boss ' the negro answered wearily, but in the same tone.

" 'We're looking for Lily Jones' house,' said Jim Trivett. 'Is this it?'

" 'Yes, suh,' said the negro, 'dis is it.' "

Chapel Hill owes Tom Wolfe a debt of gratitude. Let us hope that this "charming and unforgettable place" is not, likewise, unforgetting.

A Fundamental Lesson In Rewriting History

Respecting the accomplishments of minority groups is a good American tradition, but Rep. Richard McCarthy of New York may have gone a little too far.

The Irish congressman recently blasted Yale University for releasing just before Colombus Day a map showing that Leif Ericson reached American ahead of the Italian explorer.

Obviously, politician McCarthy was chasing after the Italian vote, and the director of the Yale Press Bureau agrees.

Yesterday, I heard him talking over the phone with McCarthy.

"I'm sorry to disturb you, Congressman," the news bureau director said, "but our researchers have just discovered three misspelled words in the Exodus section of the Bible . . .

". . . What's that, Congressman? . . . You think we might trigger a wave of anti-Semitism if we informed the public about this . . .

". . I see . . .You would like us to accent the positive side . . . Very good, sir . . . I'll tell our sociologists to write up a report on Jewish contributions to the uundergarment industry . . .

"Yes . . . I know that the 20 American Indians in your district wouldn't like it, but our history department has just discovered Pocahontas wet her bed . . .

". . . You mean, Congressman, our people oughta write another book about Custer's last stand? . . .

'. . . Excellent! . . . And while we're at it we'll stick in a plug for that souvenir stand that sells Navaho blankets in New Mexico . . .

". . . I know we're in trouble already . . . However, our department of medicine insists we publish that report which claims spaghetti is fattening . . .

". . . Yes—it's more important than the map . . . I'll get our people to issue a retraction denying Leif Ericson reached America before Colombus . . .

". . . Certainly I agree the Negro voters might be antagonized if we revealed Lincoln kept a Confederate flag in his bathroom . . .

". . . I see—you merely want us to praise Booker T. Washington . . .

". . You mean, Congressman, we can't tell the public how many Puerto Ricans carry switchblades in New York . . . All right, we'll tell the papers about what good rum those people make . . .

". . . Sure the Catholics will object to our history of the Reformation . . . Very well, then . . . We'll publish photos of Pope Paul's trip to New York . . .

". . . Yes—I'm very confident the voters of French descent won't like that paper on President DeGaulle's foreign policy . . . But we can always put in a good word for the Parisian tourist industry . . .

". . You understood me correctly, Congressman . . . Our researchers have discovered that last year Ireland sold us . . ."

". . . Splendid! . . . I'll get somebody to write up immediately a history of John Kennedy and those other fine Irish politicians."

Letters To The Editor

Dickson, University Day And Poetry On Coeds

Dickson Should Have Spoken At Convocation

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

In regard to the University Day Convocation Tuesday afternoon in Carmichael Auditorium, we would like to praise John CrHarmon for having delivered such a well-organized speech. However, his position was one representing the senior class and not the full body of U.N.C. students. Only Paul Dickson would have been fully capable of such representation for he is still the president of the student body and will retain such representation until his voluntary resignation or formal removal from office.

We feel that the exclusion of Paul Dickson from University Day affairs was totally uncalled for and was an unwarranted act on the part of the planning committee. How could University Day have been expected to inspire a greater appreciation of the University, its faculty and administration, and the students themselves when such an important student leader as Paul Dickson was barred from participation?

Recall Problems

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

What do they want of Paul Dickson?

What does the University administration want — revenge for not being able to impose a more severe penalty on him?

Do students believe they are so free of immorality that they condemn Dickson for his Campus Code offense?

The newspapers of this state have dragged Dickson's name in the mud and dung from Murphey to Manteo, according to legislator Sharon Rose. I guess there's no reason why student legislators should not do the same.

Those same persons who desire that the student body president be placed upon a lofty moral standard are continuously chopping at that standard with their holier-than-thou actions and words. It's a very nice principle that the president resign if he is a bad boy, but it is also against the Honor Code to disclose the defendant's name from honor council trials.

If a new president is elected, he will probably cancel most of Dickson's appointments and make his own political appointments. It will take him at least a month or two to interview and select his appointments for student government comittees. So it will probably not be until December that the new president has assembled personnel to his liking.

Then the new president will have to propose some programs and legislation for student government. If the new president is a member of the University Party, he will have a difficult time finding ideas among his legislators, who have yet to propose a single bill in legislature this year. (By contrast, the Student Party proposed an amazing 28 bills in the first session of legislature.)

But why have a recall election in the first place? It will cost the students money and waste the Elections Board's time.

The Dickson administration has been most satisfactory thus far. It has interviewed and appointed students to fill all Student Government committees, who will be approved if the legislature will ever be allowed to. A new Elections Board has been appointed and approved.

A campus referendum approved carrier current for UNC. The Toronto Exchange Program is beginning to roll. The UNC NSA delegation has held an open forum. But these are minor activities compared with the unusual, imaginative proposals the administration has made in legislature.

Such proposals as a student government professorship, a student co-op, better student mental health facilities, a merchants discount commission, bus service from Ehringhaus - Craige - Morrison.

In short, there is no need for a recall election for president now or at any time this academic year. Those who sign that ridiculous petition for a recall must realize that the candidates must take several weeks to campaign for the office, that a new president could not complete his appointments until December, that a new president would have an administration of not more than four months.

If anyone signs that absurd petition he will only call more attention to a problem that was purely private in the first place. He will be guilty of advocating the overthrow of student government.

For The Record

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

In Alan Banov's letter appearing in the Friday, October 8 DTH, he alludes to the administration's "unkindest cut of all," refusing to ask Paul Dickson to speak at the University Day convocation.

To set the facts straight for journalist-Banov, University Day is not an administration production. Rather, it is being sponsored and financed by a student-faculty committee which simply wants to praise the much down-trodden University.

Banov's stirring drama of a possible student boycott was all very touching and mostly revolting.

And, as for those "water-balloons" Banov accused the administration of dropping, it appears that Banov has just let loose a rather large one himself.

Literacy Level

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Perhaps if the editor of the DTH would descend from his ivory pedestal high in the clouds of self-esteem, he would be able to see the fraudulence of his note to McKinnon's letter in the Tuesday DTH. Having seen that the adherents of the DTH are of various levels of literacy, one can feel assured that at least one letter complimentary to the editor in the "72 years of editorial freedom" has had spelling or grammatical errors. After all, people, no matter who they may be, are not perfect.

I sincerely hope that the editor will lay aside his rose-tinted mirror and give more objective consideration to his replies.

Nurses' Epitaph

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

We sincerely hope that this will be an epitaph to the current dispute between the nurses and the Carolina Gentlemen — although we doubt it.

THE NIGHT BEFORE HOMECOMING
(Dedicated to the "Four Freshmen" of the Nurses' Dorm.)

'Twas the night before homecoming
And all through the dorm,
Not a creature was stirring,
They all were forlorn.

The girls were all tucked
Down deep in their beds
With tons of curlers
Wrapped in their heads.

When from down the hall
There came a small noise,
The housemother rose
To check about boys.

She opened a door
And to her surprise,
Found four little freshmen
With tears in their eyes.

A letter to the editor
They tearfully read,
Beginning with, "Barnard,
Why don't you drop dead?"

"You lecher, you brute
You've told a great lie,
We had dates
Last Fourth of July."

Down to the mailbox
Their little feet did pound,
They were sure they would win
In the second round.

And back to their beds
With manifold glee,
Went four little freshmen
To dream of a "He."

The next day was beautiful,
We won the ball game.
But the Nurses' Dorm
Was still the same.

They took great pains
To moan and to cuss,
Whenever a W. C. girl
Stepped off of a bus.

"What have they got that we don't?"
They asked with a sigh.
"A hell of a lot!'
Said a gentleman with a gleam in his eye.

The week-end was over,
More sleep to catch,
But not before writing
To Operation Match.

"It's a long shot," they said.
But one thing will sober—
We've still got twelve months
Till next October.

More Poetry(?), With Apologies

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I think that I shall never see a thing so pretty as a slender knee.
Supported by a shapely calf,
not a cow, or a spindle shaft.
This leg, a thing so lov-e-ly,
Ne're shall I see
while at U.N.C.

There is a strange charm in beautiful hips,
perchance, like those that sank Troy's ships.
They bring music to the deaf man's ear,
and dissipate the coward's fear.
But I ask any traveler from Ackland to Ehringhaus,
Have you noticed some hips that don't resemble a hoss?

But now dear ladies, not to belabor the point,
this thing called the figure is all out of joint.
There is a program in this fine Uni-vers-ty to help solve your problems; in short,
P. E.

So go at it with good cheer and lively bounds, and sweat off please, three-hundred or more pounds.
(Pardon the poltry, I ain't edd'icated just yet.)

Beer on the rocks?
(Oh, no!)
The other day, for the first time, our brewmaster heard of "beer-on-the-rocks." He fell apart.
He really doesn't have anything against ice cubes . . . for scotch or old-fashioneds or lemonade. But not for beer. Especially the King of Beers.
You see, he knows how much extra time and expense it takes to get that Budweiser® taste and smoothness and drinkability. Add a couple of ice cubes and "bloop"... there goes all that extra effort.
Ice cuts down the head and waters down the taste. And, with Budweiser, that's a tragedy. Budweiser is the only beer in America that's Beechwood Aged. We allow Bud to brew its own tiny bubbles . . . slowly, naturally . . . over a dense lattice of beechwood strips. That's why Budweiser tastes better, foams better and sets better—glass after glass.
So if you know somebody who likes to plunk ice cubes in his Budweiser, please don't tell our brewmaster. (We hate to see a grown man cry.)
it's worth it...it's Bud.

Fauntleroy

Don't go through life
Without a joy.
Ask for "Perfect"—
That's Fauntleroy.

Burp—Glub—Ah-h-h-h-h. Excuse me, fans, but these banquets are killing me. Every since I pulled the clincher last week and hit all my football picks, I've been swamped with speaking engagements.

FAUNTLEROY

This "fried chicken - green pea" circuit is killing me. It's a tough life—people calling me up at all hours of the night wanting results for Saturday's games, coaches stopping me on the streets offering money for a favorable pick on Saturday.

Oh, well — back to the business at hand. It's hard to believe this is the fifth week of the season. I haven't even decided who will play in the bowl games on New Year's Day. Time's running out.

Here goes, fans:

CLEMSON vs DUKE — This is a tough one for me. I've let ol' Frank Howard lose two in a row and Bill Murray is undefeated. Let's play it cool in this one — pick Duke.

N. C. STATE vs FLORIDA — Anyone knows Gators are stronger than Wolves — pick Florida.

Ah, HA—Here's my UPSET SPECIAL—NURSES OVER NO DATE (Night Game).

SOUTH CAROLINA vs WAKE FOREST—I guess I should let this be a close one. The Deacons are at home, but they really need more advantages than that — pick South Carolina.

VIRGINIA over WEST VIRGINIA — Virginia has pulled out last-minute victories in the past two games. The West Virginia Mountaineers have quite an offense. "Go West, young man—pick the Mountaineers.

DAVIDSON vs WILLIAM & MARY — This is a pet project of mine. Davidson is undefeated and unscored on. I'll let them keep one of those — pick Davidson.

Other games:

ALABAMA over TENNESSEE

SYRACUSE over PENN STATE

PURDUE over MICHIGAN

S. CALIFORNIA over STANFORD

MICHIGAN STATE over OHIO STATE

Tar Babies Rout Weak UVA 40-7

The UNC Tar Babies combined a near flawless defense and a merciless offensive attack to down the Virginia frosh 40-7 Friday at Charlottesville.

The win was the second in as many starts for Carolina and the charges of Coach George Barclay have not been beaten since 1963.

"Everybody was a standout," reported assistant coach Gene Sigmon from Charlottesville. "In a game like this everyone is bound to be.

"Halfback Bill Federal and fullback Mark Mazza both turned in outstanding performances, as did the whole offensive line. The defense just played their usual excellent game."

The Tar Babies drew first blood but Virginia evened matters up as they returned the kickoff 90 yards into the end zone. Carolina scored again and after that it was no contest.

A pair of touchdowns in the second quarter put the game out of reach but Carolina continued to pour it on in the second half.

End Billy Warren won high scoring honors for the afternoon as he caught a pair of tosses that went in for scores. Quarterback Gayle Bomar scored once on a nine-yard scamper and Peter Davis caught one of Bomars passes for a score.

Clark Totherow came up with the Tar Heels most exciting play as he intercepted a Virginia pass and went 86 yards into the end zone.

Billy Dodson kicked his second and third field goals of the season with boots of 29 and 42 yards.

Frosh Score Second Win

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

UNC's frosh booters spotted Clemson a two-goal lead and then roared back to capture their second straight win, 3-2, on Fetzer Field yesterday.

Clemson took a 1-0 lead with 3:30 left in the second period when Mark Rubich rolled a weak shot into the Tar Baby net. Then, halfway through the third period, Rubich hit the nets again with a short shot for a 2-0 lead.

Less than a minute later, however, Landy Anderton took a head pass from Jeff Perry and kicked his team's first goal to cut the deficit in half. With 3:10 remaining in the same quarter, Perry got on the scoring end, taking a pass from Pete Young and tying the count at 2-2.

The clubs battled through 15:22 before UNC struck for the clincher.

Anderton squared off with the goalie, and running at full speed he slammed the ball into the center of the net.

"Too close!" was the word from Coach Clarke Herdic following the struggle. "The boys played a good game against Clemson's club — they don't have a varsity, so actually their "club" amounts to playing boys from all classes."

Herdic singled out Anderton, Doug Barba, Gordon MacKenzie, Jamie Canfield, and John Gussenhoven as outstanding.

Assistant Jim Muchmore declared, "The boys are looking more like a team all the time. They played a real fine match."

DTH Sports Writer Ron Shinn was scheduled to fly to Charlottesville Friday morning but a dense fog that blanketed the area cancelled his flight. This report came by telephone.

UNC Harriers Whip Wake By 15 Points

WINSTON-SALEM — North Carolina Harriers outran Wake Forest here yesterday, 23-38. Captain Jim Meade won for UNC.

The Tar Baby runners also won, defeating the Wake Frosh, 19-36.

Tables Turned On Fans

Football players and coaches take their lumps from over-critical fans.

DTH sports writer Bob Orr gives them the chance to strike back.

Coach Jim Hickey — "We've got some of the best fans around. There's lots of enthusiasm. There's some criticism too, but everybody's entitled to their opinion. They paid for their ticket."

Jimmy Byrd, Sr., wingback — "When you're winning you couldn't have a better group behind you. At Virginia when we really needed their support, they sort of let us down."

David Riggs, Soph., halfback — "We need them most when we're not doing well."

Jeff Beaver, Soph., quarterback — "There are too many grandstand quarterbacks. I just hope that they'll get behind us — win, lose or draw."

Danny Talbott, Jr., quarterback — "They only remember the mistakes you make. My biggest peeve is that the fans all try to put the blame on Coach Hickey. It's not the coach's fault if we lose. He can't play the game for us."

Dave Erimias, Jr., tackle — "You can't get a pie for every game. They forget that football players and coaches are human. They all make mistakes."

Bob Powell, Jr., end — "During the '63 Duke game a lady sitting behind me kept pulling for Carolina. When we were ahead, she thought Carolina football and Coach Hickey were the greatest. After Duke's touchdown Coach Hickey and the team were 'rock-bottom'. When Max Chapman kicked the winning field goal, we were back in 'fat city'. If she's a typical fan, I don't think much of them."

UNC Booters Blank State

RALEIGH — North Carolina booters dominated N. C. State to the tune of a 3-0 win here yesterday to successfully open their AC season with their fourth straight victory.

Willem Polack registered the club's first goal in the second quarter, with Jim Johnston and Larry Heath following suit in the final period.

UNC kept State bottled up throughout the match, taking 35 shots to only five for the hosts. They didn't allow the Wolfpack a single serious scoring threat.

Coach Marvin Allen singled out Johnston, Gordon Cadwgan and Jackie Writer for their play. He thought some individuals performed better than before, but said the overall team play was under the usual standard.

Vet Dorms Sparkle

The two oldest residence halls on campus, for a long time buried at the bottom of the intramural pile, showed signs of life by winning intramural football games yesterday.

The Old West Studs whacked Carr, 47-0. Kern Everett was the big gun with three touchdowns and two extra points. Roy Alexander scored twice and Dave Randalman and Dave Owens added touchdowns for the Studs.

Old East blanked Battle - Vance - Pettigrew, 8-0. A first-half TD and a second-half safety provided the point for Old East.

Maverick C No. 2 romped to an easy 40-0 win over Maverick A No. 1. Mike Lombardo paced Maverick C with a pair of touchdowns. Other TD's were contributed by Mike Mulcahey, George McDaniel, Larry Poe and Chris Hodges.

UNC Breaks Two Hexes With Win Over Maryland

By ED FREAKLEY
DTH Staff Writer

The Tar Heels broke two jinxes yesterday while beating the Maryland Turtles. They won two games in a row for the first time since beating Michigan State and Wake Forest early last year and it was their first home win of the current season.

The score, 12-10, indicates that it was a close ball game. But Carolina outhustled, outdefensed, out-offensed and outplayed the team that squeaked by them by one point last year.

Tom Nugent had his usual bag of tricks — reverses and cute kick off returns — but the boys in blue weren't about to be fooled.

You might say UNC got two big breaks. Maryland wing back Bobby Collins dropped what would have been a sure touchdown in the first quarter. It was the same Collins though who came back in the final quarter to scare the Tar Heels on Maryland's desperation drive. He also set up the Maryland touchdown.

Second Break

Carolina's second break came on a second quarter Terrapin fumble on their own 30.

But the Tar Heels capitalized on their breaks and that's what makes a football team. Third downs were a big factor yesterday, just as they were against State last week. And UNC continually came up with the Big Play. That's called clutch football.

On two occasions the Maryland kicker rolled the ball dead inside UNC's five. Both times the Tar Heels moved the ball out of danger.

Charlie Carr, the guy who was a goat against Michigan dropping a beautiful TD pass in the end zone, was the fellow wearing number 80 who made a tremendous catch of a Danny Talbott pass for Carolina's first score — and he was the happiest one around.

Key Passes

Little Bud Philips came in when the pressure was on, and caught several key passes, one for 46 yards to set up the second touchdown.

If you tried to pick out all the outstanding players you would have to start at one end of the bench and go to the other, they were all great.

Carolina beat State by three points; the Heels only beat Maryland by two. But the Tar Heel team in Kenan Stadium yesterday was far superior to the one over in Raleigh last week.

Maryland had a tremendous band. They put on an entertaining show. Carolina's band was all decked out in new uniforms. They really LOOKED good.

The Tar Heel record now stands at 3-2. Next week it's the Deacons of Wake Forest —four?

Maryland had a cannon — it went BOOM. Carolina had a football team — it WON.

Bramson Misses Final Field Goal

By PAT STITH
DTH Sports Editor

North Carolina played good, hard football — winning football — for 59 minutes and 51 seconds here in Kenan Stadium yesterday but none of that counted when Maryland's Chilean kicking specialist, Bernardo Bramson, brought his tee onto the field with just nine seconds to go.

Bramson, as ex-soccer player who approaches the ball from the side, attempted a 45 yarder and almost made it. But almost didn't count anything and UNC won, 12-10.

It was justice. Bramson helped beat North Carolina 10-9 last year at Norfolk with a field goal and PAT. He had accounted for four of his team's 10 points in the same manner this time.

But yesterday, that wasn't enough. North Carolina, winning at home for the first time in three starts, upped its record to 3-2 overall and served notice that it is a contender for the conference title.

The Tar Heels got ahead on a perfectly executed 22 ya ! pass play from quarterback Danny Talbott to sophomore wide end Charlie Carr in the end zone early in the 2nd period

And they stayed ahead throughout the game, leading 6-0 at halftime, and 6-3 at the end of the third quarter. But they won it the hard way, driving 94 yards early in the fourth period for what turned out to be the winning score.

Talbott teamed with running back David Riggs and wingback Bud Phillips, both second stringers, to make the attack go.

	Md.	UNC
First downs	13	14
Yards rushing	99	156
Passes	19-29	9-17
Yards passing	194	110
Passes interceptd	2	2
Fumbles lost	1	0
Yards penalized	22	9
Punts	4-45.8	5-45.0

Score by quarters:

Maryland	0	0	3	7	—10
Carolina	0	6	0	6	—12

Riggs started it with a 12 yard run through the middle of Maryland's eight man line. Then on a third down and eight situation at the 20 yard line, Talbott hit Phillips coming across the middle and he ran 46 yards down the left sideline to the Maryland 34.

The drive almost faltered at the Maryland 27 on a fourth and three situation Talbott elected to run it himself and gained 15. A play later Riggs ran nine yards to the Maryland three and Danny took it on in.

The key factor in that drive was Talbott's ability to come up with the big play on third and fourth down situations.

He was able to do that on seven occasions during the ball game. Both his own coach, Jim Hickey, and Maryland Coach Tom Nugent praised Talbott for his knack with coming up with the big play.

"I've called him (Talbott) the best before and I still do," Nugent said. "He made those big third down long yardage plays. That made a big difference today."

Seldom did either team drive very deep into enemy territory.

Maryland rolled inside the UNC 30 yard line only three times — in the third period when it worked the ball down to the 18 setting up Bramson's 38 yard field goal, late in the last quarter when the Terps went 80 yards in 11 plays to cut Carolina's lead to 12-10, and the desperation drive with seconds remaining that carried to the UNC 28.

North Carolina didn't do much better. The Tar Heels moved the ball to the Maryland 22 in the first period where Carr's 44 yard field goa attempt was short; in the sec-

Car Towing On Carolina Campus

By ERNEST ROBL
DTH Staff Writer

Editor's Note: DTH photographer Ernest Robl went along with Campus Security Chief Arthur Beaumont ot check on illegally parked cars on campus yesterday morning. Following is his report.

Campus Security Chief Arthur Beamont chewed thoughtfully on his ever-present cigar and listened patiently as a campus policeman explained about a car which had been illegally parked in front of Woolen Gym for several days.

Just then a student, with a somewhat sheepish expression on his face, walked into Beaumont's office.

"Do you want to go out to get your car now?" Beaumont asked recognizing the student.

"I sure do!" the student replied emphatically.

The subject of course was another car that had been illegally parked and towed away by campus police. Beaumont asked the student to wait a few seconds while he gathered up a few papers and put them in a small folder; then, with the student, he headed for his official Carolina-blue car behind the Y-Building.

Glum Look

As they walked along, the student didn't say much; he just looked glum.

He got in up front next to Beaumont, and then, almost apologetically he began to explain why his car had been towed away: "I've been having trouble with my battery all week, and I just couldn't get the car started yesterday . . .

"I though I'd try again today, but when I got there — well, there was no car there . . ."

At this point, Beaumont asked why he had not left a note under the windshield wipers.

"I'd resigned myself to the fact that I would get a ticket; I didn't even think about them (he stressed the them) towing away my car . . ." Then somewhat as an afterthought, the student added, "Ten dollars sure is a lot of money!"

By the time he had made a few more remarks along the same lines, Beaumont had arrived at the car compound near the University warehouses on Airport Road.

Dead Battery

Beaumont unlocked the gates to the compound and waited for the student to pull out. The motor on the student's foreign car turned over once or twice and then ground to a stop. The battery really was dead.

At this point the campus security chief began rummaging through the mass of equipment stowed in the trunk of his official car, finally coming up with two jumper cables.

Beaumont then offered a few helpful hints on how to prevent corosion around battery terminals; the gratefully acknowledged Beaumont's help, and drove off with a wave of his hand.

"That's the trouble," Beaumont said as he closed the gate to the enclosure, "most everybody has a good excuse.

"So far everyone's had a good excuse except one boy. He told me it was raining that day. 'I took a chance,' he later told me, 'and I lost,'" Beaumont said and chuckled good naturedly.

On the way back into Chapel Hill he placed a call to the Dean of Men's office from the radio - telephone in his car and had a lengthy conversation about salesmen who had reportedly been in dorimotries against regulations.

Then he headed for Woollen Gym to look for the illegally parked car which the campus policeman had told him about earlier. And sure enough, the car was right in front of the gym — parked next to a yellow curb.

The bright red ticket under the wiper already looked a little weathered.

Take It Away

Beaumont tried the doors on the car and found them unlocked. He failed, however, to find any registration papers in the glove compartment. The policeman who had reported the car arrived at this time, and after a brief consultation with him, Beaumont called a local service station on his car telephone and asked them to tow the car away.

During the ten or so minutes it took for the wrecker to arrive, the campus security chief had to keep at least five other people from parking in the same illegal zone.

Finally the wrecker arrived, and without much ado, the driver of the truck jumped out and hooked up the car. After a few more adjustments, the mechanic started to raise the front of the car.

Beaumont took off the parking brake of the car and the wrecker pulled away.

Back in his car again, Beaumont remarked, "If this keeps up, we'll have to get a taxi service out to the compound." Almost to himself, he added, "I wonder what this one's going to say."

THE BEGINNING — Campus Security Chief Arthur Beaumont watches as the tow truck backs up to an illegally parked car.

THE END — The tow line has been hooked up and the front end of the car is already off the ground. Soon the car will be gone. —DTH Photos by Ernest Robl.

SPU, Others Demonstrate At Special Forces Post

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

FORT BRAGG — Twenty demonstrators from the University staged a protest on this military post yesterday against American action in Viet Nam. They were promptly picked up by Military Polic,

The group, all of whom have been students at UNC and most of whom are now, were taken to the Provost Marshal's Office. They were charged with entering military property for an unlawful purpose and were permanently expelled from Fort Bragg.

If any of the group should re-enter the military reservation, he would be subject to arrest and a fine of up to $500, up to six months in prison, or both. An unidentified military spokesman said that it was felt that the group was "interfering with the normal activity" on the post.

SPU's Part

Some of the demonstrators were members of the Student Peace Union. Chuck Schunior, SPU head, said that Fort Bragg was chosen for the scene of the protest "because it's the home of the Special Forces detachment."

Special Forces troops have played an important part in American actions in Viet Nam.

The group arrived at Fort Bragg after the 150-mile trip from Chapel Hill and began demonstrating about 3 p.m. They were picked up about 3:25 and were taken to the Provost Marshal's office in three three-quarter ton trucks.

"Army MP's spotted the three cars (that the group arrived in) as they entered the reservation," the Army spokesman said, "and the demonstrators stood out like sore thumbs."

"Yesterday we were alerted it was highly probably we'd be visited," he added. He said the alert came from higher headquarters through normal channels.

Precautions

According to the spokesman, since the march by Berkeley students on the Oakland Army Terminal several months ago, all Army posts take precautions before these demonstrations.

When the demonstrators arrived on the post, they began picketing in the parking lot of the John F. Kennedy Center For Special Warfare. About 30 MP's were there, some standing between the pickets and a crowd of army dependents.

After a few minutes, the demonstrators began chatting with each other and admiring each other's signs. When they were picked up, they let the signs hang out the back of the trucks as they were driven away.

One of the signs said: "Freedom, Saigon, Santo Domingo, and Selma." Another read: "We're from the University of North Carolina."

When asked about his treatment, Schunior replied, "We were fairly treated according to the Army's own standards." He refused to say whether he plans to return to Fort Bragg.

Graham Memorial Plans Summer European Flights

For the fourth year Graham Memorial is making European flights available for students and staff on all campuses of the Consolidated University.

Students must have completed both semesters of this year, and staff members must have worked for six months prior to the flight departure date.

Children, spouses and parents of the eligible student or staff member may accompany him.

Only tickets for economy class jet air transportation will be sold for the four available flights. Flight 1 (BOAC) will leave June 8 and return July 7; Flight 2 (Pan American) will leave June 9 and return August 18; Flight 3 (BOAC) will leave June 9 and return September 5 and Flight 4 (Pan American) will leave July 21 and return September 5.

Round trip fares are $32.50 for children under 2; $162.50 for children 2 through 11; and $325 for those 12 and over. An initial deposit of $150 must accompany each adult application.

Some Tired Of Petitions

Some people think it's funny that so many petitions have circulated the campus since the beginning of the semester.

In fact, one group thought it was so funny they decided to start their own petition—fight fire with fire, petitionwise.

The latest petitioners, Jim Medford, Bill Woodall and Frank Guenthner, "don't feel that most students are qualified to point a righteous finger" at anyone.

"We also want the Student Legislature to get back to work. We feel that if the recall petition was so popular it would have gotten enough names in a week's time," Woodall added.

The petition, which began Monday, has "well over 500" names attached to it according to Woodall. Mentioning moral laxity in student government, the double standard, the dangers of non-conformity and the paradox of temptation, the petition concludes.

"We . . . propose that, hereafter, all elected representatives of the student body or any segment thereof be of unquestionable virginity."

Student Party Meets Tonight

The Student Party will hold its pre-convention meeting tonight at 8 in Gerrard Hall.

All students who wish to vote at Monday night's SP convention must attend this pre-convention meeting or have attended one of the four previous SP meetings held this semester.

A keynote address will be given tonight by former student body president and SP member Mike Lawler, currently field director for the Youth Educational Services of North Carolina.

Lawler is a former vice president of the National Student Association.

A question and answer period will follow Lawler's address, and all students, especially freshmen and women transfer students, are urged to attend.

TORONTO EXCHANGE

The Toronto Exchange will meet tomorow evening at 5 in Roland Parker 2 in GM Dr. Hayman will speak. All members and alternates must be present.

PARKING REFUNDS

Any students who paid $5 to register his car and who received a "T" sticker can get a $2.50 refund tomorrow. He should know his sticker number and should go to the office of the Dean of Men, 02 South, after 9:30 a.m.

HILLEL SERVICES

Hillel Foundation will hold Sh'mini Atzeret services tonight at 8 and tomorrow morning at 8. Simhat Torah services will be tomorrow night at 8 and Tuesday morning at 8.

FILM TONIGHT

The UNC Film Forum presents Ingmar Bergman's "Winter Light" tonight at 8 in the Presbyterian Student Center. The movie centers around a country pastor who has lost his faith and experiences only the silence of God.

The film will be followed by discussion led by John W. Dixon, associate professor of Art and Religion. Coffee will be served.

WOODROW WILSON

All seniors who are interested in being nominated for the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship program should contact the honors adviser in their major department as soon as possible.

SPANISH STUDENTS

Eight Spanish students are visiting the UNC campus this weekend under the auspices of the YM-YWCA. The group was scheduled to tour the campus, attend classes, and go to the football game yesterday. Today they will participate in discussion sessions, and they will complete their visit tomorrow.

Moore Lauds Carolina's Public Service Tradition

From the Raleigh Times

Governor Moore's message to the University at Chapel Hill on her 170th anniversary expresses well the Governor's feelings—both personal and official—regarding the University.

He noted that he was sending greetings to "my alma mater" and to "her Chancellor." And, he noted that he joins the people of the State in looking "to the University for constructive and aggressive leadership in public education in our State. . . . The University has a noble tradition of public service to North Carolina and to our country. . . . Let us reaffirm our faith and pledge again our full strength to insure the continuation of her good works for all our people."

Those aren't the words of a timid man speaking about a University which has always been unafraid of controversy, and which has always been willing to speak out for all the people of her State. Those are the words of a man who glories in what his Alma Mater has done, and who is willing to shout those glories from the highest academic housetop in the State.

Those are not the words of a man who would accept the counsel of the timid and the frightened and say that the University and her teachers shall be timid and afraid to speak out on any subject which might offend or irritate anyone. Those are, instead, the words of a man who seeks "constructive and aggressive leadership" from the University.

Those are not the words of a man who mumbles about subversion on a campus. They are, instead, the words of a man who glories in the "noble tradition" of public service made at Chapel Hill.

Those are not the words of a man who attacks those who have and are now guiding the University. Instead, they are the words of a man who is willing and eager to send warm greetings to the Chancellor of the University.

It is important that the people of North Carolina hear these words of greeting from Governor Moore to his Alma Mater at this particular time. They are in such contrast to some of the words which some North Carolinians have said about Chapel Hill in recent years. They are in such contrast with the actions which some North Carolinians have taken against Chapel Hill in recent years. They are in such contrast to the words of some apostles of timidity and weakness of recent years.

And, it is important that the people of North Carolina realize that Dan Moore is not only Governor of North Carolina, but by virtue of that office is chairman of the UNC Board of Trustees. His sentiments on University day then came not only from the Governor but from thechairman of the trustees, and that dual voice gives unusual weight to his words.

The call for constructive and aggressive leadership means that the trustees which the Governor heads as chairman must have the power to operate the University in such a way as to make such constructive and aggressive leadership possible.

Graduate Men, Rejoice!

From PARADE Magazine

At the recent meeting of the Endocrinological Congress in Hamburg researchers announced that baldness may be interpreted as a good sign of virility in a man. A bald head indicates that a man has a good supply of male sex hormones—since these testostereones, plus the inherited tendency, are what make hair fall out. Hairy-headed men in many cases have just as many masculine sex hormones as bald-headed ones, but in addition have a different inheritance pattern.

A man whose hair is falling out may cut the loss by having his supply of sex hormones reduced, but in doing so would risk his virility. Prof. Vogt of Hamburg gave the paper on baldness and virility to more than 400 endocrinologists.

'The Knack' Features Excellent Performances

The transference of an essentially stage-oriented farce to the celluloid medium has produced, in the hands of Richard Lester, the cinecomedy.

The cinecomedy involves the use of all the techniques of filming as instruments of the comedy, vehicles of the farce, which go beyond the stock variety of goofy expressions and gestures in, say, the Jack Lemon style.

Four superb actors are in league with director Lester to create the most interesting and imaginative cinecomedy seen in these parts in a long time: "The Knack . . . and how to get it," which opened Wednesday at the Varsity in Chapel Hill and the Rialto in Durham.

The knack at issue is nothing more than the art of making women. Tolen the motorcyclist has it; Colin the school teacher doesn't. He wants to know how to get it. Rita Tushingham, playing mostly herself but called Nancy Jones in the movie, becomes the object of the knack, is chased up and down London streets and parks, proclaims herself raped, ascends to the position of princess in Colin's house, and finally shows Colin he has got the knack by falling in love with him.

To make the slapstick complete, there is Tom, insane painter of walls, who acts as the third man with no interest in any of the girls and thus replaces the otherwise necessary chorus in this drama (indeed it smacks of Aristophanes' Lysistrata as well as slapstick comedie buff of the French comic opera tradition). Tom's all-white (including floors, ceilings and windows) room provides the setting for the film's most brilliant poses and shots.

All that is commonplace and borrowed in this film (Keystone Kids-type scrambles through countless walls and doors) is reworked into such an individual style or camera technique that it is fresh and funny.

And there is a great deal that is neither commonplace nor old. Perhaps the most effective scenes in the work are those used as the credits are shown in the very beginning — bevies of big-busted beauties, all of a Swedish imprint, lining the stairs leading to Tolen's magic room (where he exercises his knack). John Barry's music is a delight and surprise throughout.

The editing is generally outstanding but sometimes gets away with itself; you can't follow dialogue, development or faces. The acting (Ray Brooks, Michael Crawford, Donal Donnelly and Rita Tushingham) is tremendous, but I was sorry to see Rita playing such a Tushingham role. The bane of being stereotyped by directors and producers into a certain face, smile and effect on audiences may have befallen her already. Except for a few new flashes, it's the taste-of-honey-girl-with-the-green-eyes all over again. (But we all love her that way!)

This cinecomedy is still essentially Ann Jellicoe's stageplay and you'd better look at it that way (like "Porgy and Bess"). Charles Wood's script gets weak sometimes, but Lester's direction and David Watkins' camera work make up for all that.

It's all fun and entertainment and you get two art shorts (one abstract, one live) to boot at the Rialto showing. Highly recommended for tired students and drama buffs.

Major Carolina Newspapers Deny Attacks On University

Four major North Carolina newspapers deny that they have attacked UNC over the Dickson case.

We have not commented on the Dickson case.

H. C. Bradshaw, editorial page editor, Durham Morning Herald:

The Durham Morning Herald has not attacked the University of North Carolina in the matter of the Dickson case. This newspaper, in editorial comment October 3, was critical of the Honor System for not acting in this case.

David Gillespie, Associate Editor, Charlotte Observer:

We haven't commented on the Dickson case.

Sam Ragan, Executive Editor, Raleigh News and Observer:

The News and Observer has not attacked the University because of the Dickson case. The only editorial that might have been related to the subject was a commendation to UNC for eliminating the "double standard" as regard to rules for men and women.

I cannot see any basis for attack on the University in the case. In fact, I cannot see much reason for the uproar over the incident.

In her speech before Student Legislature October 7, Sharon Rose stated that the University "is being attacked by every major newspaper in the state of North Carolina."

In a statement released October 9, Student Party Floor Leader Don Wilson said there has been "a deliberate campaign to get the present issue into the state press in order to further inflame the situation."

The facts speak for themselves.

Letters To The Editor

SDS Rebuts Maupin Article, Calls Meeting Monday Night

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Armistead Maupin Jr., in his edit of Thursday, October 14, entitled "The Leftovers" put us just where we want to be. If his analysis of the issues facing our University is the best the DTH has to offer, then we want to be left over and left out.

Maupin is throwing sand in a sandbox — avoiding significant issues which should rightly be the concern of "The South's Largest College Newspaper." Given an opportunity to write three editorials, what does he choose to turn our attention to First, a proposal to erect an angel on the campus in memory of Thomas Wolfe; second, a suggestion to change a couple of words in our Alma Mater; and third, an attempt to red-bait UNC's chapter of Students for a Democratic Society and the national SDS as a whole.

The first two editorials are innocuous and puerile; the third editorial cannot be dismissed so lightly. Its intent is clear: to insinuate that SDS is communist, or at least led by communists, or duped by communists, or loyal to Lenin. Such insinuations are categorically untrue. They hark back to the McCarthy era. They represent an attempt to blacklist an organization by innuendo, an attempt to avoid considering the important issues which SDS — locally and nationally — seeks to address. In short, such insinuations represent the worst brand of irresponsible journalism and the totalitarian ideology of the McCarthy era.

SDS is a radical organization — radical in the sense that it seeks to get to the root of problems besetting our democracy. And it seeks a democratic solution to these problems. To be radical is not necessarily to be extreme; but a radical analysis of political, economic and cultural phenomena is often unpopular or misunderstood. If Maupin would come around and talk to us, rather than red-bait us without ever inquiring into our activities and program at UNC, perhaps he would learn something from our free-wheeling discussions and debates. We talk about the war in Viet Nam, about in loco parentis, the role of a free university in a political state, and we are planning action — this year — on each of these issues and others.

Maupin should know that facts have meaning only in some contest. The implied meaning of the facts he cites is that SDS is red. But it is possible that the New York office of SDS — the one with pictures of Lenin on the wall — has a bit of a sense of humor. And it is possible that loyal Americans — Senator Wayne Morse, Norman Cousins, Clark Kissinger, and others — are quite right to question the legality and the morality of U. S. military intervention in Viet Nam. It is possible that the reason the League for Industrial Democracy cut off SDS funds was the reason given — to preserve LID's tax-exempt status and not, as Maupin "suspects" because they were "a trifle nervous" about SDS activities. And finally, it is possible that SDS this summer scratched a reference to communism in its constitution because of its genuine commitment to democracy — a participatory democracy where men of all political hues could freely speak.

If Maupin is interested in hearing about the SDS convention which scratched the reference to communism he should come to our meeting — it's open to the public — at 8 p.m. Monday in 205 Alumni. He will there get the facts, in the form of reports from two persons who were at the SDS

The truth, Mr. Maupin, is one thing, but the whole truth is something else again.

Roy James McCorkel Jr.,
Chairman, UNC Students for a Democratic Society

In Appreciation

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

On behalf of the officers, senators and residents of Scott College, I would like to take this opportunity to publicly thank the administration, Student Legislature, and the Men's Residence Council for their part in making the Scott College Social Room possible. Those due special thanks include Chancellor Paul Sharp; Dean C. O. Cathey; Dean William Long; John Bennett and Giles Horney of Buildings and Grounds; Mrs. Constance Beardsly, the University interior decorator, Russell Perry, Residence Halls Manager and Sonny Pepper, president of the Men's Residence Council.

The Scott College Social Room was constructed in the basement of Teague at a cost of $3,900. It consists of two rooms — one is used as a study room during the week and as a dance room on week-ends and the other is a well-furnished lounge. The rooms provide the basis for an adequate social program for the residents of Parker, Teague and Avery.

So far, we have used it for an orientation reception, a combo party featuring the Embers after the Virginia game, and a reception on University Day. This weekend we used it for a mixer with Kiser Dorm from UNC-G on Friday and a combo party Saturday. We plan to make use of it as much as our funds will allow.

Since the opening of the social room, there has been a significant improvement in the attitude and spirit of the Scott residents toward the residence college system. I feel that this social room will do more towards making the residence college system a great success in Scott College than any other one thing.

Perhaps though, the one most important thing about the social room is that it shows that the administration and Student Government are sincerely working and providing money to make the residence halls not just a place to sleep, but a place to live and a place for enjoyment. I know of no other college or university in the state where this concept is given as much attention as it is here at Carolina. The administration and Student Government are certainly to be commended for their work toward this worthwhile goal.

Robert C. Hunter, Governor
Scott College

LETTERS

The Daily Tar Heel welcomes letters to the editor on any subject, particularly on matters of local or University interest. Barbie's A Moll

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

In an editorial some days ago, the DTH poked fun at some Russian writer who expressed fear of the Barbie doll. DTH readers might be interested to learn that it is not only the Russians who are concerned. The following is a quote from Dr. Alan Leveton, director of the Pediatrics Mental Health Unit, University of California Medical Center, San Francisco — the quote appears on p. 29 of the April, 1965 issue of Ramparts magazine: "We are seeing children who are excited and disturbed by dolls like Barbie and her friends. With baby dolls, girls can play at being active, nurturing mothers and housewives; with Barbie, girls learn to expect to be valued by an ever-increasing wardrobe and their ability to manipulate their fathers and, later, husbands, into buying clothes and more clothes. Boys are being seen in the clinic who use Barbie for sexual stimulation. Both boys and girls are introduced to a precocious, joyless sexuality, to fantasies of seduction and to conspicuous consumption. This reflects and perpetuates a disturbing trend in our culture, which has serious mental-health complications."

Praise For Robl

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

One of the few bright spots in an otherwise sloppy Tar Heel this year has been the consistently fine photography of Ernest Robl.

Your headlines have been poor and misleading; your copy is poorly edited and full of mistakes; your editorials are poorly written and unimaginative; and your coverage of campus events has been sorely lacking.

However, Ernest Robl has shown himself to be one of the sincerest journalists on your staff. He is not only a fine feature writer, but he is also an excellent photographer. Ernest works long and hard in taking and developing his photos, which are greatly enhanced by the photo-offset process you and the Chapel Hill Weekly are now using.

We have noticed that Ernest is frequently not accorded the proper credit he deserves for his photographs. He is your only photographer, but there is no reason why he shouldn't receive full credit for his photos.

As a communist I find it shocking and somewhat humourous that there is such an ado here over your "Speaker Ban Law." Don't flatter yourselves, for in my humble opinion I cannot imagine why any self-respecting comrade would take it upon himself to try to lecture to you, fellow students.

Cartoonist Feiffer

Intellectual doodler Jules Feiffer suggests that the best way for a student to become a good drawer is "to join Students for a Democratic Society, or picket the White House." Feiffer says that any good cartoonist must first be a good thinker.

Of himself, he says: "I really don't like drawing that much, and I like it less as the years go by." He laments that "there are no adult newspapers anywhere in this country."

University Party Chooses Candidates Tomorrow Night

The University Party will hold its nominating convention tomorrow night at 7 in Carroll Hall.

The UP will endorse candidates for the offices of freshman, sophomore and junior class presidents, vice presidents, social chairmen, and secretaries.

Every fraternity, sorority and residence hall participating should choose a chairman for their delegation at the convention.

The first five paid members of each delegation will receive five initial ballots for the convention, and one additional ballot for every extra 10 members of the delegation.

Registration of delegations and accreditation of UP embers will be handled by David Kiel and John Lovell. No delegation will be allowed to vote until all its membership dues have been paid.

Persons interested in seeking a UP nomination for class office should come by 206 Davie Hall for an interview or contact a UP official for explanation of requirements and proceedures.

All candidates are required to make a short speech concerning qualifications and platform at the convention.

"The University Party will continue this fall to seek the finest of candidates for class office who display the attributes of leadership and responsibility," UP Chairman Jim Hubbard said yesterday.

Hickey Pleased With Close Win

By GENE RECTOR
DTH Assistant Sports Editor

UNC coach Jim Hickey hung out his "how sweet it is" sign Saturday afternoon. The Tar Heels' two-point victory over Maryland looked like a million dollars.

"We beat a darn good football team out there," said Hickey, loosening his tie, then taking a long swallow from a half-spent coke bottle.

"We had to play darn good football to beat them. It was just as I figured—awfully close."

Needless to say, Hickey was pleased with his team's performance.

"I'm tickled to death with the way we played." he said. "The whole team played real hard. There was quite a change from the Virginia game.

"We were very concerned with Maryland's ability to run with the ball," he continued. "If you don't play tough football, they'll blow you right off the field."

Once again Hickey had praise for junior quarterback Danny Talbott.

"Talbott is a real good ball carrier—good scrambler," he said. "He's probably the best scrambler we've had at Carolina. Gary Black last season was good, but I believe Danny will be better."

The wild and wooly finish which saw Maryland miss a last-minute field goal was no stranger to the Tar Heels.

"We've had some close games this year," said Hickey, drawing a deep, relaxing breath.

"You never get used to those type of finishes, but if you can win them—well, it's not so bad."

Carolina Goes Oriental: Judo

By SANDY TREADWELL
DTH Sports Writer

A few days ago I was introduced to the world of Judo.

As I walked towards the wrestling room I heard the blood - thirsty yells of what could have been Comanche injuns attacking a helpless wagon train. The yells were followed by heart stopping thuds which seem to shake the walls of Woollen Gymnasium.

A big man dressed in a white robe and baggy pants held up by a thin black belt walked up.

"My name's John Pyecha," he said while engulfing my hand in his. "Look around. Ask me any questions you might have." He pointed to eight similarly dressed figures." We're working on Uchkomi, we're practicing entering and getting contact."

John Pyecha walked over to two boys and intently watched them fling one another over their shoulders.

"Know you can prop that right elbow up under his armpit," he told one of them. "Go at each other for about a minute. BANG! BANG! BANG! Try to make as many throws as you can within that time."

The eight robed figures paired off and bowed silently to one another.

Then each pair began walking slowly back and forth as if they were desperately trying to master the fox trot.

Suddenly they exploded into action. Eight bodies were quickly, and some expertly, flung into the air.

"I've played a lot of sports," John said after the 45-minute practice was up and eight tired figures had bowed to him and limped off to the showers. "I've seen my share also. I've never seen anything more spectacular than a perfect Judo throw."

Pyecha was a NCIA basketball All America at Appalachian State Teachers College. He threw baseballs before he turned to throwing bodies, as a relief man for the Cub's in '54-'55.

"Judo is a great second sport," he explained. "It is wonderful for both high school and college boys. It teaches balance and speed, and these are invaluable assets in all sports."

"Judo started at Carolina last year," John explained.

"We now have an informal team, and we're going to have matches with some of the military clubs in this area.

"Within a decade I believe Judo will be a part of the athletic programs of the schools in the Atlantic Coast Conference. The boys we have now are eager to learn and are already becoming experienced. Anyone else who is interested in joining the sport should contact me."

Nugent Quiet After Loss

By RON SHINN
DTH Sports Writer

Maryland Coach Tom Nugent was a quiet man Saturday afternoon. He didn't have a statement to make, he just politely answered questions.

His highly-touted Terps had just lost their second game of the season, this time to UNC, 12-10.

Bernado Bramson, Maryland's soccer - style kicking specialist, missed a field goal attempt from the 35 yard line with nine seconds remaining that meant the difference.

"I just don't know what happened on that kick," Nugent told the handful of reporters that had followed him into the dressing room.

"Bramson had been kicking extremely well lately. He kicked several that were longer than that in the pregame warmups. I don't believe that the wind was a factor at the time. I honestly though that he would make it."

Nugent echoed all of the other coaches that have been forced to contend with Carolina quarterback Danny Talbott.

"I've said it before and I'll say it again today, Talbott is the best. He made those big third down plays that really hurt us. He really scrambles on the field. That made a big difference out there today."

When asked about his quarterback shuffling Nugent explained that his game plan called for Phil Petry to run the attack, but for Jim Corcoran to be used liberally to do most of the passing.

"Corcoran hurt his knee early in the game, so we had to go more with Petry than had been planned. We had planned to do more passing, but this prevented it."

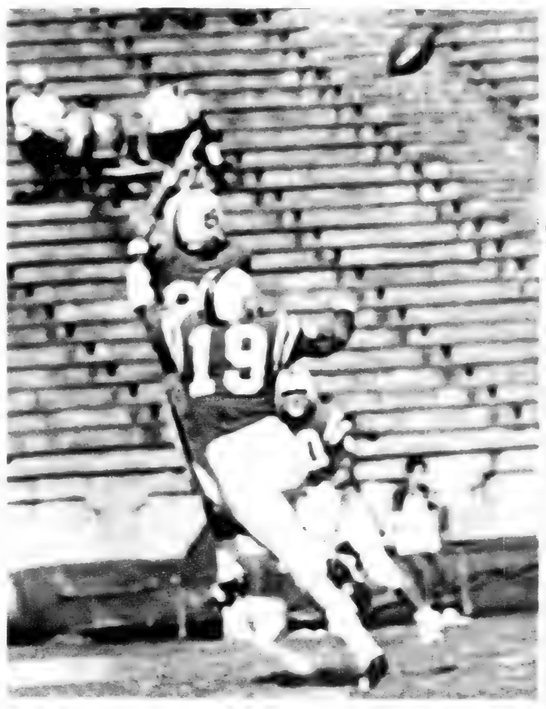
Getting down to specifics, Nugent singled out two plays that decided the ball game. Both went against his Terps.

The first was early in the second quarter when wingback Bobby Collins fumbled on Maryland's 30 yard line, setting up the first Carolina score.

The second came later in that same period when Corcoran let loose the long bomb to Collins in the clear. The pass slipped through his fingers.

"It must have been an exciting game for the spectators," said Nugent. "Both teams played good hard football. There was a lot of good running, passing, and some beautiful blocking.

"But, from where I was sitting it was a long day."



UNC'S Charlie Carr goes skyward to haul in Danny Talbott's 22 yard touchdown pass early in the second quarter. Maryland's Tony Santry is the defender. North Carolina won 12-10.

UM Loses As FG Try Fails

ond and third quarters when they went in for scores and in the last period when defensive back Alan McArthur intercepted Phil Petry's pass and returned it to the UM 30.

That drive died on the 21 when Bob Sullivan intercepted Talbott's pass in the end zone.

Breaks figured in the game.

The two on which the game hinged both involved Maryland's senior end Bob Collins. He fumbled on UM's 20 after catching a pass on the first play of the second quarter. Middle guard Joe Fratangelo shook him loose and McArthur covered it.

That led to UNC's first touchdown six plays later.

Later in the same quarter Maryland had the ball on its own 16 when UNC defensive back Bill Edwards came up to stop what he thought was a running play, Collins streaked by him straight up the middle into the clear.

Petry hit him on the dead run with a perfect pass but Collins let it slip through his arms.

Star Witness For Defense Testifies In Rinaldi Trial

HILLSBOROUGH (AP)—The state scored a ey victory in the Frank Rinaldi murder trial Friday when Judge George M. Fountain ruled that the jury be allowed to consider statements police said the defendant made the night of his arrest.

Rinaldi, 36, a one-time graduate student and former University of North Carolina instructor, is being tried a second time on a a charge of first degree murder in the death of his wife on Christmas Eve, 1963.

He was convicted last November, but the State Supreme Court granted him a new trial because of errors in the first trial.

The jury of eight men and four women was sent from the courtroom Friday while Judge Fountain heard testimony concerning statements allegedly made by Rinaldi on the night of his arrest. The same day his wife was killed.

Following his ruling, Fountain returned the jury to the courtroom. The jury was out more than three hours.

Mrs. Rinaldi, 34, was found slain in her husband's Chapel Hill apartment with a scarf knotted about her head. She had been beaten severely about the face and head. The state contends a $20,000 double indemnity insurance policy motivated her death.

Police's Statement

Chapel Hill Police Sgt. James Farrell testified Rinaldi asked him at the police department, "How can you sit with anyone who has done what I have done?"

Detective Sgt. Howard Pendergrath said Rinaldi told him, "I assume you are looking for a motive. I guess money and women would be the biggest."

Solicitor Thomas D. Cooper Jr. said no effort was made at Rinaldi's first trial to get these statements before the jury.

A state Bureau of Investigation agent, F. G. Satterfield Jr., testified Thursday while the jury was absent that Rinaldi told him the night of his arrest the police might think he killed his wife for three reasons:

1. Financial difficulties; 2. Money; and 3. Another woman.

In ruling the testimony admissible, Judge Fountain said the statements were made "voluntarily without any threat." He added that Rinaldi's constitutional rights had not been violated.

Defense attorney Barry Winston testified that he had been assured by Pendergrath and another SBI agent, Haywood Starling, that Rinaldi would be sent to a hospital for a sedative and would be allowed to go to bed without being questioned further the night of the slaying.

No Recall

Starling told the judge, "I do not recall any such conversation." Then Starling added to Winston, "What you are saying has no truth whatsoever."

Starling told the court he had advised Rinaldi at the police station that anything he might say could be held against him. Police testified that Rinaldi was taken to a hospital where he was given two envelopes containing pills for his emotional condition.

The officers said they did not know whether he took the pills.

Pendergrath, Starling, Farrell and another officer, Lt. Charlie Edmonds, testified in their opinion Rinaldi was not under the influence of any drug when he went to bed the night of his arrest.

Rinaldi and his wife, a bride of only five months when she died, grew up in Waterbury, Conn., where they were childhood sweethearts. She was about 17 weeks pregnant when she was killed.

The courtroom was less than half filled for Friday's sessions.

Morehead Show Features 'Earth In The Universe'

Morehead Planetarium is currently showing a one-hour program to demonstrate the workings of the Zeiss Planetarium Projector. The demonstration of the two and one half ton projector will run through Nov. 22.

"Because we have so many questions about our star machine we have devised 'The Earth in the Universe' to show to the public just what the projector can do," said Donald S. Hall, assistant director at the Planetarium.

During the show, the projector will be moved on its three axes of motion to simulate motion in the sky due to rotation, revolution, wobble, and movement of the observer on earth.

Morehead audiences will be able to watch the moon whiz through part of its cycle of phases, travel to the North Pole, see the sky over North Carolina as it would appear in the year 13,000 A.D., and observe many other celestial sights.

The program is shown each night at 8:30, Saturdays at 11 a.m., 1, 3, 4, and 8:30 p.m. (11, 5, and 8:30 on home football Saturdays), and Sundays at 2, 3, 4, and 8:30.

"The Zeiss Projector here is one of only six in the entire country and the only one in the southeast. We hope everyone will come to witness this presentation," Hall said.

1,912 Students Ask For Recall

By JOHN GREENBACKER
DTH Political Writer

Paul Dickson received a petition yesterday signed by 1,912 students which demands a recall election for student body president.

The election will be held within two weeks if the signatures on the petition prove to be valid, according to Attorney General John Ingram.

The petition which has been circulating on campus for 11 days, was presented to Dickson at 4 p.m. yesterday by its sponsor Sharon Rose, student legislator and member of Dickson's own student political party.

Miss Rose charged the Student Party leader and student body president had become "a symbol of irresponsibility" for the University in the eyes of the state.

"I would like to see somebody elected to the student body presidency who will stand by the principles which we are all pedged to uphold," she said at a press conference before the presentation.

Dickson has been criticized by students, faculty and University administrators since his conviction last summer for a Campus Code violation.

The Raeford, N. C., junior was given an official reprimand by the Men's Honor Council for taking a summer school coed into a closed fraternity house and keeping her there all night.

The girl, who was convicted of violating women's closing hours, was suspended from the University at Chapel Hill, and is currently enrolled at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

Dickson said yesterday he is not certain whether he will run in a recall election.

"We must determine if the petition is in order first," Dickson said before turning it over to Ingram for investigation and validation.

Miss Rose said a minimum number of nearly 1,850 signatures on the petition was necessary for a recall election to be held.

The sophomore from Charlotte estimated another 100 names would be added to the list of signatures when the last of the petitions are delivered to her.

"I want to say from the outset that this crisis is infinitely greater than Paul Dickson or any other single individual," Miss Rose said.

"Unfortunately Paul Dickson has taken a position which has made him a symbol of the problems which beset our university."

"The controversy which has surrounded the state "Speaker Ban Law" continues to drown the university in a cold and heavy sea of political manuvers," she said.

"Many individuals and organizations throughout the state have done a great deal to see that the law in maintained or even strengthened," she said, "but by making himself a symbol of the irresponsibility which they have charged against the University, Paul Dickson has unwittingly done more than all of them to see that this law is retained.

"All of these things lend support to those who claim the students and administration of this university cannot be trusted to take responsible positions of their own initiative," she said.

She termed the petition movement a "spontaneous" reaction.

"Interested students from both the University and the Student Parties volunteered to circulate the petition," she said.

She said a higher percentage of coeds supported the petition than male students, and she attributed this fact to her belief that "girls have more ideals than boys" in matters of this sort.

The validity of the signatures on the petition will be determined by members of the

Prospective Jurors Admit Belief In Negro Inferiority

HAYNEVILLE, Ala. (AP)—Prospective white jurors chosen for the civil rights murder trial of a Ku Klux Klansman admitted in most instances yesterday that they believe Negroes are inferior.

They said, too, in answer to lengthy questioning by a state's attorney that they have a low opinion of white civil rights workers who live and work with Negroes.

But despite their belief in white supremacy, they said they felt they could conscientiously impose the death penalty on a white defendant charged with killing a white civil rights worker.

The members of the jury panel were questioned individually at the outset of Klansman Collie Leroy Wilkins, Jr.'s second trial for the slaying of a Detroit housewife and civil rights worker, Mrs. Viola Liuzzo.

Atty. Gen. Richmond Flowers, who removed the regular prosecutor and took charge of the case himself with an angry denunciation of the Klan, chose the seldom-used procedure of questioning the prospective jurors individually as a means of getting as much information as he could about their background and beliefs.

A member of Flowers' staff, Assistant Atty. Gen. Joe Breck Gantt, did most of the questioning.

One juror, J. F. Callison, a farmer from nearby Calhern, shot back "Where are you from?" when the Assistant Attorney General asked him if he believed white persons are superior to Negroes.

"I'm from Alabama, from south Alabama," replied Gantt, the former prosecuting attorney at Andalusia.

"How would you answer that question?" Callison wanted to know. "I can't answer it any more than you can." However, he agreed later that he believes the white race is superior.

UNC Has Had Two Recalls

Article V, section 2 of the Student Constitution of the University of North Carolina states, "Any constituency shall have the power to recall any officer elected by that constituency under this Constitution."

UNC students have exercised this power only twice in the history of the University — both times in a recall election for editor of The Daily Tar Heel.

In 1956 co-editors Louis Kraar and Ed Yoder soundly defeated their opponents after being challenged for an editorial attack on football coach Jim Tatum, predicting a return to "big-time athletics" to the UNC campus.

A year later students went to the polls and removed DTH Editor Neil Bass from office. Doug Eisele was elected in the Nov. 26 vote. Bass was also brought under fire for editorially attacking Tatum.

According to the constitution, "If the constituency is campus-wide, the petition to recall shall be handed to the President of the Student Body and shall not be valid unless it contains the signatures of at least 15 per cent of the qualified voters."

"The officer in question shall have the right to be a candidate. The incumbent shall continue in office until the election returns shall be officially announced," the Constitution says.

Elections Board Chairman Alvin Tyndall told the DTH yesterday that if the petition is found to be in order it will probably be at least a week before an election date is announced.

Quaker Graduate Student 'Stands Up For Decision'

By STEVE LAIL
Special to the DTH

Henry Coe stood in Y-Court yesterday from 10 a.m. until after 2 p.m. holding a sign.

About 25 feet from him representatives of the Student Peace Union were debating war policies with UNC students.

Coe and the SPU were there because the Navy was there with one of its jets.

On one side of Coe's sign these words were written: "Missiles Classify Power First, People Second. Why Are the People Being Forgotten in Viet Nam?" The other side read: "Power Breeds Power, Thought Promotes Peace."

Passers - by jeered Coe; "Give that guy a rifle instead of a sign"; "Have you burned your draft card yet?"

One offered him a can of lighter-fluid and matches and said "demonstrate."

Another said, "He's a clean one — he takes a bath."

Coe was clean - shaven. He wore a neat green sweater and clean dress pants. His shoes were polished and laced.

"I came out here as an individual," he said. "I'm not a member of the SPU. I've never been to one of their meetings.

He is a Quaker from Swarthmore, Penn., and is a graduate student in city and regional planning.

"I've been ridiculed all day, but when you make a decision for something you believe in you have to stand up for it."

Coe's father was in the Navy submarine division in World War II. He was killed in the war.

He believes that militarism is causing the nation to loose sight of the human aspect.

"I'm just as much a red-blooded American as anyone and it's a sorry day that the right to dissent is equated with being un-American," he said.

At one time nearly 40 people gathered around him. Most were sincere in their arguments with Coe while others laughed at him and made jokes. He kept his ground.

When he couldn't answer a question asked him, he would reply, "I honestly don't know. I don't have a solution to all the problems of war."

Coe looks like the average American male. His hair is cut, and his smile is friendly and warm. His wife upholds his convictions.

He said, "I live in a free country. I know my rights, and I'm standing for them.

Many argued that if Americans had not fought before and now to have a free society, he wouldn't be able to demonstrate.

"You are abusing your freedom by doing this," they said.

Soup, Soap, Shooting At Y-Court

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

Soup, soap and shooting were the topics of Y-Court soap-boxers as SPU members and campus conservatives verbally refought the Asian war yesterday.

A supersonic "Tiger" jet brought in with a Navy information team had sparked the activity.

Advocates of President Johnson's Viet Nam policy dominated the scene, putting the peace group on the defensive.

More than 500 persons watched conservatives wave signs like:

— "End the War in Viet Nam — Kill the V.C."

— "Get Out of the South (in Viet Nam) — Go North."

But the peace demonstrators had their own posters, including:

"Missiles Classify Power First, People Second. Why Are the People Being Forgotten in Viet Nam?"

That was the sign of Henry Coe, a graduate student in city and regional planning, who, although not an SPU member, is opposed to the Asian fighting because of his religious beliefs.

"Power Breeds Power," the sign's other side read.

The sailors who came to show off the "Tiger" jet merely grinned and suggested the peace picketers be drafted.

The servicemen's commander said the demonstrators drew above-average crowds to his exhibit of U. S. military equipment, but he explained he was not authorized to recruit students on campus.

"The Navy should send those 'peaceniks' over there," a burly sailor suggested.

Chip Sharpe, last year's SPU president, asked a heckler, "Do you want to kill your enemy?"

"Well," the heckler shot back, "that's one way of doing things."

Later, somebody sneaked up behind Sharpe and secretly pasted a "Go Navy" sticker onto the seat of his pants.

SPU member Katherine Stuart, New Orleans senior, said a Navy slogan had been attached to her note book.

Generally, however, there was little trouble, though Miss Stuart commented: "(The stay-in-Viet Nam people) were not hostile, except when they heckled us."

Bryden Manning, SPU treasurer, said she had been given a bar of soap but it was only the second she'd been handed since the "soupfast."

"We auctioned that bar off," she said, "for $3.85 at last Sunday's (SPU) meeting."

Funds from the fast totalled over $150, an SPU spokesman announced.

Members of the ultra-conservative Young Americans for Freedom were also present.

One YAF officer walked into the middle of the picketing while wearing a button that proclaimed:

"I'm a right-wing extremist."

The "Tiger" jet, whose presence set off the SPU picketing, is an obsolete Korean vintage plane which has never seen service in Viet Nam.

The men felt the exhibit would contribute to better public relations.

"MY OWN PHILOSOPHY" — That was the reason Henry Coe, a graduate student in the department of City and Regional Planning, gave for demonstrating in Y-Court yesterday. Coe, who is a Quaker, emphasized that he is not connected with any campus organization. His sign read, "Missiles classify power first, people second. Why are people being forgotten in Viet Nam?" The Navy plane in the background is a recruiting exhibit for the NROTC program.

The Soup Hits The Fan

Last Friday we wrote an editorial about the Student Peace Union's involvement in the Get-Out-Of-Viet Nam Soup Fast.

That same day we ran into Jim McCorkel in Y-Court. Jim is President of the UNC Students for a Democratic Society, and he was very mad.

Jim invited us into Anne Queen's office where, among other things, he told us:

(1) that some people he knew were "looking into the possibilities of taking legal action" against us.

(2) that the SPU and the SDS were planning to take us before the Men's Honor Council for "ungentlemanly conduct."

(3) that we made a gross oversight in omitting the fact that SDS co-sponsored the Soup Fast with the SPU.

We are sorry that the SDS escaped our attention. We hope the following editorial will remedy the situation.

And One For The SDS

The liberal columnist team of Rowland Evans and Robert Novak has recently unearthed some alarming facts about the Students for a Democratic Society.

At a special workshop in Bloomington, Ind., the SDS voted by "unanimous agreement" to develop a program that would make the draft system "function less smoothly."

This means, according to Evans and Novak, that the radical group will begin "combatting" the Selective Service system by flooding it with thousands of conscientious objector requests for exemption.

According to the "National Viet Nam News Letter" published by SDS: "We're going to get SDS to put out two publications — a guide to filing for the conscientious objector form (maybe a four-page dealie with a facsimile of the form and some suggested answers) and a guide called 'How to Cool the Military,' which would include all the hints for beating the system."

There is a maximum sentence of five years in jail and $10,000 fine for advising a draft-age American how to avoid the draft. The SDS acknowledges this fact in its news letter.

"For publishing this booklet, we will probably incur Federal prosecution — a political trial in which we will have the secret sympathies of every young guy who has seen the booklet. It should receive massive circulation."

The SDS knows full well that the machinery of the Selective Service system is intricate and highly sensitive to technical foulups. A conscientious objector form, for instance, takes about a year to be completely processed. This delay is a built-in safety factor designed to protect the rights of those who have genuine religious scruples against war.

Realizing the ease with which the draft machinery might be clogged up, the SDS recently asked the California state Selective Service headquarters for 1,000 copies of the conscientious objector form. The request was denied.

SDS estimates that in Michigan alone, 20,000 of some 76,000 college students will probably be drafted. With such a high degree of campus involvement, the group conjectures, "We could tip over some campuses if we push the thing hard."

Aside from clogging draft machinery, the SDS is considering a proposal to conduct "intelligence" investigations in the southern California military complex to determine "when and where strategic materials were being produced and transported throughout the city and out of San Pedro harbor."

The ramifications of this proposal are revoltingly evident: the SDS will do all in its power to obstruct the shipment of war materials to our forces in Viet Nam.

Is it any wonder that the organization is held in such universal contempt at this University?

The Story Of Alberta And A Carolina Gent

I sat dozing on the steps of the library the other day. I felt hot breath on my neck and looked up to see a white St. Bernard standing beside me.

"Mind if I sit down?"

"Sure — go ahead."

"Thanks. I could sit just anywhere, but I happened to be right here when I felt too tired to go on. I feel better now, so I won't bother you any more."

"No — stay. I'm glad to have someone to talk to. What's your name?"

"Alberta."

"That's a nice name."

Alberta became snappish. "Look, it's really no business of yours."

"Okay," I said. "I'm just trying to be friends." On an impulse I leaned toward her and patted her on the head.

Alberta growled deep in her throat. I jerked my hand away.

"Look," she said, "you lay a hand on me again and you'll be minus four fingers."

"Yes ma'am," I whined.

We were both silent for a minute. Alberta was building up steam.

She exploded rabidly. "Oh, I know what you're thinking. You're saying to yourself, 'TCD; just another TCD.' Well listen, buster. You people are the ones who made us the way we are. Let a Carolina dog show the least sign of friendliness and you think it's the old come-on. Let a dog wag his tail even once, and you think that's the signal to put your hands all over him. If you're going to make our lives miserable, then don't expect any favors from us." Her voice choked off.

There was another strained silence.

"Alberta," I said softly, "I don't think you're a pick-up dog. I really like you. I like you not just as a commodity — a head to pat and ears to scratch. I like you — as a dog."

As an afterthought I added, "Alberta, I think of you as someone I'd like to have to bring me my paper in the morning."

Alberta seemed to totter. Her head dropped and she began to shift her front paws aimlessly.

I'm sure that, behind her mat of hair, there were tears in her eyes.

She glanced at me and I smiled.

Alberta lept at me and gave me a huge lick. Her tongue covered my face from ear to ear.

After two more slurping kisses Alberta drew away. She breathed heavily for a moment. Then she became embarrassed. She turned aside, mumbled something and trotted away.

Letters To The Editor

Praise For DTH

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The Daily Tar Heel has been reaching me, and I have seen enough issues to size up what you have been doing. Frankly, this is the most amazing change I have ever seen in a newspaper, student or commercial. The makeup is sparkling, the stories are bright, the coverage is excellent, the editorials are far more readable than those in most daily newspapers.

Since a good many of our faculty members are Chapel Hill graduates, I have been putting the DTH in our faculty lounge, and the comments of my colleagues echo my feelings. They are delighted to see it as I am.

Thanks for putting me on the subscription list, and I hope you can keep me there. At least there's one bright paper in the area — and I do mean one.

Kemp's Music Penetrates Walls

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

There is a certain enterpriser in town who insists that everyone within a block of his establishment must have music 18 hours a day. Perhaps, students are something lower than normal citizens. Perhaps, students are not privileged to enjoy the same peace and quiet that normal citizens enjoy within their places of residence. Certainly, Monk Hammerstein on the files may be the ultimate in concussion instrumentation, but must those living in the men's residence hall across the street have him penetrating their windows, their walls, and their very brains with his cacophonous rhubarb at every hour of the day and night? Don't students have rights like other free citizens — among them the right not to enjoy music if they don't want to? Is it necessary for those who don't want music in their place of abode to have it anyway?

Of course, this may be something that is peculiar to me. My hearing is so sharp that I can hear roaches in the woodwork at night. Maybe I should have my eardrums removed.

Student Opinion: Chase Cafeteria

By RICH ELLIOTT

Chase Cafeteria — good or bad?

Students eating there have discussed this question heatedly. Here's some "food for thought" from several hungry Tar Heels:

Blane Yelton, Forest City, pre-med — Oh, you mean 'The Trough'! It's a pretty building. It's a shame you can't eat buildings."

Barry Serunian, Greensboro, political science — "For the price, I think it's all right."

David Stuhr, Winston-Salem, pharmacy — "I think Chase Cafeteria needs some drastic improvement. The food quality, which was good in the beginning, has deteriorated rapidly."

Dario DelCorro, Fayetteville, business administration — "It hasn't been perfected yet, there are still a lot of kinks."

Richard Cline, Conover, mathematics— "It seems to be very disorganized. It seems that what they lack in quality, they could at least make up in quantity."

Steve Myers, Concord, political science — "I feel that basically Chase is all right, but I feel that the quality and quantity could be raised. If the food could compare with the building, it would be all right."

Wiley Snow, Winston-Salem, RTVMP — "It stinks! I think that sums it up."

Randy Teague, Taylorsville, pharmacy— "After eating at State's cafeteria over the weekend, Chase is 'heaven' — But anyone that knows how bad State's food is, can't rate 'heaven' too well."

Jeff Jorgenson, Durham, chemistry — "A little organization might help, but I doubt it."

Martin Cromartie, Wilmington, business administration — "Good — as the students learn to use the scramble system, it will become more efficient. The food is about normal for a school cafeteria.

Plummer Flippen Jones, III, Statesville, zoology — "For food cooked in such large quantities and for such a price, the food quality is palatable, but any professional pride would make a difference."

Gene Scott, Tuscaloosa, Ala., mathematics — "I think it's pretty good for the price. It could be worse."

Robert Long, Lincolnton, mathematics— I think it's very inefficient. Every time I go over there to eat I hear people complaining. The servers, however, are nicer than at Lenoir. The engineer who planned it really made a mistake."

David Leonard, Lincolnton, business administration — "I don't like the scramble system. It's confusing and jams up too much. The food is the same as at Lenoir."

J. P. Burnette, Farmville, pre-med — "I think basically it's good, but there are many minor things that should be brought up to par."

Steve Syters, Thomasville, undecided — "I've been there a couple times, and the food is as good as Lenoir, but it has a cold atmosphere. It's not as bad as everybody says."

Scott Mills, Frehold, N. J., undecided— "I don't usually bother to go over there. Lenoir is more efficient."

David Badger, Charlotte, English — "My impression there was a big waste of space downstairs. The lower portion could be made more useful. It's a beautiful building."

John Shaw, Jonesville, business administration — "When I ate over there, the food was bad as the service, slow. You get more at Lenoir."

Charlie Thomas, Charlotte, physical education — "I guess the service is all right. The food isn't too good."

Bob Royster, Londale, RTVMP — "I think the food's pretty good. The atmosphere is nice. However, I think they really must like hamburger. A little more variety in menu would be a good thing."

John Morehead, Charlotte, undecided — "Well, it's the best place on campus. I can't think of anything, offhand, that I didn't like about it.

Wyatt Pegram, Hamlet, accounting — "It's a pretty building."

Rick Bacon, Burnsville, mathematics — "When I ate there, the food was cold. You could scrape the artificial color off the ham. There ought to be definite lines.

Donald Cobb, Roxboro, undecided — "Once when I ate there, the hamburger steak was full of gristle. I don't like instant mashed potatoes. The lines are a big mess.

Rod Whitley, Hickory, chemistry — "I think it's fairly good on the whole. The price is hard to beat. The atmosphere is better than Lenoir and you can get served quicker.

Randall Jarrell Was A Very Special Man

By HUGH STEVENS

"I'm crazy about teaching. If I were a rich man I would pay money to teach."

So spoke Randall Jarrell, distinguished poet, outstanding teacher and living personification of the creative soul of a University, whose productive genius was extinguished by a hurtling mass of automotive steel and glass Thursday evening near this campus.
